Patsy O'Reilly lives in Flannigan's Flats, and you cannot call it a very pretentious place to bring up a girl. Michael O'Reilly, her daddy, is a poor contractor and has to be content to live there until he strikes it rich through his invention, an ore crusher. When fortune smiles upon him, he takes his family away from the place and moves to New York, where Patsy is placed in a fashionable school. A terror by nature and environment, the girl simply cannot overcome her tomboy manners even in her select circle, until her companions inform her she is not of their rank. Consequently, Patsy writes her parents who are traveling in Ireland to send her a family tree and a coat-of-arms.

The O'Reillys, who are just as eager as their darlin' to lift themselves up in the world, buy these necessary chattels from an impoverished family, Lord and Lady Windbourne, and when Patsy gets them she asumes a station with her school friends. Her parents buy an ancestral hall in New York and the Windbournes come over to pay their respects. As their antiques were auctioned off during their absence, they are greatly surprised to find them in the possession of the O'Reilleys. His lordship is his mother's boy and, naturally, attracts the little colleen, who, not knowing the ways of the world, soon becomes his fiancee.

However, Larry Burke, the real Lord Windbourne by the way, comes onto the scene, and being an English officer, it isn't long before he makes his personality felt with Patsy. Eventually, the so-called Windbournes are exposed as imposters, leaving the way clear for Larry to come into his inheritance. His property has been taken from him when a mere boy, but when it is finally restored he takes Patsy in his arms. Thus she gains hed dearest wish—a fine husband, an ancestral name and a coat-of-arms. Flannigan's Flats? They are pleasant memories indeed.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre will be pleased in the announcement that Bessie Love will return shortly in one of her characteristic pictures, "A Yankee Princess." The Vitagraph star has won her spurs as one of the most delightful interpreters of "glad" heroines on the screen and when she appears in her newest feature you will find her generating those measures of happiness and gladness which have endeared her to the vast army of picture enthusiasts throughout the country. Miss Love is peculiarly endowed by nature with an ephemeral, a whimsical personality, which, incidentally, stands out with compelling charm and appeal. Don't gather from this that she must always appear in sentimental stories. Far from it. Vitagraph has given her in "A Yankee Princess," a subject which takes her away from simulating gladness at times and gives her opportunity to appear as a mighty resourceful girl. It is a fanciful picture is this "A Yankee Princess"—fanciful in the sense that it takes the star to the heights after a sojourn in Poverty Row. The transition that she goes through from a ragamuffin to a belle of society is remarkably well emphasized and wil cause you to follow her career with fine interest.

"A Yankee Princess" presents a perfect blending of romance, pathos, humor, and dramatic interlude, and these elements combined into a harmonious whole make it one of the most enjoyable pictures that have come to our notice in many a day. Miss Love is simply charming in the title role, and others who give capable performances are Robert Gordon, George Pierce, Aggie Herring, J. Carlton Weatherby and Lydia Yeaman Titus. The feature is an adaptation of Bernard McConville's "Princess Patsy." David Smith is the director. "A Yankee Princess" will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

CATCH LINES

She lived in the slums, but that was no reason why she had to stay there indefinitely. See how she emerged and became a lady in "A Yankee Princess."

It takes the Irish to get ahead. Come to the ——— theatre and see how Patsy O'Reilly forged to the front, despite her lowly birth and environment. You have a treat in store for you in "A Yankee Princess."

She was a ragamuffin and something of a scrapper, too, but she could be a lady when the occasion demanded it. "A Yankee Princess" tells you all about it.

Bessie Love in a wonderfully appealing picture, centering about a girl who reaches the heights through her own resourcefulness.

Her name might be O'Reilly—well, it can be Windbourne too. The former gives her pluck while the latter—well, it presents her with a title.

A fine character study of a resourceful girl whose slogan may well be called "they shall not pass." She passed all of her neighborhood friends in reaching the top.

Lord Windbourne thought he could hold her up to ridicule, did he? Well, he didn't count on her Irish blood and what it means to fight. The girls at the finishing school thought the same way as "his lordship" and they, too, were frustrated.

"THUNDERBOLTS OF FATE"—EDWARD WARREN-HODKINSON

Strong Melodrama with Political Setting

"THUNDERBOLTS OF FATE" can be set down as a strong melodrama with a background of state politics. The governor is forced to marry an adventuress through a series of circumstances which, though he is innocent, lay him open to attack. His wife thereupon enters into an affair with another man and, when he tires of her, kills him. The crime is fastened on the brother of the girl the governor really loves. This precipitates a dramatic situation which is made the most of by the producers.

The picture was directed by Edward Warren. Though it must be confessed that some few of his scenes show rather inadequate management and that some few of his players are rather unnatural at times, the general impression left by the picture is favorable. A fault that can easily be remedied appears in the bad editing of the last few scenes. A few skillful strokes of the cutter and all will be well.

The featured players are House Peters and Anna Lehr, both of whom register effectively in the respective roles of the governor and the heroine. Corrine Uzzell is also good as the adventuress.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 6.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

"Thunderbolts of Fate," an Edward Warren production starring House Peters and Anna Lehr, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a story that makes prominent a murder mystery and is laid against a fascinating background of politics. The central character is Robert Wingfield, governor of the state, who is married to an adventuress who refuses to respect his position and who is openly seen with Howard Lennox, another parasite. When Lennox deserts her her love turns to a furious hate and she murders him. It so happens that right after she has committed the crime Clifford Brewster comes to the apartment to reprimand Lennox for his insults to his sister. And so he is accused of the crime. This precipitates a strong situation, particularly when it is considered that Brewster's sister, Eleanor, is the girl that Wingfield really loves.

How this tangle is straightened out caps "Thunderbolts of Fate" with a particularly effective climax, the full worth of which is realized by the two stars and their suppporting cast. Mr. Peters is an actor of great ability and his handling of the role of the state governor is a fine piece of work in every respect. Miss Lehr's histrionic ability and dark beauty have often attracted praise of a high order and when her work here is considered it is no wonder. Wilfred Lytell portrays the role of the brother, while Corinne Uzzell and Henry Sedley take the roles of the adventuress and the adventurer.

"Thunderbolts of Fate" was suggested by Harry S. Sheldon, written by Winifred Dunn and produced under the direction of Edward Warren.

THE STORY

Robert Wingfield, candidate for governor, is a born fighter. He hates petty graft as practiced by Senator Brewster and attacks him roundly in public. Brewster rages furious but can do nothing. His sons, Clifford and Edward, are inclined to be furious with him, but his daughter, Eleanor, takes a different attitude. For she has met Wingfield and has fallen very much in love. However, Wingfield, though he returns Eleanor's affections, has had the misfortune to propose to Adele Hampton, an adventuress, who, though she does not love him, threatens to bring suit for breach of promise unless he marry her. When he is elected Wingfield sees no other way out than to accede to her demands, as a refusal would bring on the suit with its consequent disgrace to his party and himself.

Adele refuses to respect her husband's position and carries on an affair with Howard Lennox, another parasite. Lennox meets Eleanor and is attracted to her. She looks on his various advances as insults and confides in her brother, Clifford. In a rage Clifford goes to Lennox's apartment and finds him dead. He is surprised standing over the body, accused of the murder, convicted and sentenced to death. All the pleas of his father and brother will not move the governor for the facts all point to Clifford's guilt.

Eleanor at last decides to appeal to him. He has gone to his hunting lodge and she follows. A rainstorm breaks and she is obliged to spend the night under the same roof with him. In the morning Brewster, his son Edward and Adele arrive. Adele accuses her husband of faithlessness, whereupon Brewster says that a guilty woman has no right to accuse. Misinterpreting his accusation Adele breaks down and confesses the murder because Lennox had deserted her She then drowns herself in the lake. All is then well for the true love of Wingfield and Eleanor.

PROGRAM READER

A situation of the utmost force forms the crux of the action of "Thunderbolts of Fate," the feature that will be presented here on ——— A murder has been committed. A young man has been accused of the crime and duly convicted and sentenced. The governor of the state may pardon him if he wills, but all the evidence points toward the young fellow's guilt. But this is not all. The doomed man is the brother of the girl the governor loves! Here indeed is a situation of the utmost force. It is dramatic of itself and is possessed of a two-fold power owing to the fact that it is approached in a most skilful manner. The solution of the story will not be given here, for it is carried through with such force and skill on the screen that it wouldn't do to spoil it all before hand. House Peters and Anna Lehr are the stars of the picture, and their work is of an unusually high order. Others in the cast are Wilfred Lytell, Corinne Uzzell and Henry Sedley, all players of ability. "Thunderbolts of Fate" was produced under the direction of Edward Warren and is the second of his productions to be released on the Hodkinson program.

SUGGESTIONS

Here the exhibitor is offered two stars and a mighty good situation to play up. House Peters and Anna Lehr are stars of competence and repute and while their names may not have the magic of some of the big box office players of the day, they at least stand for merit. The situation referred to is the one mentioned in the catch lines, program readers, etc., elsewhere on this page. This lies in the governor's predicament when he is called upon to pardon the brother of the girl he loves when all the facts point to his guilt. Naturally if you relate this situation it will create considerable interest. Build it up after the manner that the book publishers use in creating interest in the plot of a new work. Carry the action forward up to the climax by bold, dramatic sentences and then stop. This is a method of teaser advertising of the most approved type, and it hardly ever fails to awaken the reader's attention.

With this situation and the starring team you should be able to build up an effective advertisement. The same idea may be applied to lobby drawings or any special stunts you may employ to exploit the production.

CATCH LINES

This was no usual state problem. Here he, the governor, was asked to pardon the brother of the girl he loved when all the facts pointed to his being guilty of murder—murder in the first degree. What did he do? See "Thunderbolts of Fate."

She had no respect for her husband nor for his position, governor of the state. She received the attentions of Howard Lennox, a noted rounder in public places. It was the biggest scandal the state capital had ever known! See "Thunderbolts of Fate."

Subtitles Boost Entertaining Qualities; Easy to See

HALF of the entertaining properties of this picture are derived from the clever subtitles; the other half, from the situations. Whatever the source, however, there is one thing that is sure—the picture entertains. And that is the chief object sought.

The story is of the light sort, the kind that gives pleasure, without placing too much tax on the spectator's imagination, nor causing too much exertion. It is about a young millionaire and a spendthrift. His young wife, contrary to what one would expect from young girls, determines to teach her husband economy. She persuades the executor of her husband's estate to disappear temporarily. Left penniless, he is compelled to go to work. He develops good business ability and is able to land a deal and make some money. In the end the wife confesses and everything is happy.

PRESS NOTICE

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, William Fox's new stars, will grace the screen of the theatre on of week in a picture entitled "Married in Haste." The story, which was written expressly for these players by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley, is a romantic farce-comedy based upon frenzied finance as it concerns a honeymoon. Ray takes the role of a wealthy spendthrift to whom money is no object just so long as it is spent. As Sam Morgan he doesn't care a hip-hurrah how he disposes of his income, even though he may be newly married. His bride, Constance, comes from a different school, however—the school which teaches the value of money and how to save it. In other words, the girl marries Sam to reform him of his careless habit. How Constance tames her husband and makes him realize that money doesn't grow on trees, how he responds to her suggestion that simply because they are on a honeymoon is no reason why all the income should be spent are events which form one of the most rapid and amusing comedy pictures ever seen on the screen.

There is a note of mystery in the picture, incidently, which balances it and gives it some weight. The figure of Downer fits into the sustaining situations. As Sam's guardian he enters a conspiracy with Constance, to see to it that the gay blade spends only ten dollars and no more. Of course Sam takes it all good-naturedly, even when he is requested to leave the hotel. When he is compelled to go to work the thought strikes home that money is pretty valuable after all, particularly when you have a wife to support.

Mr. Ray and Miss Fair fit every requirement in the interpretation of their parts. The former is quite a comedian in a quiet sort of way and plays his scenes with admirable repression, while the latter enacts her part with wistful naivete and charm. The stars are supported by a well balanced cast, which includes such competent players as Thomas Jefferson, Don Bailey, and Robert Klein. The direction was in charge of Arthur Rosson, formerly connected with Allan Dwan, and he has given the picture a splendid production in every sense of the word.

THE STORY

Sam Morgan is a young man who doesn't know what to do with his money. Even when he becomes engaged to the sweetest girl in the world, Constance, he doesn't stop spending and he is well into his next year's allowance (an allowance because Sam has a guardian) when his wedding day arrives. Constance and the guardian, Downer, decide to teach the young man a lesson and they fix it so that there will be no money in the bank when Sam attempts to put his various checks through. The first catastrophe that Sam has ever experienced arrives in his young life when his check for ten thousand drawn through the hotel returns with the fatal N. G. written across it. And after a few more have followed the same course Sam decides that there is nothing to do but to go to work.

He gets a job with a first class herring establishment as janitor. And, because he has a smattering of Spanish, he gets in on a big business deal. A Spaniard with a ship load of herring but with no acquaintance of English attempts to sell his produce to the firm through a dishonest interpreter. Things don't go off at all well and the Spaniard leaves in a huff. Thereupon Sam gets an idea—an idea forced on him when he is fired from his janitor job.

He proceeds to play the gentleman once again and talk as if he had a mint of money. He agrees to buy the fish from the Spaniard and gives him a check. Before the check has returned to him he has received one for a larger amount from the herring house, part of which he gives the Spaniard when his other check returns. And then Constance and the guardian think that Sam has succeeded in the business world and return his fortune to him!

Sam Morgan and Constance Winwood marry with quickness and dispatch, but their financial obligations are so embarrassing that they have no time to repent at leisure.

PROGRAM READER

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, two new stars in the film firmament, will be seen here shortly in the Fox feature entitled "Married in Haste." This is considered an ideal subject for the stars by the producers, since it offers them thoroughly congenial roles to win your friendship. The play breathes the spirit of youth—irresponsible, irrepressible youth, and there is a wonderful charm about it, too, particularly found in the "give and take" plan of the protagonists. The plot is filled with breezy comedy and sustaining situations. Which gives it balance and a thing of weight with you. It was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley, two scenarists who have contributed a number of continuities to the screen. These photoplaywrights always conceive their subjects with plenty of imagination.

The patrons of the ——— theatre will surely react to the humor of "Married in Haste." The complications are rich in dramatic and comedy values. A rich young man with no idea of what a dollar means marries a girl who saves him from himself. But wait and see the picture—no mere woof of words can do it credit. "Married in Haste" is scheduled for exhibition here on and the management has secured a number of other pictures to complete the program.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a couple of new stars to exploit and you needn't be a bit backward in putting them forward. Any manager, if he's the least bit progressive, must assume that his audience demands a change, not only in plays but in personalities. Here is your opportunity to show an

Heart Interest Is Exceptional; War Romance

MISS CLAYTON has appeared in some pretty good pictures lately, but, in point of heart interest, not one of them equals, much less to say surpasses, "Pettigrew's Girl." It is full of that power that influences the deeper emotions, awakening compassion for the characters.

The picture, although a war romance, is free from scenes depicting actual warfare; in fact, the plot never leaves the boundaries of New York, wherein it developes. The closest it gets to the battlefield is only to imply that the hero goes to France, fights and returns.

The story in the main treats of the heroine, a pretty New York chorus girl, who works hard to land a millionaire for a husband; but when she succeeds in making him propose, she turns him down, because a plain-hearted soldier boy she has met by chance has taught her what real love is.

The picture should have a wide appeal.—Released March 23. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

PRESS NOTICE

An unusual Paramount feature comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Pettigrew's Girl," which has Ethel Clayton as its star. This is from a story by Dana Burnett which originally appeared in the columns of the Saturday Evening Post and which was adapted for the screen by Will M. Ritchey. The story is one which takes place during the war although there are no war scenes in the picture, the body of the action revolving around the romance of lonely Private Pettigrew, a southerner in an embarkation camp near New York, and Daisy Heath, a popular chorus girl.

Mr. Burnett has furnished a most interesting clash of characters in the love of these two. Pettigrew, long, lanky, awkward and ill-at-ease in the presence of women, and Daisy, sophisticated, with a wonderful knowledge of Broadway and its habits at her fingertips. The possibilities that come to mind when the paths of these two cross are manifold, and when the ability of the author is considered, it is almost superfluous to add that he has handled them with the utmost skill, deriving both humor and sympathy from them.

Miss Clayton plays the part of Daisy Heath with a vigor and depth of feeling that makes it stand out as probably the best characterization she has contributed to Paramount pictures. Monte Blue is the exact type for Pettigrew, and he takes the role with ease, getting the utmost from it. Another prominent part, that of Hugh Varick, the millionaire suitor for Daisy's hand. is played by Charles Gerard. Every one of Mr. Gerard's performances is a thing of the utmost skill and his Varick is one of the best of his many characterizations.

PROGRAM READER

Ethel Clayton, that thoroughly artistic emotional star of Paramount pictures, will shortly be seen at the ——— again in her latest production, entitled "Pettigrew's Girl." This is an adaptation from a Saturday Evening Post story written by Dana Burnett. Mr. Burnett has had a wide experience in the newspaper and magazine business and is something of a poet besides. And in the writing of his magazine stories he gets more of the soul of the poet into them than does the usual author of the day. At any rate, in "Pettigrew's Girl" he conceived a romance, the poetry of which is delightful from first reel to last. William Pettigrew is a soldier in a southern regiment at an embarkation camp near New York. He is lonely, homesick for a home he never had. And on his leave in New York he searches for some companionship—and finds it in the person of Daisy Heath, a popular chorus girl. Their love story makes for one of the most pleasing pieces of entertainment we have presented here in quite some time. Monte Blue appears as Pettigrew, while Charles Gerard carries the role of a millionaire suitor for the lady's hand.

THE STORY

William Pettigrew is a member of a southern regiment stationed at an embarkation camp near New York City. The tall, lanky chap is very lonely, for there is no one back home to whom he writes. On a leave of absence in the city he sees a picture of Daisy Heath, a popular chorus girl, in a shop window. He admires it greatly and buys it, and that night visits the theatre where she is playing. After the performance he takes a place at the stage door and awaits her coming. When Daisy sees Pettigrew she realizes in an instant that he is not the usual type of hanger-on, and a friendship soon springs up between them.

Daisy's most serious suitor of all is Hugh Varick, a millionaire, who showers her with attentions and offers of marriage. Previous to her meeting with Pettigrew she had led him on, as he wash considered the best catch a chorus girl could possibly make. Now, however, things take on a different complexion. Daisy volunteers to do an act at the camp and afterward she manages to see Pettigrew, even though the unfortunate soldier has been confined to kitchen police duty as a result of a quarrel over her photograph.

Then comes the time for the show-down. Daisy must decide. Varick says he is going west and asks her to go with him as his wife. And Pettigrew informs her he is soon to sail for France and asks her to wait for him. Daisy decides on the soldier. Moreover she makes it plain to Varick that she never really loved him—only considered him a catch. And Varick, waking up to himself, dons the uniform also and marches away.

SUGGESTIONS

"Pettigrew's Girl" presents no big advertising angle to the exhibitor—that is, no big sensational advertising angle, nothing you can seize on haphazardly and smear all over your advertising. Perhaps it is just as well a picture such as this comes along once in a while, for it does give you the opportunity to get in some dignified copy, copy whose essential quality is attractive atmosphere. Here in this picture you have a lonely, awkward southern soldier, alone in New York on leave (his regiment stationed nearby at an embarkation camp).. And on the other hand there is Daisy Heath, a much-courted chorus girl. Doesn't the crossing of these two characters unfold an opportunity to you? Doesn't it appear somewhat out of the ordinary? Doesn't it present a wonderful opportunity to paint homely and delightful word and sketch pictures, bringing out the prettiness of the romance, its humor and its pathos?

This is the big line to plug with respect to this picture and this line deserves to be developed fully as much as the sensational line that is developed on the more sensational pictures.

Aside from that you have Ethel Clayton, one of the popular stars of the day, supported by two able leading men. Monte Blue is a wonderful type for the part he plays and a good actor, while the worth of Charles Gerard does not need to be commented upon.

You might also mention that the story was taken from a Saturday Evening Post work of fiction by Dana Burnett.

appreciation of your audience's request. By adding the faces of Albert Ray and Elinor Fair to your gallery you will be making new friends as well as keeping the old ones. Variety is the spice of an exhibitor's scheme of film things just as it is in the entertainment plans of the opera impresario, the theatrical manager, and his fellows of the make-believe world.

Therefore get on this tack of playing up new personalities and show the crowd that you are keeping apace with the times. Albert Ray and Elinor Fair may be newcomers as far as stellar positions are concerned, but they are sufficiently versed in things dramatic to warrant a place on any progressive exhibitor's program. Mr. Ray established himself on the stage in "Buster Brown," playing the title role, and he followed up this play by appearing in the leading role in

Tears and Laughs and Under It All Good Propaganda

OUTSIDE of its merits as an entertainment, this picture should do much good as propaganda, by bringing before the people the abuses in penal institutions. This propaganda is not forcedly conveyed, but in a very subtle manner. In other words, the picture drives home its point while it entertains.

The theme, although not new, is presented interestingly under a new garb. The heroine, in order to expose the ill treatment of the women inmates of a prison, arranges with a judge to sentence her to a short term, so that she may personally investigate the conditions.

There are plenty of spots that will touch a spectator. The picture is somewhat sad, but it is enlivened by comedy touches, due mostly to the star's fine acting. On the whole, it is an offering above the average.—Released March 30.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

It is a good plan on all Dorothy Gish pictures to recall her great role in "Hearts of the World." As the Little Disturber in this production she created a large, new following, a following that is ready to see her again in a similar part if you present it in the right way. Of course it isn't right to liken her part here to the other in every respect. But the pep and personality that the star put in her interpretation of the Little Disturber she also puts in her characterization here.

Try to bring out some of this personality and pep in your advertising. This applies to all sorts of advertising. Not only in your newspaper copy, in which you should use actionful pictures of the star followed by peppery word arguments, but in lobby decorations such as special paintings and drawings. Bring out the Dorothy Gish personality. Go after it strong and you should pull good results.

Fans will like to know that Richard Barthelmess is in the leading male part. This young actor has had a lot of publicity in the best papers that reach the fans, and he has created his audience through his successive appearances in other Paramount pictures. Use his name as the main supporter in your advertising if your crowd follows pictures closely.

PRESS NOTICE

Dorothy Gish, still remembered and loved as the Little Disturber in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," returns to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Paramount picture entitled "Peppy Polly." Polly is another first cousin to the Little Disturber, as indeed, have all Miss Gish's Paramount characters have been. . That is, they contain that quality—"pep" is just the word that adequately describes it—that made the Little Disturber one of the most renowned characters the screen has ever known. And while Miss Gish is best in such a part she is by no means the same in each picture. Her versatility, her ability to create new bits of business and her happy faculty of injecting new life into a role, guard against any possibility of sameness that might otherwise intrude.

Polly is a young stenographer who obtains a job as a judge's secretary. Both she and the judge are much concerned about the corruptness of the officials at the House of Correction, and, to obtain evidence on them, Polly succeeds in committing a crime (sailing a brick through a jeweler's window to be exact) and in securing a three year sentence to the place. All goes well for a time, Polly gets a lot of evidence, incidentally at the expense of her own good comfort, and then suddenly the judge, the only possessor of the secret of Polly's innocence, dies!

And so Polly sees three long years ahead of her! How she gets out of the place makes a charming tale, enlivened by a plentiful supply of romance and played with a sincerity and zest by all the members of the cast who seem to become infected by the Gish personality.

THE STORY

Peppy Polly is a stenographer, but with nothing to steno about. Her last money she gives to a sick friend, and then goes hunting for a job. As luck would have it, she lands as secretary to Judge Monroe, a philanthropical gentleman, whose good heart even extends to a homeless monkey. This animal Polly doesn't take kindly to, but to the Judge and the work she does. Polly's friend is sent to the reformatory for attempting to steal and she manages to get word to her about the awful conditions there. Polly tells her story to the Judge and they decide that Polly shall enter the institution to investigate.

A brick thrown through a jeweler's window gets her a three year sentence, and straightway she begins to find out the awfulness of the place. She is beaten, spied on by stool pigeons of the matron and, for attempting to protect a frail little girl, is cast in solitary confinement. Dr. James Merritt, the young physician of the institution, succeeds in having her removed from this hole and put to scrubbing floors. The matron notices that the doctor has taken a fancy to Polly and plots his downfall by throwing them together as much as possible.

Polly's nerves are not improved when she learns that Judge Monroe has died. It looks pretty bad—this three year sentence of hers. When Merritt asks Polly to be his wife, the government agents put him under arrest for misinterpreting his words. Then Polly gets the bright idea of seeing the late judge's secretary and asking this person to corroborate her story. This done there is a pardon from the governor for her, and, after the marriage, Merritt and his peppy wife are put in charge of the institution.

CATCH LINES

Peppy Polly sought evidence on the corrupt officials of the House of Correction and broke a jeweler's window to get a three year sentence. Then the judge, the only man who knew the why and wherefore of her trick, died! A three year sentence loomed ahead of Polly and with no means of dodging it! How she finally did makes capital entertainment as shown in "Peppy Polly." Dorothy Gish, the Little Disturber of "Hearts of the Word" is the star.

She found cruelty and graft in a public institution and then found she couldn't get out!

The romance of a little law-breaker and a physician.

Could you live on the morning paper and watch a monkey eat delicacies without throwing a brick through a jeweler's window? Have a look at "Peppy Polly" and see the fun.

There's more pep in "Peppy Polly" than there is in five ordinary pictures. You'll go out in world feeling better after you've had a few shots of it. Take your injection at the —— theatre, where "Peppy Polly" is being shown.

PROGRAM READER

Dorothy Gish, the delightful Little Disturber of Griffith's great picture "Hearts of the World," has a similar role in her next Paramount picture "Peppy Polly" shortly to be seen here. Polly is a little girl who doesn't like all the wrong there is in the world and when she gets a job as a judge's stenographer determines to see that the particular wrong as practiced by the officials of the House of Correction for Girls is remedied. They hatch a plan and the outcome of it is that Polly throws a brick through a jeweler's window and gets a three year sentence! And then the judge dies and her secret is buried with him! We feel that our patrons will find more than usual enjoyment in watching the trials of Polly, how she gives up in despair and then finds a way out after all. The role is full of humor, of pathos and, last but not least, of "pep." It is strangely akin to the Little Disturber part, and yet is quite different. Miss Gish's enthusiasm spreads to the rest of the cast, which includes Richard Barthelmess, Edward Peil, Emily Chichester, Kate Toncray and Josephine Crowell.

"MARRIED IN HASTE"

"Peck's Bad Boy." He has also appeared in a number of vaudeville sketches. Miss Fair made her debut in pictures with William Farnum about three years ago. Both of these players bring youth and charm to the screen, and if their work in "Married in Haste" is any criterion, it will not be long before you'll be getting results in the way of box office receipts.

If you cater to a fan crowd it would be advisable to play up the director, Arthur Rosson, inasmuch as he has had a long and varied experience in producing pictures. His affiliation with Allan Dwan as assistant director entitles him to considerable recognition as a man who knows what to do with a scenario when he gets it. The idea behind "Married in Haste" is elaborated into a splendid pictureplay under his skillful guidance. Mention might be made of Thomas Jefferson, than whom there is no better character actor on the screen today, who appears in the support of the stars. He, undoubtedly, has a following all his own.

"THE UNKNOWN LOVE"—PATHE

War and Love Twined in Perret's Production

A ROMANCE forms the basis of the story of "The Unknown Love," but the greater part of the action dwells on actual warfare and its gruesome features. Under conditions such as existed before November 11 it would no doubt fit very well; the question for the exhibitor to decide now is whether the passing months have affected the ability of this type of picture to hold his audiences.

There are some points in the picture that require a powerful stretch of the imagination. In particular the incident which shows the commander of a war vessel headed for France taking the heroine abroad.—Released April 27.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Doris Parker	Dolores Cassinelli
Harry Townsend	E. K. Lincoln
John Parker	W. Cook
Capt. Jack Tims	Robt. Elliott
Townsend's Pal	Bradley Barker

Written, directed and presented by Leonce Perret.

THE STORY

Doris Parker, daughter of a retired American sea captain, adopts Harry Townsend, a fighting soldier she has never seen as her "godson." He is glad to hear from someone in the states as no letter had ever come to him before, but, in answer to her request for a photograph, he sends one of his chum's, not having any of himself. When Doris hears that he has been severely wounded she begs Captain Jack Tims, one of her admirer's, to smuggle her aboard his transport and take her to France. Violating all Navy regulations Tims complies with her request. On the way over the ship is attacked and Tims is killed. Doris watches his burial at sea with sincere grief.

In France Doris hurries to Townsend's bedside but he is so seriously wounded that his face is bound up and she is unable to get a good glimpse of him. However, it is due to her careful nursing that his health is restored. When at last she sees his face she finds it not the one of the photograph. But their unknown love is real, nevertheless. It was not the photograph that awakened the love in Doris' heart, but the letters he wrote.

Back in the United States Townsend receives his honorable discharge from the army and he and Doris are married. Shortly afterwards come the glad tidings of peace when the whole country, the whole world in fact, goes mad with the joy of it. And then six years later when Townsend's little boy asks him about the stars in the skies the father makes reply that each one of them represents a soul flown from the battle field. And in the little boy's mind's eye the myriad stars suddenly take the form of the words "Stars of Glory."

PRESS NOTICE

The Pathe Special feature, "The Unknown Love," co-starring E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This picture takes up one of the most touching and pathetic phases of the war, and through the guiding mind of the director, Leonce Perret, it is presented in splendid dramatic form. Doris Parker, the American girl in the case, becomes godmother to a soldier in the trenches—a man she has never seen. He is Harry Townsend, a man of refinement and breeding who has no friends back home to hear from. When he receives Doris' letter he is inspired to write her a beautiful acknowledgment and this causes in Doris a great and unknown love.

It may be seen that this is the beginning of a most unusual sort of romance. Its development forms the body of the picture and its course introduces situations as thoroughly original and unique as the beginning. The film is not loaded with battle scenes, although some of these are introduced to provide the necessary effects. However, the main portion of the action deals with the working out of this romance and in this respect "The Unknown Love" is one of the most remarkable pictures ever shown at the ——— theatre.

Lincoln makes a masterful figure of the soldier while Miss Cassinelli plays the role of the girl with a charm that is irresistible. Others who appear in prominent roles in the production are W. Cook, Robert Elliott and Bradley Barker. Mr. Perret, a French director, who came to America to find a wider field for his art, also wrote the story. His work shows to advantage in every scene.

CATCH LINES

Can letters alone create a romance—can two people write and find that they love each other without ever seeing one another?—See "The Unknown Love"—it develops this romance in a strange and beautiful manner.

The story of an unknown love that became a known love.

She wrote for his photograph and he sent her the likeness of his pal—but she fell in love with his letters not with the photograph, and when she saw him she knew he was the man! See "The Unknown Love."

Why did Doris Parker brave the dangers of the ocean in mid-war time—why did she violate the laws of the United States Navy to get to France? See "The Unknown Love."

A romance with the Great War as a background—an unusual romance—one that begins before the principals have met!

Did you become godmother to a soldier you had never seen during the war? Many women did. Doris Parker in "The Unknown Love" did—see what this strange relationship developed into in this special feature now at the ——— theatre.

PROGRAM READER

There were many women who during the war became godmothers to friendless men in the army. This was a practice first adopted in France and England and which was eagerly taken up by the women of America when the United States entered into things. Doris Parker was one of these women. Her friends urged her to write to a man named Harry Townsend, a man they knew was friendless from the information contained in their own letters from the front. And so Doris sat down and wrote—just a few cheery words from home! And the answer to her letter—the answer from Harry Townsend—awoke within her a great unknown love. How this unknown love became a known love will be shown in the Pathe special feature "The Unknown Love" which will shortly be seen at this theatre. It deals with one of the most interesting phases of the war and is superbly developed by the author and director, Leonce Perret. Mr. Perret gave the people of the country the great patriotic film, "Lafayette, We Come," and the stars of that picture, E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli, will also be seen in "The Unknown Love." It is a picture filled with exciting incident and handled in a dramatic manner from first to last. It will be shown here ———.

SUGGESTIONS

In the Program Reader elsewhere on this page you will find your best advertising angle on this feature. This, of course, is an admission that it is a war picture, but don't let that scare you. You will note that the angle taken deals with the girl at home, rather than with the man in the trenches. That is important, very important. And this is an original situation. One like it hasn't been offered before on the screen. This means a lot. And you will be able to excite a good deal of curiosity if you state the first facts in the case, the fact that the girl back home became the godmother of a soldier in the trenches of France without ever having seen him. The advertising possibilities in this situation are obvious, so go the limit on this angle. It is probably the best in the entire picture for advertising purposes.

Outside of this angle you have the stars, E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli. Both of them were extensively advertised in the special production, "Lafayette, We Come," so recall their names to your patrons. Also mention the producer, Leonce Perret. He is a French director and one of his biggest productions made here was the one in which the stars appeared previously. All three received considerable publicity out of this.

If you think it advisable you might also mention that the picture contains views of the crowds celebrating the tidings of peace in New York City.

"YANKEE PRINCESS"

From the days that Bessie Love appeared opposite William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks just a few short years ago, her histrionism has expanded to such a degree that you need no reminded of the esteem in which she is regarded by the screen-going public. Indeed, the star has gained a following of no inconsiderable size. As her managers have furnished her a most agreeable subject in "A Yankee Princess," we have no scruples in calling it the best picture she has done for Vitagraph. True it is that her reputation is founded upon her ability to interpret "glad" roles, but this feature is not as sentimental as some in which she has appeared, hence gladness is mixed with sterner stuff, and the subject is better as a result.

Therefore feature the story as just a little bit different. It being an Irish tale you have all sorts of leads to make it conspicuous in your advertising. First off you have the national color of Ireland to decorate the lobby—and you can give souvenirs to the ladies in the shape of inexpensive shamrocks. There is great atmosphere in an Irish picture and wonderful advertising posibilities. As regards the story we would pay special attention to the heroine's role. The catch lines were written with this idea in mind.

"THE EXQUISITE THIEF"—UNIVERSAL

Star Shows Unusual Talent; Highly Artistic

SINCE the release of "The Brazen Beauty," the first picture that revealed the possibilities that lay in Priscilla Dean, each new contribution has strengthened the confidence of those who thought she was a real comer; each new production has been better than the last one.

In the review of "The Wicked Darling," the suggestion was made to you to keep an eye on offerings featuring this new find. That that recommendation was neither overoptimistic nor overrated is evidenced from the results obtained in "The Exquisite Thief," a picture of the crook type. Here again she shows unquestionable skill. The picture is really the result of a strong and intelligent combination of star, director, author. The suspense, instead of being worked up gradually, starting somewhere from the middle of the picture, is in full force right from the beginning and is kept up all the way through to the last scene. The last part of it is particularly thrilling; the rapid twists it takes, which place the heroine in and out of danger alternately, excite the emotions to a high pitch, but it ends in the way the spectator would wish, leaving a pleasant impression behind.

It is needless to say that the production is highly artistic from every angle. It seems that Director Browning has staked his all to produce a picture that is distinctive, and he has succeeded. Miss Dean's acting also hardly needs any praise; it is different than that of any other screen actress.

"The Exquisite Thief" may unhesitatingly be rated as a first class production and the best one that ever featured Priscilla Dean.—Released April 28.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Blue Jean Billie	Priscilla Dean
Algernon P. Smythe	Thurston Hall
Shaver Michael	Sam De Grasse
Detective Wood	Milton Ross
Muriel Vanderflip	Jean Calhoun

By Charles W. Tyler.
Scenario by Harvey Gates.
Directed by Tod Browning.

PRESS NOTICE

Priscilla Dean, the popular Universal star, will be seen at the —— theatre on —— of —— week in her latest production entitled "The Exquisite Thief." Miss Dean certainly fulfills the requirements of the title role and plays the part with all the youthful energy that is a distinct quality in every one of her characterizations. In the short space of a year Miss Dean has risen to a position enviable indeed in the ranks of stars. Many of her previous pictures have been crook plays and "The Exquisite Thief," adapted from a story appearing in Detective Stories, ranks with the best of these subjects.

Mystery, suspense and romance are rife throughout the production. There is, indeed, a surprise in every turn of the story. Miss Dean carries, the part of Blue Jean Billie, among the light-fingered sisterhood, the queen of them all. At the opening of the picture she is preparing to embark on a particularly hazardous undertaking. The Vanderflips are giving a reception to announce their daughter's engagement to Algernon P. Smythe, scion of an aristocratic English family, or at least such he calls himself.

Who Algernon P. Smythe really is, how Billie makes her getaway, not only with the jewels, but with the prospective bridegroom as well, are events which make "The Exquisite Thief" the exquisite photoplay it is. The story was adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates and produced under the direction of Tod Browning while Thurston Hall, Sam De Grasse, J. Milton Ross and Jean Calhoun take other important parts.

THE STORY

Blue Jean Billie is just about the cleverest crook of them all. In all her expeditions of crime she manages to elude the police. And the wonder of it is that her fellow crooks little know that it is she who is perpetrating the most sensational jewel holdups in the history of the police department. One evening Billie makes ready to attend a social event given by the Vanderflips to announce the engagement of their daughter to a well known Englishman, Algernon P. Smythe. Her companion on the expedition is Shaver Michael, who assumes the role of a chauffeur and waits outside while Billie mingles with the guests.

Headquarters have expected her there and have stationed a man to keep a watchful eye on the jewels. But he is so busy watching them that he doesn't notice Billie when she steals into the room, holds him up at the point of a gun and quickly slips the handcuffs on him. She seizes the loot and makes a hasty departure to the car where Shaver is ready to speed away. Smythe and the released detective give pursuit with the police in another car. Shaver's car overturns and he and Billie force Smythe to take them in and elude the police.

They make Smythe a prisoner, and Shaver notices with alarm that Billie is falling in love with him. Shaver is finally captured by the police. Smythe proposes to Billie and she scarce believing her ears, accepts him and decides to reform. But the jewels are still in her possession and the detectives are watching. One of them finally tells her that Smythe is none other than a well known international crook. However, Smythe returns to the police the jewels in a clever manner and saves both himself and his wife from further embarrassment.

CATCH LINES

She went to the reception to steal the jewels—she did, and she stole the bridegroom too! See Priscilla Dean in "The Exquisite Thief."

Another crook picture with Priscilla Dean as the star—'nuff said.

A surprise in every scene—a mystery in every turn—a delightful romance running through it all—see "The Exquisite Thief."

The wonderful star of "The Wildcat of Paris" and "The Silk Lined Burglar" in still another fine Universal attraction.

She stole the jewels from the bridegroom and the bridegroom from the bride. See "The Exquisite Thief."

"The Exquisite Thief" is an exquisite picture with an exquisite star—Priscilla Dean.

Suspense is multiplied with each succeeding foot of film.

She was such a good thief that she even fooled other thieves.

PROGRAM READER

Priscilla Dean, the bright young Universal star, returns again to this theatre on —— in her latest production "The Exquisite Thief." This is another crook play adapted from the story by Charles W. Tyler which appeared in Detective Stories under the title of "Raggedy Ann." Miss Dean's latest picture, "The Silk Lined Burglar," was also of the crook type. It appears that in subjects of this nature she appears to her best advantage. However, these subjects are as unlike each other as night from day. The stories are original and, if comparisons must be made, it can only be said that each one of them has plentiful supplies of mystery, suspense and romance. "The Silk Lined Burglar" introduces the star as Blue Jean Billie, one of the cleverest of the crooks that ever baffled a police department. She attends a reception with the idea of stealing the jewels and makes off with the bridegroom as well! Rather startling. And then—but all the rest remains for the picture itself to tell. Miss Dean is supported by Thurston Hall, Sam De Grasse, Jean Calhoun and Milton Ross.

SUGGESTIONS

You can go the limit here for you have a star with a reputation for big and unusual things, and a fine mystery-suspense picture to back up any big advertising you do. Feature the star prominently. She has come wonderfully to the fore in the recent months. Universal has given her such good productions and she has been so good in them that she has fairly swept onward. In advertising her mention some of her other successes that you have played and recall the fact that "The Exquisite Thief" is another crook play-mystery, full of suspense and—different.

Look over the catch lines printed elsewhere on the page and see how they would suit. You

"THE TEST OF HONOR"—PARAMOUNT

John Barrymore—Enough Said—Even in Dramatic Role

THIS is the first time that John Barrymore has chosen to make a screen appearance in a dramatic role. That he scores successfully need hardly be said. There need never have been a shade of doubt about the player who made " Peter Ibbetson," " The Copperhead " and other stage dramas so memorable.

On the screen he seems to be much more at home in the serious melodrama than he was in the farce comedy. Given continued good stories we believe he will probably make a still better box office card.

" The Test of Honor " is a heavy melodrama, bordering on the tragic. It deals with marriage infidelity, but not in an offensive manner. The story is interestingly developed and holds the spectator in suspense.—Released April 6.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Martin Wingrave	John Barrymore
Juliet Hollis	Constance Binney
Ruth Curtis	Marcia Manon
George Lumley	Robert Schable
Mr. Curtis	J. W. Johnson
Judge Ferris	Bigelow Cooper
Lovell	Ned Hay
Mrs. Farrell	Alma Aiken
Zeke	Fred Miller

By E. Phillips Oppenheim.
Scenario by Eve Unsell.
Directed by John S. Robertson.

PROGRAM READER

The name of Barrymore has always implied the utmost in acting art. John, Ethel and Lionel of the present generation are three of the acknowledged stars of the stage today. So when we have the opportunity of offering one of the Barrymores in a picture, we can not but help feeling a sort of pride. It is John Barrymore this time and the picture is his latest Paramount production entitled " The Test of Honor." Mr. Barrymore has confined himself to comedy heretofore when making his appearance on the screen and this is somewhat peculiar as on the stage he has made a record as probably the greatest young dramatic actor of his day. Our patrons then will see him in a thoroughly congenial role when " The Test of Honor " comes here on ———. It is an adaptation from a story entitled " The Malefactor," by E. Phillips Oppenheim and was produced under the direction of John S. Robertson. Among those who appear in support of Mr. Barrymore are Marcia Manon, Constance Binney and Robert Schalbe. We consider " The Test of Honor " an exceptional drama in every sense of the word and we feel confident that you will hold the same opinion after witnessing here with the excellent presentation that we are planning for it.

PRESS NOTICE

John Barrymore, whose screen efforts have hitherto been confined to comedy roles, comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— in his latest Paramount picture, " The Test of Honor," which is a subject of a wholly dramatic nature. And drama is Mr. Barrymore's forte, every bit as much as comedy. For the last two seasons he has been winning laurels for himself by his excellent playing in " Peter Ibbetson," and he is shortly to appear in New York in a new play, also of dramatic nature. It is only natural then that the serious Barrymore of the screen should be just as competent and skilled a person as the humorous Barrymore. Such is indeed the case.

" The Test of Honor " is one of the most dramatic of all features that have been exhibited at the ——— theatre. It tells the wonderful story of a man's love for a woman, tied to a husband she loathes. When he is injured she refuses to help him. For his death the man of honor is blamed and committed to prison for seven long years. All this time the perfidy of the wife stings him through and through so that when he is finaly released he determines upon a revenge. How the story then develops is left for the screen to tell.

Mr. Barrymore receives support of a superior order from Marcia Manon as the faithless woman, from Constance Binney as the girl who finally wins the love of the man of honor, and from J. W. Johnston, Bigelow Cooper and Robert Schable in other parts of prominence. " The Test of Honor " is based on a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim entitled " The Malefactor," and was produced under the direction of John Robertson.

THE STORY

Martin Wingrave, a Virginian of wealth, madly loves Ruth Curtis, the wife of a clubman whom she despises. George Lumley, a medical student, is infatuated with her, but she prefers Wingrave. At a country clubhouse, Wingrave and Ruth are discovered by the jealous husband, who attacks Wingrave after he had kissed Ruth. Wingrave knocks him down and Curtis falls insensible. Lumley begs Ruth to give her husband some wine to stimulate heart action, but seeing a chance to get rid of him, she withholds the wine and he dies. At the inquest, the facts of the fight are divulged and as Ruth fails to reveal the truth, Wingrave is sent to prison for seven years for manslaughter. When he is discharged, he decides to avenge himself upon Ruth, and she, having married meanwhile, consents to introduce him into her set, on condition that he destroy the love letters she had written to him. Judge Ferris, her new husband, is in ignorance of his wife's past, and Wingrave soon rouses his jealousy. Juliet Hollis, a young girl who secretly loves Wingrave, in turn awakens resentment toward her in Ruth's bosom, and the latter contrives to get Wingrave into a compromising position, but without causing Juliet to give up her hopes of ultimately winning Wingrave's love. The truth is finally revealed to Judge Ferris by Lumley and Wingrave recognized as a martyr. Juliet's faith in his honesty is rewarded by Wingrave, who, after burning Ruth's letters and advising her to return to her husband, takes Juliet in his arms.

CATCH LINES

" Ruth Curtis had a husband whom she despised and so she turned to Martin Wingrave and madly made love to him. And when her husband found them together in the club parlor there was a scene. Wingrave struck down the husband. The doctor said that he would recover if the stimulant he left were administered. But the wife let him die."

" She let her husband die and the man she claimed to love go to prison for the deed. And when he came out did he seize her white throat in revenge or allow her own scheme to kill him undo her?"

" A story of splendid honor and a beautiful faith—and a most amazing siren."

" Ruth Curtis swore she hated her husband and loved this man. She saw him strike Curtis down and let her husband die. Then she sent the man to prison by denying him. And yet that is only the start of this amazing story."

" A woman betrayed him, but honor forbade him to speak. Seven years in prison and he came forth to find the woman again. But honor ruled and cleverness alone sent the woman to the fate she deserved and the man to the arms of the girl who knew the real love."

SUGGESTIONS

The name of Barrymore is known from coast to coast. There are three people giving it just about the best publicity and high standard of merit that any three could possibly give a name. These three are John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore. It is a safe bet that just about every one in the country of average intelligence knows these three stand for the best on the stage and of late for the best on the screen. We think the name of John Barrymore is by all odds the best selling point you have with regard to " The Test of Honor," and this is said when the merit of the story, the popularity of the author, and the advertising angles of the plot are all considered.

Up with the name of the star then, and don't let any one have any doubt about who he is. Follow along with the name of the author, E. Phillips Oppenheim, one of the popular authors of his time. And then develop your advertising angles as you will. But you've done a large per cent. of the work when you've said Barrymore in big letters and followed after with Oppenheim. It's a good combination, this.

A variety of exploitations will be found in the April twelfth issue of Motion Picture News in which a Special Service Section on " The Test of Honor " was published.

Clip all the cartoons from now until you show the picture that have Bolshevism themes. Make a lobby display of these. You might also surround them with the latest stories regarding Bolshevism. Such stuff is in the paper every day.

If you have electric signs use red lights in announcing the title. If you have no electrics use red letters.

Use red in your newspaper advertising if it is possible to do so.

Use a sandwich man dressed as the popular conception of a Bolshevik to parade the streets advertising the show.

An unique advertising stunt might be to announce that any Bolshevist in town will be admited to your house free of charge on the condition that he stand up in front afterwards and declare himself.

Don't let the people think you're spiking Socialism, because Socialism is not Bolshevism, and there are many Socialists in the United States. Be sure of this.

"GETTING MARY MARRIED"—SELECT

Marion Davies Gets Good Story; Excellent Picture

FOR once Miss Marion Davies has been furnished with a decent story. The result of this kind act is not only an excellent picture—it is a conclusive proof that this player can act; it proves beyond doubt that she is good screen material; and if the proper stories be given her—stories which, through her as the medium, should influence the spectator's pleasurable emotions, instead of only giving her a chance to walk around, she may yet become an asset to those who hold the contract for her pictures.

The story has been written by John Emerson and Anita Loos, so it is needless to state that there is lots of humor in the subtitles as well as in several of the situations. Credit is also due to Director Allan Dwan for the production end, which is very well handled.

The picture is of the light sort, and should appeal chiefly to high class audiences.—Length, 5 reels.
—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Mary	Marion Davies
James Winthrop, Jr.	Norman Kerry
Ted Barnacle	Matt Moore
Amos Bussard	Frederick Burton
Mrs. Bussard	Amelia Summerville
Matilda Bussard	Constance Beaumar
John Bussard	Elmer Grandin

By John Emerson and Anita Loos. Directed by Allan Dwan. Photographed by Lyman Broening.

CATCH LINES

Marion Davies in a picture written by John Emerson and Anita Loos and directed by Allan Dwan! Some combination! See "Getting Mary Married"; you'll enjoy it.

Because he was a snob he held his nose in the air, and because his nose was of fairly good size he couldn't see over it to watch his step and so one day he fell down an elevator shaft and all was over for him! Tragic as this episode may appear in cold type it forms the beginning of one of the cleverest little comedies we've ever presented. It's called "Getting Mary Married," and it's coming to the ——— next ———.

She had to live with a family of snobs for a year to win her legacy. But she couldn't stick it out, no human being could! And when she married the snobs eagerly gathered around to see what the legacy was. It proved to be—well, take a peep at it in "Getting Mary Married."

She's a pretty girl and a pretty actress is Marion Davies, and "Getting Mary Married" is by all odds her finest picture. It was produced under the direction of Allan Dwan from a story by John Emerson and Anita Loos, those two writers who helped to make Douglas Fairbanks famous. See it or you'll miss a treat.

PRESS NOTICE

"Getting Mary Married," a Select picture, with Marion Davies as the star, will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Special interest is attached to this, the latest of the pretty actress's pictures, due to the fact that it was directed by Allan Dwan, one of the most expert men in his line of the picture art. Miss Davies, under his direction, proves that she has personality and ability besides an unusually pretty face. Her portrayal of the role of Mary, the much despised step-daughter of an old aristocrat, is one of the best characterizations she has ever contributed to the screen. She puts an immense amount of zest in the role and her various scenes form one long procession of delight.

The picture is a comedy-drama written by two of the ablest authors in this line, namely, John Emerson and Anita Loos. This writing team came into the ascendancy when they prepared many of Douglas Fairbanks' screen vehicles. Later Ernest Truex and Shirley Mason, co-stars in Paramount pictures, appear in a brace of their stories under Mr. Emerson's direction. The authors have contrived a vehicle of excellent worth with which to exploit Miss Davies' talents and at the same time have molded a story full of surprises and comedy situations of an unusual order. This all star writing and directing team certainly proves its worth again.

Miss Davies has as her leading man Norman Kerry, an actor of looks and ability, while others who appear are Matt Moore, Frederick Burton, Amelia Summerville, Constance Beaumar, and Elmer Grandin.

THE STORY

Mary, the step-daughter of the too-aristocratic John Bussard, is kept a prisoner by him because he is afraid she will not know how to conduct herself in the best of society. Every natural, girlish impulse that comes to Mary's pretty surface is branded as a vulgarity by the particular Bussard. One day this gentleman passes violently into the beyond because he held his nose so high he couldn't see over it and watch his step. According to the terms of his will, Mary must live with Bussard's brother's family in Boston for a full year—and not marry within that time—in order to inherit his estate. Mary doesn't care much about this inheritancme until a poor widow comes to her and says that her stepfather swindled her. She then determines to fulfill the terms of the will that she may repay her.

The Bussards of Boston are even more snobbish than the defunct John. Of course they don't take to Mary, and they try to make things as disagreeable for her as possible so that she will leave, and, in leaving, forfeit her legacy. But Mary sticks it out and even steals the man Matilda Bussard thought was hers. He is Jimmy Winthrop, wealthy and handsome, and he courts Mary in a distinctly individual fashion. But, though she loves him, she tells him she must wait the year out for the widow's sake. But here Jimmy comes to the rescue and, manipulating the market, boosts the widow's stock sky high. This done, he and Mary are married—the legacy Mary leaves behind.

And the legacy the Bussards receive amounts to slightly over one dollar, with a war savings stamp thrown in for good measure.

PROGRAM READER

Marion Davies, the beautiful star of Select Pictures, will shortly be seen again here in her latest production entitled "Getting Mary Married." It may safely be said that this feature is decidedly the best of all her efforts before the camera. And photoplay followers will easily recognize the truth of this statement when it is added that it was produced under the direction of Allan Dwan from a scenario by John Emerson and Anita Loos. These two writers need no introduction to our audiences. The majority of Douglas Fairbanks' first successes were prepared by them and of recent date they made a new record by the pictures they provided for Ernest Truex and Shirley Mason, the Paramount co-stars. As for Allan Dwan, a picture bearing his name is practically assured of success even before it ever reaches the public. He is known as a director who has never "missed fire" in all his years of producing. "Getting Mary Married" is a comedy-drama with a number of refreshingly original situations and unusual backgrounds. Miss Davies is supported by a cast of players in which Norman Kerry, Matt Moore, Frederick Burton, Amelia Summerville, Constance Beaumar and Elmer Grandin are prominent.

SUGGESTIONS

It certainly looks as if the exhibitor had a good bet in this Marion Davies picture. Forget all about her other pictures, no matter how good they have been and consider the talent responsible for this one. In the first place, it was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos, authors who need no introduction to the exhibitor. Their work with Douglas Fairbanks has brought them nation-wide attention and publicity and more recently the two pictures they prepared for Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex have also attracted favorable comment. They are noted for their writing of comedy-drama. And "Getting Mary Married" is a comedy-drama—an unusual one.

In the second place, there is Allan Dwan. Mr. Dwan has had much the same career as the authors. His first prominence came when he produced Fairbanks' pictures and after that he followed along with some good stuff without any stars. His hand is seen throughout "Getting Mary Married," for he has brought out the best in ALL his players, a best that, in some instances no one ever suspected was there.

With this tri-star combination at work on the producing end of the picture you have a line of favorites to advertise that are almost as well known as the best of the stars. Use their names frequently in all publicity and don't fail to mention them in the advertising.

In the star you have one of the prettiest actresses on the screen, whose ability in the picture here soars to unusual heights. Don't forget the immense amount of publicity that she gets in the Hearst papers. Her picture and her name get in papers in position that money could not buy for any other player on the screen. Play her up big.

"EXQUISITE THIEF"

might make capital of the fact that Billie (the crook) goes to the engagement reception to steal the jewels and makes off with the bridegroom as well. This will lend a little lightness to the advertisement and at the same time give an idea of the unusualness and mysterious quality of the plot. You can follow after this with some good suspense copy to get the reader in the spirit of the thing again.

Marion Davies came under the direction of Allan Dwan in "Getting Mary Married" with the most favorable results

"SPEEDY MEADE"—GOLDWYN

Story of Pleasing Sort; Player's Personality Helps

ONCE before it was remarked through these reviews that Louis Bennison possesses a pleasing personality, therefore he should make many friends among picture goers; and if one is to judge from the reports coming in, he is fast gaining popularity. Of course, to this he has been helped greatly by the sort of stories he has been given to work with. They have all been of the sort that portray human nature at its best through the hero. Such stories never fail to win the good will of the spectator and cinch a player's popularity.

" Speedy Meade " has been based on a story of the same pleasing sort, the hero being given the same human part. Suspense and thrills have been embodied in many of the situations.—Released March 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Speedy Meade	Louis Bennison
Mary Dillman	Katherine MacDonald
Robert Bridges	Neil Moran
Alice Hall	Claire Adams
Bud Lester	Norman Jefferies
Henry Dillman	J. W. Johnston
Buck Lennon	Ed. Roseman
Mrs. Buck Lennon	Ricca Allen
Cal Merchant	William Bailey

Written and Directed by Ira M. Lowry.
Photographed by David Calcagni.

CATCH LINES

His duty directed that he arrest the father of the girl he loved—could he make this sacrifice? See Louis Bennison in " Speedy Meade."

It didn't take many pictures to put Louis Bennison on the photoplay map. See his latest, " Speedy Meade," and you'll know why he's a star of national renown already.

A western photoplay with a punch that every spectator will feel.

They sent the body of his deputy back to him riddled with bullets! He accepted the fateful challenge and never gave up until every one of them was back of the bars—see Louis Bennison in " Speedy Meade," his latest Betzwood-Goldwyn production.

Little did this gang of cutthroats know that the down-and-out drunkard who served them drink was in reality the most respected man in the Federal Service! They found it out at last, but they found out too late—see " Speedy Meade."

PRESS NOTICE

Once again Louis Bennison shows himself a true son of the West. This time it is in "Speedy Meade," newest in his series of Betzwood productions, that the smiling cowboy star exudes his breezy charm and infectious humor, that have established him as one of the most popular screen stars of the day. In " Speedy Meade," which comes to the ——— theatre, beginning ———.

Bennison has the role of Speedy Meade, a Texas ranger famed for his recklessness and ability to finish any job he starts. He is assigned the task of rounding up a band of cattle thieves on the border. Bidding goodbye to his sweetheart, Mary Dillman, a student in a country convent school, Meade sets out on his man's-size task. While trailing the outfit Speedy is shocked to learn that the brains of the robber band is Henry Dillman, father of his sweetheart. A still greater shock comes to Meade when he comes across Mary in a lonely road near the scene of the crooks' operations in the dead of night. Her father has turned her out of the house. Speedy enlists her aid for the battles he knows must come with the cattle thieves.

How this slip of a girl helps her lion-hearted sweetheart in bringing to bay one desperate plunderer after another brings a series of thrills and a smashing climax.

THE STORY

Speedy Meade, a Federal Sleuth, is entrusted with the task of rounding up a gang of cattle rustlers and marauders, operating on the border ranches. Thinking the job a small one he at first sends his assistant after the bad men. But later his dead body is found riddled with bullets. Vowing vengeance, Speedy bids goodbye to his sweetheart, Mary Dillman, and sets out on the trail himself. He soon discovers that the gang is notorious for its activities all along the border and that he has encountered some of them before in previous activities. Fearing lest they recognize him he assumes the atitude of a drunkard and, supposedly for the few odd drinks he gets, he secures a job in the saloon where the gang makes its headquarters. In this position he learns much valuable information.

Assuming another disguise (that of an old man) he is astonished to learn that Henry Dillman, supposedly a respected rancher, is really the brains of the gang. This makes the task all the harder as Dillman is the father of the girl he loves. In his round of spying trips Meade is noticed by the bad element and it is only after a furious fight that he makes his escape from several of the renegades. Meade finally learns of the spot where the robbers are to congregate and makes his way there under cover of darkness. He is surprised by Mary, who says that her father ordered her from the house when she protested against his activities.

Spurred on by this knowledge Speedy surprises the whole band and holds it up. But in endeavoring to protect the girl he is caught off his guard and attacked. Another fight ensues before he has them under control. His duty done, Meade makes Mary his wife and takes her to a safer home.

PROGRAM READER

Louis Bennison, the new Goldwyn star who rose to prominence practically overnight through his first picture, " Oh, Johnny," will return to this theatre on ——— in his latest production entitled " Speedy Meade." If any doubt remained as to Bennison's position in the firmament of film stars it is put to rout by this picture. His breezy, cheery personality is offset to splendid advantage by a picture, the quality of which cannot be overestimated. " Speedy Meade " is a western photoplay and shows the star in the title part of a Federal agent commissioned to run down a band of cattle rustlers and renegades operating along the border. This isn't a very original start for a picture to make, to be sure, but when the inards of " Speedy Meade " are reached the action takes on a totally unconventional complexion and leads the observer through a score or more of exciting situations in which the star is constantly the center of the closest attention. " Speedy Meade" was written and directed by Ira M. Lowry, while Katherine MacDonald plays opposite the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Your main talking point here is the star. Louis Bennison hasn't done many pictures, yet those few in which he has appeared have gone over better than the average according to reports received in this office. Play him up big, don't hesitate in calling him a new star. People always like new stars on the screen just as a business man likes new blood in his business. And of course if you have played his previous pictures they are going to recognize his name and the character of entertainment he stands for immediately they see it over your theatre.

There is one situation which might do for advertising purposes, that lying in the fact that the hero is called upon to arrest the father of the girl he loves. Some pretty forceful word arguments could be built around this fact.

Give the leading woman, Katherine MacDonald, a play. She has appeared in pictures opposite some of the biggest stars in the producing business and has considerable of a following of her own.

"THE ISLAND OF INTRIGUE"—METRO

May Allison's Latest Is Good Mystery Picture

As adapted from the novel by Isabelle Ostrander, "The Island of Intrigue" presents a lively mystery picture with a pretty romantic thread traveling through it. May Allison, the star, is usually associated with pictures of comedy or farce mold, and while these are more in her line, no one can deny that her latest effort fails to interest.

The plot opens when Maida Waring, daughter of a millionaire, receives an invitation to spend the summer with an old friend of her father's, a Mrs. Smith. A Mrs. Smith duly calls for her and Maida is far away on the island when the correct Mrs. Smith arrives. From here on the action moves at a good pace, the suspense is well upheld and the romantic interest is well worked in.

Miss Allison appears to attractive advantage as always. She can play with her eyes just about as well, if not better, than any actress on the screen. Her support embraces a large number of competent players.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 7.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Maida Waring	May Allison
Gilbert Spear	Jack Mower
Thomas Waring, her father	Frederick Vroom
"Mrs. Juliet Smith"	Lucille Ward
Alaric Smith	Gordon Marr
Yorna Smith	Lillian West
Count Pellessier	Hector V. Sarno
Jackson	Tom Kennedy
Mr. Gobel	Chance Ward
Jones, a sailor	Edward Alexander

From the Novel by Isabelle Ostrander.
Scenario by June Mathis and A. S. LeVino.
Directed by Henry Otto.

Supervision of Maxwell Karger.

PRESS NOTICE

May Allison's latest Metro feature, "The Island of Intrigue," will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is taken from the well-known novel of the same name by Isabelle Ostrander, and presents a fascinating mystery story, with sufficient touches of romance and gentle humor to provide an exceedingly well balanced piece of entertainment. Miss Allison takes the role of Maida Waring, the daughter of an oil magnate, who receives an invitation to spend the summer with an old friend of her father's, Mrs. Juliet Smith. Mrs. Smith's country home is on a distant island and although the idea doesn't appeal to Maida strongly she is urged to accept the invitation by her father, who is about to depart on a long business trip.

And Mrs. Smith duly calls when Mr. Waring is at his office and Maida departs with her. What is his surprise then to receive a frantic telephone call from Mrs. Juliet Smith, later in the day, telling him that she had called for Maida and found her gone, and with a woman who claimed to be Mrs. Smith! It proves to be a clear case of abduction and detectives are immediately put on the job.

Just what happens to Maida will be revealed on the ——— theatre screen when "The Island of Intrigue" is shown. Suffice it to say here that the story is filled with a mystery interest of the most intense sort, while the romance is unusual and cleverly introduced. Miss Allison is a true delight in the stellar role, and in her support appear a cast of competent players including Jack Mower, Frederick Vroom, Mrs. Lucille Ward, Gordon Marr, Lillian West, Hector Sarno and others.

CATCH LINES

Of course, Mrs. Smith didn't choose her name. She might have picked one a little more unusual if she hadn't happened to have loved a certain Mr. Smith. But that is really apart from our story. The fact is that because Mrs. Smith had such a very common name an innocent girl was abducted! Mystery and much of it!—all in "The Island of Intrigue."

It was one of the prettiest islands ever, but some of the meanest intrigue was hatched on its shores—if you like mystery and romance—lots of each, see "The Island of Intrigue" now at the ——— theatre.

"The Island of Intrigue" is based on Isabelle Ostrander's novel of the same name. Here is an author that knows full well how to write of unusual mystery and beautiful romance. You will find them both in this Metro picture, an unusual picturization of one of her most popular works.

She was abducted and made a prisoner by a lawless gang—but she found romance.

Maida was having a beautiful time with her father's old friend, Mrs. Smith and her son and daughter and the Count—all such nice people. And then one day she returned from a walk to discover Mrs. Smith emptying a whiskey flask and all the rest of her friends drinking and playing poker! See "The Island of Intrigue."

THE STORY

Waring, wealthy oil magnate, welcomes the letter that comes from his old friend, Mrs. Juliet Smith, asking Maida, his daughter, to spend part of the summer at her island home. Business is taking him east for several weeks and he persuades Maida to go. So the next day Mrs. Smith and her son and daughter call for Maida while Waring is at his office and before he returns the girl is far off on the island. It is a worried father that hastens home. Mrs. Juliet Smith had summoned him on the 'phone, telling him that she had called for Maida and found her already gone. It is only too apparent that there is some sort of a plot afoot and Waring immediately summons the police.

In the meantime Maida, all unsuspecting, is having a joyous time on the island, for she has met Gilbert Spear, a young fellow who has fled the city for a little peace and quiet. Maida's friends leave her to herself practically all the time, but even this attitude of theirs fails to arouse her suspicions. Then finally she returns to the house to discover that the masks worn by the "Smiths" have dropped. They reveal themselves to her in their true colors and attempt to force her to write her father saying that she is in danger. This she stoutly refuses to do, so the miscreants decide to wait a little longer to see whether Waring will grant their demands for money.

But Maida escapes from her room, hastens to Spear and the two make off in a boat. They are overtaken by the villains but just as all seems lost again a revenue cutter comes into sight with Waring on board. The band is taken into custody and Maida is restored to her father—but then Spear does a little kidnapping on his own account.

SUGGESTIONS

The mystery angle should be the prominent one in your advertising of this feature. And this hint applies to all advertising. Newspaper, lobby, throwaways and the like. Play up the important point in the story, say that the mysterious abduction of the heroine by a woman she believed her father's friend created a mystery that even the secret service had a hard time in solving. Look over the catchlines printed elsewhere on this page. They have been prepared with this mystery angle in view and give a good idea of the style of advertising that should be used to present this feature.

Don't neglect the author. She is well known in her field and this special book had quite a large sale. Then, of course, there is the star. In the past few pictures she has done Miss Allison has gained a reputation as a comedienne. Here, however, the subject matter of the five reels is of a totally different nature. You might use these facts to play up the star's versatility or to announce the fact that she never stays in a rut, so to speak, and believes in giving her admirers variety.

The pretty scenery will bear an extra boost, and the members of the cast, many of them, are old timers and are well known.

PROGRAM READER

You'd never think there was a real mystery resulting from the name of Smith. Such a common name doesn't exactly convey mystery. But it is all because of the name of Smith that the mystery in "The Island of Intrigue" started. In fact, its commonplaceness caused the abduction of an innocent girl, thew her in with a gang of irresponsible people—crooks and kidnappers the police would call them—but best of all brought her romance. This is a pretty big order for a little name like Smith, and just these few facts may mystify you a bit. But that's just our intention. We are talking about "The Island of Intrigue," one of the best little mystery pictures that we have ever seen, and which we will present here on ———, so we thought we'd go about it in a mysterious sort of a way. .At any rate, whether you like our talk or not, you're sure to like the picture. It is taken from Isabelle Ostrander's novel of the same name and has May Allison as the star supported by Jack Mower, Frederick Vroom, Mrs. Lucille Ward, Gordon Marr, Hector V. Sarno, Lillian West, Tom Kennedy and others. Don't forget that date.

THE Program Reader was introduced as a ready-made announcement for the exhibitor to insert in his house organ. It is a short, chatty, little notice about the feature to come, gives interesting facts regarding it and presents them in interesting style. Clip it for your program.

"A REGULAR FELLOW"—TRIANGLE

Clean and Delightful Comedy; Thrills Toward the End

AS every one of the Taylor Holmes pictures, this one also is of the light sort. It is a combination of romance and farce, with plenty of clean and delightful comedy situations throughout; perhaps not the kind that would cause roars of laughter, but the kind which, like "It Is a Bear," the star's first contribution to the Triangle program, should satisfy deeply. Towards the end the picture offers also some thrills.

The hero is introduced as a woman hater, who, however, in the course of the story, is captivated by the charms of the heroine, a pretty young girl, whom he meets by chance. He follows her to South America and back to the States again; and when he thinks he has landed her, he finds out that she is none other than the very girl his aunt was trying to talk him into marrying, he steadfastly refusing.

Almost half of the picture has been photographed on a boat. This is rather a novelty, and undoubtedly helps make the picture more interesting. — Released April 13. — Length, 5 reels. — P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Dalion Pemberton	Taylor Holmes
Virginia Christy	Millicent Fisher
Lady Westcott	Edna Phillips Holmes
Count Eugenia	Frank Leigh
Mrs. Horatio Grimm	Aileen Manning
Oiler Tom	Bert Apling
Mrs. Christy	Lillian Langdon
Characterizations	Bill Durham and Leo Willis

Story and Photoplay by Daniel Carson Goodman.

Directed by Christy Cabanne.

PROGRAM READER

He was a woman-hater and as such was to be hated, pitied perhaps, himself. But the one nice thing about all woman haters is that at some time or another they meet a pretty girl and become just the antithesis of their former selves. That's what happened to Dalion Pemberton. When his grandfather said that he wanted him to marry a certain young lady he fled immediately and didn't stop until he got to South America. Then the first person he saw was a remarkably pretty girl and he fell in love. He followed her back to North America, keeping company with the coal while she kept company with the free air and then he landed in jail. But still he followed and finally ended up by finding out that she was the very girl his grandfather intended for him all along. Words, however, can not do the comedy of the picture justice. Mr. Holmes is a natural born comedian and he makes the most of the role of Dalion Pemberton. His support is able in every instance. "A Regular Fellow" was written by Daniel Carson Goodman and produced under the direction of William Christy Cabanne.

PRESS NOTICE

Taylor Holmes, the Triangle comedian, will be seen in his latest feature for that company at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is entitled "A Regular Fellow" and was written expressly for him by Daniel Carson Goodman, and produced under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne. Mr. Holmes is seen in the role of a woman-hater who takes ship to South America in order to escape matrimony, a state which his grandfather is contemplating thrusting upon him. On the other side of the globe the young man sees a pretty girl and immediately reverses his idea of women. Of course he was a fool to ever have hated women!

But this girl is not so easily won. She leads him a merry chase, back from South America to North America, into jail, out of jail and back in again and then after all he discovers that she was the very girl his grandfather wanted him to marry.

It's a merry comedy, this, and Mr. Holmes' ingratiating personality fits in with the general scheme of things and makes it all the merrier. The film is filled with unusual comedy. Offhand the spectacle of a man in a dress suit scrubbing decks is pretty funny. That's just one of the many ridiculous situations with which "A Regular Fellow" is crammed. Mr. Holmes is surrounded by a competent supporting cast, while the locations and settings are all that could be desired.

The management has secured a number of particularly good short subjects and announces an appropriate musical program as complements to the main feature.

THE STORY

Dalion Pemberton likes women just about as much as the French like the Germans. When his grandfather decides that he will marry Dalion kicks because his own opinion about it hasn't been considered in the least. But then grandfather is used to deciding without asking Dalion. All he knows about the girl is that her name is Virginia Christy. And despite this pretty name he runs away from her and takes ship to Buenos Aires. There he meets a beautiful girl and straightway he changes his opinion about women in general. Which is the natural thing for woman haters to do.

When she leaves for America Dalion accompanies her. That is he gets on the same boat. The difference in their positions is that she is up with the air and Dalion is down with the coal. He scrubs decks, gets beaten up and fires the furnace—boiler we mean—all for her sake. On his arrival in New York he is arrested as a stowaway. His cell-mates plan an escape and he is declared in on the deal whether he will or no. Then he is declared in on robbing a house. The trouble is that other crooks have gotten there first. There is a general fight in which Dalion is attacked by everyone when he tries to defend the house.

The police arrive and all the gang are taken back to jail. Then Dalion discovers that all his heroic efforts have been in behalf of the girl of South America and the boat. And another surprise is in store for him when he learns that her name is Virginia Christy.

CATCH LINES

"I love you, I love you forever—excuse me." That was the way Dalion Pemberton made love to the beautiful lady whose name he didn't even know. But you see he didn't know much about such things because he had always been a woman hater—and because there was a husky deck hand on his trail seeing that he attended to his duties as chambermaid to the deck. Even if he was wearing a dress suit, he had to do that or "get off and walk."

He hated all women until he saw one of the reasons why men leave home—and then he fled from his retreat straight back to civilization, because the woman hating stuff was sure giving him the reverse English.

Pemberton hated women so that if he had to sit through a performance of "Romeo and Juliet" he was ill for a week; but then something happened and if Romeo were around he quit the job cold after seeing himself outdone. You'll laugh a whole lot more at Pemberton than you sighed with Romeo.

"Women have ruined the world," he gasped tragically one moment, and ten minutes later he was vowing "I only want to feast my eyes on that beautiful lady." Juggling coal, mopping deck and even a cell didn't check his ardor—and then he found that he had simply gone to an awful lot of trouble—but what did he care?

Woman hating was his occupation, and he didn't know the slightest thing about burglary. But he was "dressed for the part" and they forced him to go after the "million dollars' worth of ice"—and what he found was a billion dollars' worth of— And you'll get dollars' worth of laughs.

SUGGESTIONS

Taylor Holmes has a certain popularity, a popularity due to his many good picture comedies of the past. Productions like "Ruggles of Red Gap," "A Pair of Sixes" and "It's a Bear" have brought him attention. Don't fail to mention these in advertising this, the latest of his pictures. Recalling a past good picture always helps in advertising a present one. You know yourself how many people have made reputations off their work in "The Birth of a Nation," no matter how large or small their part was. So be sure to bring back to the memories of your patrons the previous pictures.

In presenting "A Regular Fellow" in your advertisements be sure to get the comedy spirit of it. Don't be content to print a cut-and-dried announcement. Such stuff doesn't sell a picture and it isn't appropriate. Get into the swing of the thing. Get up some snappy, comedy copy and use funny pictures if you use any at all. Lobby decorations the same way. A man scrubbing decks in a dress suit would be a good line for your artist to work on. And another one with him, all bedraggled in jail, would suffice for the other side of the lobby.

If further exploitation aids are needed the exhibitor is advised to refer to the April fifth issue of Motion Picture News in which a Special Service Section on this production was printed.

"HEARTS OF MEN"—HIRAM ABRAMS

Beban Wins Your Sympathy; Good Film Results

GEORGE BEBAN hardly needs an introduction. Of all the screen actors that have easy access to the heart's inmost recesses, he is the acknowledged leader. He is the greatest exponent of paternal love, a gift which enables him to wring the heart and bring out the tears. Such is the feat he accomplishes in "Hearts of Men." To this end he is assisted by George Beban, Jr., his own little son, about six years of age.

The picture is pathetic, but it leaves no depressing effect whatever. It arouses love and compassion for the hero, as well as his mother and his little son. The sight of the big-hearted laborers giving a helpful hand to the little family, and their standing by the hero in his adversities, will also bring pleasure. There is a particular spot that will cause involuntary, nevertheless welcome, tears to trickle down the cheeks; it is where the little fellow, before going to bed, kneels and prays for his big friends, while they are standing by unperceived.—Released in April.—Length. 5½ reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Story by William M. McCoy.
Scenario by Harvey Thew and Helen Filson.

PROGRAM READER

George Beban, than whom there is no greater interpreter of Italian character roles, makes his first appearance in many months at this theatre in his new picture entitled "Hearts of Men." In this Mr. Beban has the sympathetic role of an Italian immigrant who comes to America with his little son in order that the boy may regain his health. His adventures in America constitute the major portion of the story. It is filled with dramatic highlights of both pathetic and humorous nature. Mr. Beban fairly revels in situations that offset his acting finely, but which at the same time provide suspense and force on their own account. This is due to the careful work of William McCoy, who wrote the story, and of Harvey Thew and Helen Filson, who prepared the continuity. They have shaped a vehicle to exploit Mr. Beban's talents which hides the fact that it is a vehicle but its own merit. One interesting member of the cast is George Beban, Jr., a youngster who shows his father's talent and who, in the role of the Italian's son, creates a most delightful and amusing little character. "Hearts of Men" will be seen here on ———.

PRESS NOTICE

George Beban, known the country over for his characterizations of Italians, returns to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week after a long absence, in his newly made production entitled "Hearts of Men." In it Mr. Beban is awarded one of the most sympathetic roles of his career. He gets the most from it naturally. Mr. Beban can express grief and sorrow better than any actor on the screen today. And everyone is going to feel sorry and happy with him throughout his new picture. It's so downright human from first scene to tail piece that the spectator cannot but help live through the action with him.

"Hearts of Men" was written for the star by William M. McCoy and casts him in his familiar role of the Italian immigrant who journeys to America that his little son may regain his health. The land he buys proves worthless, but the rest of the men in the neighborhood, laborers, all help him improve it. They become very fond of the little boy. A tragedy then enters the Italian's life, a tragedy caused by a woman he thought loved him and it is nearly the death of him, but finally the fellow's happiness is restored, and the story closes with his little boy restored to his arms.

It is interesting to note that George Beban, Jr., a little tot plays the part of the child. He certainly takes after his father as regards talent, and does his important bit in the picture with a sincerity and enthusiasm that is delightful and amusing. Mr. Beban has surrounded himself with a supporting cast of competence.

THE STORY

Nicolo Rosetti conducts a small flower stand, earning barely enough to support his aged mother and Beppo, his orphaned little son. His mother's health fails, and the doctor advises him to take her to some climate in high altitude. He exchanges his holdings for some Arizona land, but when he gets there he finds he has been cheated in the bargain, for the land is worthless. Some laborers working near by, hearing of his misfortune, and feeling pity for him, help him clear the land, and also erect a shack good enough to shelter the little family. Shortly, however, Nicolo's mother dies and he is compelled to look after his son himself. The kind-hearted laborers, who have by now become attached to the child, advise him to get married; so he sends a letter to his cousin in Italy asking him to find him a wife.

Tina Ferroni consents to come, but when she reaches Arizona is badly disappointed to find the place not as she had it pictured in her mind, and Nicolo not as nice looking as she thought he would be. After the wedding she starts flirting with the grocery clerk.

Nicolo receives a letter from his dead wife's mother asking him to send her Beppo so she may see him before she dies. Tina prevails on him to send her with the boy; he consents, ignorant of the fact that she was, at the same time, eloping with the clerk.

When Tina reaches Italy, she writes Nicolo that the boy is dead. Nicolo is heartboken. The laborers, suspecting foul play, make a collection among themselves and carry on an investigation through the American Consul. Soon they receive a cablegram from him advising them that the boy is alive, and that Tina had told a falsehood in order to inherit the fortune Beppo's grandmother left him, and that he was sending him back in care of a trusted woman. The kind-hearted laborers, planning a surprise for, Nicolo, say nothing to him about the good news. In the meantime, Nicolo finds oil in his land, but in receiving the congratulations of his friends, he assures them that, since they helped make him what he is, he will share his wealth with them.

Beppo now arrives, and his big friends take him to the cabin where the heartbroken father is nursing his sorrow. His joy at seeing his son alive is without bounds.

CATCH LINES

"Hearts of Men" marks George Beban's return to the screen.

Starring George Beban, supported by George Jr. The little fellow is every bit as clever as his father. See George Beban & Son in "Hearts of Men."

Your eyes will twinkle with tears and your lips will curl with a smile when you see "Hearts of Men" with George Beban, the great interpreter of Italian character roles, in the star part.

All he cared for in the world was his little boy, and a woman stole him—stole him because she wanted the money he was to inherit! What did Nicolo care for money? The woman could have his money. He only wanted the boy, the boy who had been spirited away. And then he heard he was dead and his heart broke! See George Beban in his greatest role in "Hearts of Men."

PROGRAM READER

George Beban hasn't done much in the picture line lately, but while he was appearing he had created a certain following, a certain public who looked forward to each successive release of his. Considering this, it wouldn't be a bad idea to make the showing of "Hearts of Men" something of a "welcome home" party for the star. In all your advertising announce that it is the first picture he has appeared in for some time. You might even run your advertising in the form of an invitation to come to the theatre and be received by George Beban. Why not? It is something different and anything a little bit different from the ordinary routine of things is bound to create some sort of an impression on the reader.

In presenting the story be sure to bring out its sympathetic central character which Beban plays. He is noted, of course, for his portrayal of Italian roles, and it is such a part that he has here. But make the most of its sympathetic quality. You might even go so far as to word any of your arguments in broken English (broken with Italian) to gain the proper effect.

State also that the star's little son takes a prominent role in the picture. This will make interesting copy for publicity stories and will also help pull business through an advertisement.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Vitagraph News Bits

All Vitagraph producing units are at work in or near the Hollywood studio, a condition that has not existed for a number of weeks. The last one to return to the studio from foreign location was that headed by Bessie Love and Director David Smith, which for four weeks has been in the big timber country.

Having finished a play written by H. H. Van Loan, Director James Young and the Earle Williams company will next begin the filming of a story by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow. The Van Loan story is said to be one of the most elaborate productions that have been made by a Vitagraph company. For convenience it was filmed at the Brunton studios where there were additional facilities for larger settings, impossible at the Vitagraph plant because stages were tied up with settings for the serial companies.

William Duncan and "The Man of Might" serial company are completing the last episodes of their production. The Vitagraph technical staff has built a large Indian village in the vicinity of Sunland which is a composite of different styles of Indian architecture which will be used by Duncan and company. This is a very fanciful setting, and bespeaks the efforts of the Vitagraph Company to give the best possible in their serials.

Noel Smith, who for two years has been director of comedies at the L-Ko studio, has been engaged by the Vitagraph to direct James Audrey, and he is now filming a comedy with a Mexican atmosphere.

In addition to the pretty girls who are to continue in important parts in the Montgomery and Rock Big V Comedies, Blanche Payson is to be featured in character roles. Miss Payson has been with the Vitagraph for the past several months, following an engagement at the Sennett studios.

Larry Semon and company are working on his third release. This is to have a number of sensational stunts, including leaps from buildings by the aid of umbrellas. Lucille Carlyle is the leading woman in this play.

About Metro Players

It is very probable that Metro's new studio will require enlargement before many weeks, it become known this week when the executives at the plant learned of President Richard A. Roland's expectations. Mr. Roland paid his first visit to the studios on March 29, and has been in many conferences with Messrs. Karger, Engle and others relative to the future productions and Metro producing activities.

William Farnum is presented by William Fox in "Wolves of the Night"

Production Manager Maxwell Karger has assigned Luther A. Reed to the writing of an original story of stage life for the next vehicle for Bert Lytell. This will not be ready for a week or more, and in the meantime Lytell and his director, John Ince, are having a brief vacation.

At the Ince Plant

With the completion of all scenes for "A Man's Wife," plans for Miss Dorothy Dalton's three months' trip to New York, where two or more subjects are to be filmed, are now to be carried out and the Thomas H. Ince star leaves for Broadway on April 6. She will be followed in a few days by director, cameraman and others of the producing staff.

This is between picture period at the Ince studio, but stories have been prepared for both Charles Ray and Enid Bennett, and they will be at work within a few days. It is expected that the Ince studio will shortly become one of the most active on the coast. With this end in view, Mr. Ince has engaged a number of additional writers and the scenario department now has fourteen members. The most recent to be added are Eugene B. Lewis, George C. Hull, Ethel Gillett Thorpe and Agnes Christine Johnston. Miss Johnston is particularly well known in the scenario field, having written a number of very successful subjects, her most recent work being the continuity for "Daddy Long Legs." C. Gardner Sullivan continues as head of the department, and other well-known members of the staff are John Lynch, R. Cecil Smith and Julian Josephson.

In the making of a New Year's Eve celebration scene for the Ince Dorothy Dalton subject "A Man's Wife," a dozen or more pigeons were used and it was found that one of these was a homing pigeon. This has been trained to consider a cage at the studio as its home, and it will be taken to New York by Dorothy Dalton, who upon her arrival will liberate the bird and it is expected it will bring the first news of her arrival to Los Angeles.

Fox Studio Doings

Titles have been given to practically all of the subjects now being filmed at the Fox plant, and complete casts have been selected in almost every instance. The Peggy Hyland picture from the George Barr McCutcheon story "Cowardice Court" will have Jack Livingston as leading man, and a cast composed of Arthur Hoyt, Bertram Law, Kathrine Adams, Harry Lonsdale and Bull Montana. J. A. Roach prepared the continuity and J. Dev. Jennings is in charge of the photography. William C. Dowlan is the director.

Madlaine Traverse will have as her leading man in "The High Flame," by Eva Campbell and Dennison Clift, Clyde Fillmore, who makes his debut on the screen. He came to the coast with "The Little Teacher" speaking stage attraction, after a number of years as leading man in prominent productions. Harry Millarde will continue as director of Miss Traverse, and her supporting cast for this picture will include Wm. Conklin and Claire DuBrey.

Harry Hilliard, who has been identified with Fox productions made in the east, has come to Los Angeles, and is playing the leading role opposite Gladys Brockwell in the subject titled "Gypsy," now being directed by Ed. J. LeSaint. Others in this film, written by J. G. Alexander and Ruth Baldwin, are William Scott, Irene Rich, Girard Grassby, Alfred Hollingsworth and John Oaker.

While driving to San Francisco March 20, the steering knuckle of a car occupied by six members of the Fox Company, including Fred Granville, broke when going over a portion of a road on one side of which was a deep gully. Tom Mix, following in his own car, saw the danger of the people in the car ahead, and driving alongside hit the front wheel with his car and drove the broken one into an embankment on the other side. The impact of the car having the broken steering knuckle was so great that the car was almost totally wrecked, but the occupants escaped with minor bruises.

Here and There

Having completed the first H. B. Warner subject, "The Man Who Turned White," for Robertson-Cole distribution, Jesse D. Hampton is now preparing everything necessary for Warner's second production. Barbara Castleton will continue as Warner's leading woman. The film will have a Chinese atmosphere, and is from an original story by George Elwood Jenks titled "The Pagan God."

Other activities at the Jesse D. Hampton studio include preparations for a William Desmond film, title of which has not been announced. Desmond will return shortly to the studio from his honeymoon.

Complete cast for the Brentwood Film Corporation's second production "Better Times," now being made by Director King Vidor, is announced to have George Hackathorn, David Butler, ZaSu Pitts, Hugh Fay and Jack McDonald as principals. All of these players are particularly well known. Butler made his screen debut as Mons. LeBebe in Griffith's "Greatest Thing in Life," and has since played important parts. Hackathorn played the juvenile in "The Heart of Humanity," and ZaSu Pitts has been seen in a number of Famous Players-Lasky subjects. Jack McDonald earned the name of Slapjack by playing that role in "The Spoilers."

Both Pickford companies are at work. The Mary Pickford organization has Kenneth Harlan as leading man in the filming of Julia Lippman's story "Burkse's Amy." Sidney Franklin is the director of this.

Jack Dillon, who was director of a number of subjects starring Olive Thomas for Triangle, and for the past several months has been with Universal, has written an original story for Jack Pickford which he will direct. The first few scenes for this were filmed this week. The entire cast has not been named.

Dustin Farnum has engaged Thomas N. Heffron as director, and within the next few days the filming of "A Harvest of Shame," prepared for the screen by Tom Geraghty, will be put in production.

The Selznick Company is making the final scenes of the Olive Thomas play "The Spite Bride," and upon completion of this the organization will return to the east. They probably will leave within the next week.

Frank Keenan has completed the making of "The Tide Book" for Pathe, and the Bessie Barriscale Company has finished "Josselyn's Wife" for Robertson-Cole.

Four views of James J. Corbett, now a Universal star

George Loane Tucker has made all the scenes for his mystery film, and is now engaged in editing.

The two companies of the Great Authors Film Corporation are working on location in the mountains, and Director Lloyd Ingraham is making the interior scenes for the Lewis Stone play "Man's Desire" with Jane Novak and Charlotte Burton at the Brunton studios.

Universal Newsettes

The Universal producing plant will again resume the plan formerly inaugurated there of having a scenario writer for each director. For this reason E. J. Clawson, who has been at the head of the play department, will assume the work of writing exclusively for one company, and the Universal has engaged Eugene Mullins to serve as head of the scenario department. Mullins was formerly scenario editor at the Vitagraph. It is stated no other changes will be made with respect to this department at Universal City.

President Carl Laemmle, who has been at Universal City for the past several weeks, has about completed the work which brought him to the coast on his present trip, and now plans to leave for New York on April 7.

An original story written by Elmer Elsworth titled "Woman's Place," is to be the next vehicle for Mary MacLaren, which will be directed by Paul Powell. This is now before the casting department, and filming will be started within a few days.

Francelia Billington, formerly featured in Universal Productions, has been engaged to play the featured feminine role in "The Pinnacle," which was recently put in production. This will be directed by Eric Von Stroheim, and the company has gone to the San Barnardino mountains to make experiors.

"The Right to Happiness" is the latest title selected for the coming Dorothy Phillips subject being directed by Allen Holubar. This was originally titled "Ambition" and later "The Light." William Stowell and Robert Anderson are the other principals of the cast.

APRIL 19, 1919 NEWS MORE NEWS

Pat Powers is still in town.

Charley Christie's gone east.

Bill Parker's back from New York.

Dennis Sullivan was in town this week.

Lewis J. Selznick, himself, is expected on the coast.

Bert Lytell has safely come through "The Lion's Den."

And now we learn that Ruth Roland is a somnambulist.

Enid Bennett is taking a vacation at Coronado Tent City.

Edwin Carewe and Joe King have hit the rattler for New York.

Fay Tincher threatens to wear a black and white dress again some time.

Roscoe Arbuckle has borrowed Molly Malone from the Al Christie studios.

Reg Barker can direct pictures equally as well with or without puttees.

Monroe Salisbury threatens to match his yacht against Sir Thomas Lipton's.

Director Charles Swickard is having the Alps paged throughout Southern California.

Henry Lehrman was seen to walk across the Alexandria mystic rug one evening this week.

William Allen Johnston is shortly to O. O. the film colony. Welcome to our midst, Bill.

Forrest Stanley is authority for the statement that the actor is entitled to have a wail.

Bill Farnum has gone hunting again—at least he's up at Palm Springs with a company and camera.

Jack Pickford's first First National release is not to be known as "In Wrong" as originally titled.

The treasurer of Brentwood Film Corporation received a voucher which read: Brentwood Philem Company.

Agnes Christine Johnston is out from the Great White Way to write pieces for the screen for Tom Ince.

R. Cecil Smith has a garden in the making which he says will have it over Hines, inasmuch as he is to have 58 varieties.

Elinor Fair, the new William Fox star, lives up to her name in that she is not required to use grease paint. She only powders her nose.

Spring houscleaning is upon us. Clark Thomas, manager of Tom Ince's Culver City Southern colonial film hostelry, is having his office papered.

Viola Dana insists that she would rather walk seven miles than be raised 200 feet by a rope, as was necessary when scenes were made in a canyon recently.

The local press proclaims a big commercial studio where "perfect pictures" will be made, is shortly to be built by a corporation to be headed by J. A. Quinn.

Mary Pickford has a new dressing room built especially for her, and now Ted Hemmer will have an additional cause for complaint of the high cost of production.

The postman on April 1st brought in a package of green paper from the man Lusk at the Goldwyn studios. It's a little early for All Fool's Day stories from the publicity men.

Another newspaper man has fallen for this writing scenarios stuff—he is W. Scott Darling, late of Canada. By the way, Al and Charley Christie are from London—Ontario, Canada.

Lloyd Ingraham is the only director we know of who can talk through a megaphone while wearing boots. Lloyd explains this with the statement that his boots are different as they have tongues.

Scandal—Clara Kimball Young induced a well-known typewriter beater to shave off his mustache after his wife had tried for more than a year to induce him to use the Gillette on his upper lip.

May Allison has discovered a spot where the sun will blister the skin but not melt the snow. We don't know whether that has anything to do with her leading the grand march with the mayor of Fresno, or not.

Ham Beal sends in a couple of pictures of serial companies bidding Joe Brandt "good-bye." They all have the appearance of having been especially staged, but from what we hear, they were sorry to tell Joe "good-bye."

William D. Taylor, former director of numerous west coast made subjects, who left his work to enter the war with the British, will be back in Los Angeles in May, and it's a safe bet there'll be a big number glad to welcome Bill.

Dave Thompson, of Metro, on being interviewed, said the film studios should all join the Gimme, or Lemme Take, Club, for they are now as bad as the small town woman who is always after a cup of sugar or an egg at the next door neighbor's.

Tom Ince did smoke a Romeo and Juliet brand of cigars, and when his colored doorman went to purchase some after the store keeper's supply had been exhausted, he found another brand named Richard III., so he returned and explained they were by the same author, which is not a bad wheeze, say we.

Bert Lytell has taken on a little extra work. He's not footing it evenings at the Hollywood Hotel dances, and from the way he calls numbers for the Taxi has led many to believe that he spent his boyhood days on a hog ranch. Bert has a wonderful calling voice, and it's too bad he's in the silent drama.

Jimmie Quirk and Al Cohn had a wordy battle this week as to who was the greatest director. Jimmie and Al both admit that up till this time our own David Wark was the greatest director, but on a Sunday Jimmie and Al, collectively, directed David Wark for some scenes in Photoplay screen supplement, and now they claim they are the greatest directors for having directed the greatest director. But the argument is whether Jimmie's the director and Al the assistant director, or Al was the director and Jimmie the assistant director. Anyway, they directed Griffith.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to January 19, 1919.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS (ROBERTSON-COLE) GRACE DARMOND (FEB. 10)..............................MAR. 8
"Looks good enough for treatment as a special production."—M.P.News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture that failed to draw even average business." "No one raved about this one but did average business two days."

WHEN A GIRL LOVES (JEWEL) MILDRED HARRIS (APR. 7) ....MAR. 29
(Six Parts)
"Immense both from the box-office and the screen."—M. P. News.

WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE (AMERICAN) RUSSELL (JAN. 19) ....JAN. 11
"Rapid action Western is William Russell's latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very poor, no story, no excitement, very tiresome, clean melodrama, not one redeeming feature." "Fine picture, big business." "Nothing to say."

WHEN MEN DESIRE (FOX) THEDA BARA (MAR. 9)......MAR. 22
"Theda Bara makes miraculous escape from Germany."—M. P. News.

WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN (INDEPENDENT SALES) JANE GREY (APR. 7)...APR. 5

WHO CARES (SELECT) CONSTANCE TALMADGE (JAN. 19) JAN. 25
"Story of light pleasing sort; should be enjoyed by all."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Constance was winsome in this light role and gave promise of great things when she is older in the emotional scenes." "This picture was very good. A little stronger in plot and story than most of this star's pictures. Star very good. Support also very good. Big and average business."
Consensus—"Fine picture, good puller."

WHO WILL MARRY ME? (BLUEBIRD) MYERS (JAN. 27)..FEB. 8
"Comedy and pathos blended in this Universal film."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Big business."

WHY GERMANY MUST PAY (SCREEN CLASSICS) (JAN. 19) JAN. 25
"German atrocities again, with a good romantic interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"While war pictures are about played out, this is an exceptionally fine one and bound to draw. Excellent cast, fine story, good photography and in every way a good attraction. Advertise it 'right' and you've got something worth while. Attendance good every day. Big Sunday." "Average business."

(Six Parts)
"Strong picture that keeps interest alive all through."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy story. Universal Special's usual fine photography. Cast is headed by that 'little devil of the screen.' We claim the honor of having 'discovered' Priscilla from an exhibitor's standpoint. Fine attendance for two days." "Good program feature. Priscilla Dean grows more popular with each picture here. Big business."
Consensus—"Excellent production, big puller."

WINNING GIRL, THE (PARAMOUNT) SHIRLEY MASON (FEB. 23) ....MAR. 22
"Shirley Mason's latest is a nice little picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good little picture to average business."

"It's naturalness puts it over; star is good."—M. P. News.

WOMAN ON THE INDEX, THE (GOLDWIN) PAULINE FREDERICK (FEB. 23)..APR. 5
"Genuine Goldwyn success; filled with real suspense."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very interesting picture. Pleased to big business two days."
"An excellent program feature. Extra good business against big opposition." "Great. Pauline Frederick has made a hit with her first Goldwyn production. Extra big business four days." "The type of picture that Pauline is best in but story did not come up to expectations. Well staged, acted and directed, but the story is not there. Business good but the star drew it all."

WOMAN, WOMAN (FOX) EVELYN NESBIT (JAN. 26)....FEB. 8
"Deals boldly with sex question; morals of heroine lax."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

WORLD TO LIVE IN, THE (SELECT) ALICE BRADY (FEB. 17) ....MAR. 8
"Presents star in a new role, some situations exaggerated."—M.P.News.

A Statement of Facts Concerning the Y. M. C. A.

THE general scarcity of SECOND-HAND SIMPLEX PROJECTORS and other conditions made it impossible for us to make a deal for sending a large number of these machines across for overseas Y. M. C. A. work * * * * * * for the requirements (as enumerated by Y. M. C. A. men) were for a large number of available repair parts—for a machine that was cheap—light in weight—that could be junked when the war was over—and that could be left behind without regrets in case of necessity.

Throughout our electrically-operated laboratory we utilize wonder machines—machines of highest mechanical perfection.

But, machinery is brainless—chemicals are fickle—so at the points where mechanical devices fail, stand guard our skilled artisans whose verdict against the less-than-perfect is: "they shall not pass!"

So, by proper use of scientific implements combined with the best human equation, we obtain results not otherwise possible.

Marguerite CLARK

Just Imagine!

IMAGINE a husband helping his wife to elope with another man! He didn't want to lose her either. But he knew a thing or two about women,

Imagine Marguerite Clark as the erring heroine of this sparkling comedy and you can easily picture the crowds that will flock to "Let's Elope."

Marguerite Clark in a big stage success will make "Let's Elope" a sure-fire box-office money-maker.

This production, first and foremost, features the charm of Marguerite Clark, one of the best-loved stars in motion pictures.

It also features a brilliant story of real life that rocks with laughter and queer twists of delicious comedy.

Adapted from "The Naughty Wife," Fred Jackson's noted stage hit, and built on the unfailing drawing power of Marguerite Clark, "Let's Elope" is certain to make you scads of money.

It's worth all the punch and power you can put in your advertising. It's worth an extended run. Go to it—hard!

So say we all of us

"CONVINCING and attractive," says the Times. "Pleasing" says the Morning World in a big headline. "Genuine and likeable," says the Herald. "Amusing romance, excellently acted," says the Globe. "One of the most successful films ever shown at the Rivoli," says the Telegram. "Plays havoc with the heart strings; humorous, pathetic and of strong human appeal," says the Telegraph. "Acted with fine feeling," says the Sun. "Interesting and pleasing love story," says the Mail. "Tell the world about this little picture; boy, it has got a kick," says Wid's.

So say they all of them.

This simple tale of young love is a classic for heart appeal. Audiences love it and the people in it. Ethel Clayton never was seen to better advantage. In an admirable cast, Monte Blue achieves the highest honor.

The kind of story the people want. Play it up big. You can't go wrong with "Pettigrew's Girl."

Dead Cats!

W. W. Hodkinson has begun and will continue to offer motion picture productions of the higher type to exhibtors singly under contract. We are not doing this merely because we know exhibitors prefer the system of wide open bookings, but because we, too, consider it a sane step in picture marketing.

You have been told for years by producer-distributors, by organizations that have to sell the product they make, that pictures cannot be sold singly because the overhead cost of distribution is too high. Therefore, they have insisted on selling "program" or "star series."

Program or star series are all right conducted by a neutral concern which has no interest in issuing weak or unfit product, and which has the ambition to select only the best product.

We tell you that program and star series, under present producing conditions, are the refuges of scared producer-distributors who know that they are going to have a good many poor, weak pictures in between their stronger pictures. They have a lot of pictures that will not stand alone and that you would not buy except where you take them sight unseen in programs or series.

Programs and star series are the "safety first" devices of producers who lack courage or confidence in the pictures they make. They want a "sure thing" for themselves, with you, the exhibitor, taking the gamble.

We have taken one of the motion picture industry's dead cats, tied in a bag weighted with scrap iron and thrown it over the rail to sink. Any and all productions distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are available to you individually under contract. We invite you to buy, on merit, exactly what you want.

Other companies will follow our lead. Watch and see.

"Men believe their children are their own. The mother alone knows."

"When the breath of scandal carries the words your wife a man doesn't argue—he acts."

"Do you still think you can have my love and do just as you please?"

"You and De Lota met as strangers in Paris, but you had known each other for eight years. How can I believe you now?"

"It's a different story when it's your own wife, isn't it?"

"The physician who takes a woman through the sacred crises of her life can't be deceived, Frank."

"I don't like your going to a place where you're ashamed to take your wife."

"Yes, I have served a year in prison, but the jails would be full if every man as guilty as I were convicted."

"By our old religion a man had as many wives as he wanted but if a girl made a mistake and married without confession to her husband, she was stoned to death."

Star Value —

PAULINE FREDERICK

Beauty and power united by intelligence and building on success after success, have given Pauline Frederick a following possessed by no other emotional star of screen or stage. From "The Eternal City" to "One Week of Life" runs a record of pleased patronage that means absolute box office draw.

Story Value —

ONE WEEK OF LIFE

She was married to a drunkard. She ached for one week of life in a paradise of love. And she found another woman to take her place. What happened in those seven terrible, magical days is the story that Cosmo Hamilton of Cosmopolitan fame has written especially for Goldwyn.

Production Value —

Everything that Goldwyn stands for. Quality in direction. Quality in cast. Quality in setting, photography, laboratory work. Director Hobart Henley has built a splendid ensemble out of a cast headed by such well known players as Thomas Holding, Sydney Ainsworth and Corinne Barker.

The Grip of The Ages

will grip American screendom as the problem of the painted woman and the little girl around the corner has gripped civilization since the dawn of history. Your patrons will be thrilled and moved and uplifted by Goldwyn's panoramic picturization of Robert H. McLaughlin's sensational drama of love and compassion.

On April 21st when the critics first see "The Eternal Magdelene"—in your theatre or your competitor's—the newspapers will echo such praise as the National Board of Review gave the picture after a private screening.

"The sympathetic screen version of this touching drama takes hold of one's heart. The evident sincerity of the cast will create an impelling desire in all who see the picture to have, with them, some part in spreading the gospel of human understanding as opposed to that New England rigidity that made 'The Scarlet Letter' possible. The world as a motion picture audience owes your company a debt of gratitude for the production".

The "80 per Cents" Have Made a First Run Star

It was the smaller exhibitors, the men who are generally credited with constituting 80 per cent of the industry, that gave Bennison his send-off. They saw the audience-appeal of this powerful and likeable Western star and his initial picture, "Oh, Johnny!" They had no hard and fast, full-booked-up, first run contracts to prevent the introduction of a new star. So they booked Bennison.

Start a snowball rolling—the hill will take care of speed and size.

The "little fellows" gave the Bennison snow ball a start and he's been rolling up contracts ever since.

The contracts on the outside of the snowball are first run contracts—big ones.

First run exhibitors in big city after big city have realized the great drawing power that Bennison has built in the second and third run houses. And they are clearing their tracks for his next and best picture—

East to West

For a big special of the West-that-was, there's no testing ground in America like the East-that-is.

The producer of border melodrama will find no more exacting audiences anywhere than in the great cities that line the Atlantic Coast. They expect much from that old romantic West — hard riding and hard shooting; brave living and brave loving; punch, punch, punch and one more punch for the finish. And, with all this, a wealth of that rich atmosphere of hardy chivalry and romance that only the most expert of directors, players and technical men can summon to the screen.

And what is the reaction of the easternmost East—New England—to the newest photoplay of the old West, Zane Grey's story, "The Border Legion," directed by T. Hayes Hunter and acted by Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth?

Bookings speak for themselves. But audience-reaction is even more important, and here we have the word of two representative leaders among New England exhibitors.

"The Border Legion" is a big drawing card from the box office standpoint, and that is what we exhibitors look for. It is a wonderful picture and we are doing wonderful business with it. It has all the ear marks of a box office money getter.

Manager Thomas D. Soriero
Park Theatre, Boston

Thought it would interest you to know that "The Border Legion" proved to be one of the best Western pictures we have ever played both in the point of story photography, and with the drawing powers of Blanche Bates it is a very good card for us.

Manager Gordon Wrighter
Poli's Palace, Springfield, Mass.

Such is the test of the East, met and passed triumphantly by "The Border Legion."

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

STEEL—the backbone of America—the thing that won the war. The Ford Educational Weekly—mirror of those mighty forces which have made America the dominating factor in war and peace—sees in the story of steel and a score of other industrial romances that dramatic quality which has made America a nation of great inventors, mechanics, engineers and captains of industry. The Ford Educational Weekly satisfies that craving, felt by nine out of ten Americans, for intimate knowledge of this great national workshop.

From Honolulu to Alaska

From bare skin to bear skin. From the whine of the ukulele to the roar of the live fur rug. With Mexico, Cuba and Panama in between. That is part of the lively little itinerary before "Smiling Bill" Parsons. He wanted to go to Europe, but the diplomats were afraid to let him open against their own big show in Paris. So it's ho! for all the picturesque sights and settings of "Smiling Bill's" own continent. One Capitol Comedy to a country. Real palaces, real volcanoes, real palms, real natives. Real comedy, too, but Parsons attends to that himself. Such is the program that the producer of Capitol Comedies told Goldwyn he had set for himself when he renewed his contract last week. Fewer comedies and better ones. Every ounce of ingenuity and dollar of steamboat fare that may be needed to bring new and added pull to the comedy productions which in their first year of existence have made screen history.

Sometimes A STAR PULLS...

sometimes it's a story that does the trick, depending largely on the star, on the story, in their suitability to the tastes of the territory for which they are bought.

We know those tastes.

And our success has been in our care TO SUIT THOSE TASTES. There are particular territories for which we advise Kerrigan features, others for which we suggest the Blackwells, ditto the Bessie Barriscales, H. B. Walthalls, Elvidges, Loves, Kitty Gordons and other World or Paralta celebrities.

In some territories we advise the exhibition of Vim Comedies; in others, Black Diamonds; in still others, those Wharton " funnies." With comedy, too, it is a matter of territorial taste.

Specials? Often the three Graphics—" When Men Betray," " Ashes of Love," " Echo of Youth "—are our earnest recommendation, depending on the territory; sometimes we propose " Wives of Men," the Florence Reed special; or " Hearts Across the Sea," the Arnold Daly one; or " The Victim," starring Robert T. Haines, and " The Transgressor " by the same producer of thrills.

"Inter-Ocean is first!" because Inter-Ocean puts the customer and his territorial needs FIRST.

This is the Wonderful Face of

GEORGE BEBAN

When it laughs, the world laughs, and when it weeps, the world weeps. It is the most marvelous face in the world today, for without the aid of words it can tell you old stories, new stories, stories that make your sides ache or your throat choke. It can carry you, breathless, through all the feelings of mankind. It is the face that will haunt you for months when you have seen it in that new photo-classic,

"HEARTS OF MEN"

Mirth and pathos in this powerful picture crowd each other so closely that you never can tell whether the tears in your eyes are from laughter or weeping.

As Niccolo, the Italian immigrant, thrown by a strange fate into a gunman town of Arizona, Mr. Beban surpasses even his world-famous creation in " The Sign of the Rose." You roar at his fights, his strange marriage to the beautiful Tina, the " she-snake," and his convulsive clowning, but between times you sob at Fate's tricks on him and the mystery of his lost child, "the little Cayuse." Hate burns in your veins, with his, when he discovers his adored Tina in the arms of another man.

EVERY EMOTION THAT HE FEELS YOU FEEL. SUCH IS THE MAGIC OF HIS TALENT

The Independent's Choice

¶ The producer of individual pictures, to be marketed independently, has the choice of two methods of exploitation.

¶ He can take his advertising money and attempt to spread it around a half dozen papers, some with meager circulation, others merely duplicating.

¶ And he fails to make a BIG SPLASH because his fire has been scattered; his limited appropriation spread over too large a surface.

¶ Results are slow this way.

¶ But—

¶ He can take the same appropriation, concentrate in Motion Picture News, reach all the exhibiting field—and reach it with a BIG SPLASH!

¶ He amounts to something then. Results come with a bang. And he spends no more.

¶ But he spends it wisely.

¶ Concentrate!

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 17 April 26, 1919

Strictly Personal

THIS is a strictly personal editorial note. It is addressed to Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, Mr. J. A. Berst, Mr. A. S. Kirkpatrick, Mr. Walter Greene, Mr. Hiram Abrams, R. H. Cochrane and Sol Lesser.

You men know picture distribution—and the problems of distribution are the crux of the developments the next year will bring in the film industry.

A few weeks ago we told you on this page of the exhibitor who had written us requesting advice on cooperative booking circuits. He desired to know if it was to the cooperative idea that the exhibitor must turn for the solution of his booking problems.

The question opened up a much broader field for discussion than the mere matter of cooperative circuits. It touched on the vitals of distribution, on the fundamentals of the industry's internal relations.

We extended an invitation to the leaders of the industry to place their knowledge at the aid of the entire industry by frank discussion of the subject. W. W. Hodkinson responded in interesting fashion last week. At our invitation J. D. Williams takes up the subject this week in his usual frank manner.

Now we want to hear from the gentlemen mentioned above.

* * * * *

A Few Suggestions

MR. BERST, we feel sure, will have no hesitation about entering the discussion with a treatment of the methods and lessons of the United organization. The moment is ripe, with United just going "over the top" mark of 2,300 members.

Mr. Selznick has just announced that Select will be a distribution organization open to the best brains of the independent producers. Surely, following on that announcement, he will have some interesting things to say in the discussion that has been started.

Paramount, it is said, will book its pictures on the open market this Fall. What better opportunity, Mr. Greene, than the present discussion in the NEWS columns for a frank statement of distribution policies.

Come on, all of you, experts in picture distribution.

We are extending a personal invitation; we are supplying the space.

We want your knowledge.

Come through, gentlemen!

Mr. Randall's Next Job

THE new Congress will see the same old Smith-Hughes Federal censorship bill brought forth as the Randall bill.

It is the same old bill; but the name Randall has decidedly a new significance. Mr. Randall is the Randall of the Randall Prohibition bill.

As the Churchman naively remarks of the new-named bill: "It logically follows Mr. Randall's success in prohibition."

By "logically" we deduce the Churchman to mean that it was "logical" to place Mr. Randall and his power back of the bill because of Mr. Randall's power and consequent success with his prohibition bill.

And truly it is "logical." The appointment of Mr. Randall does great credit to the political astuteness of Mr. Wilbur F. Crafts, Canon William Sheafe Chase and other self-appointed regulators of motion pictures.

* * * * *

Spokesman of the Minority

MR. RANDALL'S power is great; obviously so, and without any need of analysis or explanation. It must be reckoned with as a great power if motion pictures are to remain free from Federal regulation.

If Mr. Randall's power is the power of votes, these votes having been collected from the various states whose legislatures voted for national prohibition; and if these votes represent a minority of the people; then there is but one way to meet this power and that is with the names of the majority of the voters everywhere. And there is but one way to secure these names and that is through petitions circulated by every picture theatre in the country after slides and film have been shown carrying the issue truthfully and plainly to the public.

We only link up pictures and prohibition here because of Mr. Randall's connection with both bills. The liquor traffic has no more to do with motion pictures than with the publishing of newspapers, books and magazines.

There is this imposed relation, however. Starting with their own hypothesis that a few pictures are vicious, Messrs. Crafts, Chase and others will ignore the rights of states and municipalities to regulate their places of recreation and ask the Government to regulate all pictures at their source. We say nothing of the futility and the wrong involved in having a few political appointees regulate a medium of expression to a people guaranteed freedom in this respect by their constitution.

And to this end, the picture reformers will lend their customary illiberality, downright unfairness, and deliberate ignorance of the motion picture, and the motion picture business of today.

In the coming battle these are the forces we must oppose. We have no adequate organization, no organization even approaching that of the proponents of Federal censorship, no organization at all by comparison.

What shall be done?

Editorially Speaking:

A Minister With Vision

THE Methodist Church is reported to have asked D. W. Griffith to act as an advisor in a country-wide plan to introduce motion pictures into all churches of this denomination.

Speaking for the church, Dr. Reisner says: "The time has come for the Church to enlist the best brains of the world and the most effective forces of education and entertainment. For that reason we are after D. W. Griffith and motion pictures."

And continuing he says: "We recognize motion pictures as the most powerful medium for general entertainment and education."

All of which is as liberal and enlightened as his statement: "By the Church I mean all Christians, and further all who worship God."

When this spirit prevails generally there will be no antagonism between motion pictures and the Church; there will be no reason for the Church to oppose Sunday theatres; and the Church will fulfill its true function in the community.

May we also point to Canon Chase and Mr. Crafts that Dr. Reisner selects an advisor, not a censor; and we assume he would object most seriously to having the development of the "most powerful medium for general entertainment and education" put in the complete power of a few political appointees.

Advertising Frenzy

A TRADE paper contemporary, in an article on the exploitation of "Bolshevism on Trial," suggests that the exhibitor "put up red flags about town and hire soldiers to pull them down if necessary."

The suggestion is made with the best of intentions; and we have no doubt but that the publication itself, on second thought, will go on record and emphatically, against this very unwise procedure, one indeed, which in these tense times the Government, in all probability, positively will not tolerate.

No exhibitor, we are sure, would be led into such an advertising frenzy; but it is well to point out here that the particular function of the motion picture today, its greatest opportunity, perhaps, is to explain away Bolshevism; it will be distinctly unfair to have the picture appear, even purely for theatrical ends, to air radicalism.

We advocated the making, some time ago, of pictures dealing with the labor situation. There will be many such pictures made and circulated all over the world; and they should do an immense amount of good, perhaps even solve the great, stirring problems of social unrest and class hatred.

We suggested also at the time that such pictures should be very judiciously made, and to that end it was advisable that the producer consult with the Department of Labor, the more so since the Department of Labor stood ready to get resourcefully back of each picture to which its approval was given.

And in this connection we are glad to learn that the producers of several recent pictures on Bolshevism and the general labor situation have taken pains to consult closely with the Department of Labor.

A Cure for Idleness

A LARGE manufacturing plant in New York State was recently threatened with a labor strike. Some headway had been made by the agitators, the usual type of irresponsible extremists, who made it a point to harangue the men outside the gates during the rest hour at noon.

The manager hit upon the scheme of showing motion pictures at noon in a hall inside the gates: result, the men remained inside for the better show, and there was no strike.

Motion pictures are being employed in this excellent way in many manufacturing plants today; and right along these lines lies the strongest argument for Sunday motion pictures.

Sunday, like the noon hour, is also a time of idleness. As such, it gives the agitator, the anarchist, the Bolshevist, a fertile field for his work. The home, the church, the lecture hall, do not hold these workers. They should; but they don't.

They are more apt to go to the hall where the red flag hangs out; or the red flag comes to them where they congregate outdoors.

The very recreation given them so advantageously by the welfare departments of the mills and factories should and can be given them on Sunday—by the motion picture theatre.

To William R. Hearst, Film Man

WE have just concluded the reading of two solid newspaper pages of expressions of condolence to you on the death of your wonderful mother.

Leaders of the nation's thought joined with remarkable spontaneity in expressing their deep sympathy and their praise for the mother who has gone. Statesmen, business men, spokesmen of the Church and of educational work seemed at a loss for words sufficiently to express their abounding admiration for the ideal American mother, their sense of the irreparable loss the nation has suffered.

We desire to echo their thoughts on behalf of the Fifth Estate.

Words are perhaps meaningless in moments of such supreme trial. But a tribute of sympathy and love such as these past few days have witnessed will be more enduring than sculptor's marble.

"Much Obliged"—You're Welcome!

E. B. RAIFSTANGER, of the Mahawe Theatre, Great Barrington, Mass., writes:

"I used to change daily—population 5,000 and no opposition. Read your articles on longer runs so much that we tried it. Have been doing it ten months now. Much obliged. Business has been the best ever and at the worst time, too."

Mr. Raifstanger will give us details in an article shortly to appear.

Dealing in Personalities

"One Half of the Muchly Arrived Christies"

TO be right about this we should have Al Christie's photo alongside of the likeness of Charles just to the left. Both have earned their place in our private Hall of Fame.

The Christie's have "arrived"—and they deserve all the praise that comes to men who take a chance.

Al Christie took a big gamble a few years ago when he gave up the secure income that comes to a top notch comedy producer associated with a program and embarked on the independent sea.

But with Charles handling the business end and Al the production, the Christies have moved forward steadily, consistently and without a slip.

If you need any further proof just note this: Ninety-seven per cent of the world territory has been sold on the new two-reel Christie Specials without a print being seen.

Some proof.

Our own Fred Beecroft is sojourning in Chicago this week.

And while out there crossed the trail of A. MacArthur and Boss Chalmers.

After chasing the war half way 'round the world, Ben Grimm strolled into our midst last week. Ben is once more hanging his hat in the M. P. World office.

Next week is First National week, boys. Twenty-six big theatre men and exchange managers from all cities take possession of the Astor. It would be interesting—may be Earl Hudson will send us the story now—to sit down and figure just how many millions are represented when First National's members get together. Just take the real estate holdings alone—whew! No wonder J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe just smile and smile no matter how many ripples and flurries there are in the fillum stream.

Had an interesting visitor to the office in the person of R. H. DeBruler, general manager of the Macon photo theatres, Macon, Ga. The Palace, Princess, Capitol, Grand and Macon are the houses in the organization. And now plans are under way for a new 2,500 seat house in Atlanta. "The most modern in the South," is Mr. DeBruler's aim.

Felix Feist, of Goldwyn, has just returned from a one-night stand trip around the exchanges.

Announcement comes that M. Kashin, of the Broadway theatre, will sever his connection with that house when it is taken over by B. S. Moss on April 30.

Sol Lesser left San Francisco on April 10 for these parts. Sol is going to be a busy person the next few months between his territory on "The Unpardonable Siu" and "Hearts of Men" and the grand, scrumtious traveling "Yankee Doodle" show.

Reports now have it that Famous Players-Lasky will book on the open market plan with the coming of the Fall season. The first thing you know there'll be a free for all scramble to decide "who started all this." But the open market means a live business and life makes us all happy. So the year nineteen nineteen ought to one well worth living in this grand old fillum game.

From far off Honolulu comes a card of greeting signed Edgar Lewis. "On our way through to Japan, China and the Philippines," he says.

Paul Bryan, of Gaumont, is back from his European trip with some interesting observations on the production situation in England.

Charles Pettijohn is looking over Washington, D. C., to see that the Government is running on schedule.

The mails just brought in a rip-snorting letter from H. M. Thomas, of Omaha, on the general subject of exhibitor organization, exhibitor conventions, and so on. Says some sizzling words. We'll give it to you next week, but just now we want to warn you to watch for it. And then if you have any ideas of your own on the subject we want you to get them off your chest in the same forceful, frank way. Get ready!

B. S. Moss announces that he will take over the Symphony theatre, New York, on May 2. Pictures, an orchestra of fifty, two solo singers, and the pipe organ will furnish the entertainment.

S. A. Lynch, the mystery man of the industry, is in New York. Y. K. Freeman is with him.

Rothapfel's first unit program has been completed and the work of editing is well under way.

Those Briggs Comedies surely have gone over with a bang. Joe Plunkitt will show another one at the Strand next week.

Just a few paragraphs above we declared that this open market rush would soon provoke a chorus of "Who Started This Thing?" The words were hardly off the typewriter when we received J. D. Williams' contribution to our forum on distribution. And the fight is on. We like to publish Bre'er Williams' opinions. For, like W. W. Hodkinson, he never hesitates to speak frankly, mention names and "start something." All of which helps along the gayety of nations.

W. M. Seabury is no longer connected with the Film Clearing House, Independent Sales, or Rothapfel Pictures. Has some big plans under way soon to be announced. In resigning says: "It is a pleasure to express publicly my best wishes for the continued success of my friends and associates in the companies named."

James R. Sheehan, of the James Vincent forces, is in Boston this week on "The Spirit of Lafayette."

Harry Maze Jenks expects to sail on the Aquitania on May 3. Will probably have an important announcement before that date.

Bert Ennis is in Washington for the opening of "Virtuous Men" at Tom Moore's Rialto.

We hear that J. Frank Hatch has already sold twenty-nine states on "Tempest and Sunshine." Keep your eye on this Hatch boy.

Got a corking letter in the mails just now from C. R. Midgely, secretary of the United Theatres Association, San Francisco. This new exhibitor organization has seventy-five members represented already. The letter tells the whys and wherefore. Watch for it next week.

Jacques Tyrol, of Tyrad Pictures, is back in New York after a brief trip.

From vigilant Carl Jessen, out in Los Angeles, comes this telegraphic news budget:

"Constance Talmadge is on the way East to sign a contract with Jos. Schenck on April 21, when she becomes of age. Subjects to be released by First National."

"Frank Lloyd has joined Goldwyn."

Williams Speaks Plainly on Distribution

LEADERS of film thought are responding quickly to MOTION PICTURE NEWS invitation for a frank discussion of distribution problems in the relation to exhibitors. Last week W. W. Hodkinson held the floor, and in his usual interesting manner discussed distribution from the ground up.

This week J. D. Williams, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, takes up the gauntlet. "James D." never minces words. He hasn't on this occasion. The result is a sizzling contribution to the discussion and one that will certainly start the ball rolling in lively fashion.

Mr. Williams' letter follows:

Mr. W. A. Johnston, Publisher,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C.

Dear Mr. Johnston;

The focus is wrong in the discussion you have started on the question of distribution. I refer to the first contribution, published last week, and not to the questions contained in your invitation to the trade to voice opinions, prophecies and beliefs. Mr. Hodkinson got away to a fine start, and exhibitors would have been much more impressed with what he had to say about distribution, open market, individual merit, personal responsibility, ad infinitum, if he had not discounted himself a week before in his advertisement labelled "Dynamite."

That was a thunder-stealing stunt. It reached right out, picked up a couple of well-ued policies bearing the First National label, polished them off with some good English and layout work, and then said: "Behold, these are of my making." That's why I say the focus is wrong. Mr. Hodkinson has it within his ability to do a great deal to foster the open market, freedom for the exhibitor, practical distributon and other things, but why enshadow his plans in an announcement of them that steals the thunder of some one else. I wonder what has been the thoughts of exhibitors who read the obvious inference in that ad—exhibitors who, for more than a year, have been booking First National's releases on an open market, independent basis.

I inject personalities into this because it has a direct relation to the questions of distribution which you requested me to comment on. You know. Mr. Hodkinson knows, Mr. Zukor knows, the publisher of every other trade journal—and there are only five of them—knows that the first real step toward an open market and its attendant exhibitor advantages was taken just about a year ago. The exhibitors know this, as well. And it wouldn't diminish an iota their appreciation to Mr. Hodkinson for taking the step he has announced to know that he was following a precedent. But it does raise a doubt in their minds when he, or any one else, tries to take credit, by inference or veiled statements, for being the first to inaugurate the open market policy. It jars their confidence, and this works an irreparable harm to what otherwise might prove a most advantageous proposition for them and the distributors adopting it. It gives just cause for them to question the sincerity behind such announcements, and I, for one, dislike to see any champion of open booking suffer from avoidable attitudes.

I have been told that Paramount plans, next fall, to offer its releases strictly on their individual merits—in other words, to adopt an open market booking policy with exhibitors. I hear, too, that Select, Metro, Fox and one or two others are about to do the same thing in a far more definite way than they have in the past. Perhaps I am misinformed, but if such is not their intention at the moment, they will be forced to it by the exhibitors.

From its inception First National has had no other policy than that of open booking. We have not made a release by any other method. Therefore, from present rumors and indications, it seems that next fall will find every producer or distributor of consequence pursuing that policy. What, then, becomes of the situation?

Every distributor will have his own complement of exchanges for the physical functions of distribution. We will have salesmen, bookers, clerks, shipping departments, and so on. And each distributor will have the same number of exhibitors as prospects. No exhibitor will be tied, bound and hemmed in by program contracts. He can pick and choose at will. He can select and book the kind of productions best suited in story, theme, star, direction and general substance of subject matter, to his particular clientele.

This condition will mean that every producer, every star, every independent director, will stand strictly on his or her own ability as a maker of quality productions. An inferior release will have no supporting props. Rather an ideal condition for exhibitors. The industry cannot eliminate the distributor. His position in the scheme of things is most essential. But wherein is it at all an important matter, with a general policy of open market releases among all companies, to ponder whether the distributor is the agent of a co-operative exhibitor organization or the representative of a group of producers? His associates on the certificate of incorporation won't bother the exhibitor in booking. The exhibitor will want two things, quality pictures and effective, practical advertising aids to help him in getting patronage for them.

The open market will not reduce the demand for pictures. It will increase it. Good productions will be given longer runs. That will mean more gross booking days and larger total rentals for the producers.

Remarking upon the inquiry from the exhibitor whose letter prompted you to invite this discussion, you ask: "What is his guarantee of good pictures—and enough good pictures?"

The open market will automatically eliminate incompetent producers and unpopular featured players. It may not bring a perfect production in every release, but it will compel the producers to take greater pains and apply more effort to obtain quality. This will have its benefits for every exhibitor.

Then you ask: "What is his guarantee of the right rental prices?"

No guarantee can be given. If a distributor demands an excessive rental, the exhibitor pays it and cannot make a proper proportion of profit, he will not book another production of the calibre at the price. His competitor may, but he'll learn, too.

You query: "Should these concerns (distributors) be exhibitor owned?"

Why not? They have demonstrated their ability to work together successfully. They have raised the devil with the program system and its pernicious practices. They have encouraged certain stars and producers to create a new standard in screen entertainment. They do not seek monopolies. They do not commit actions that are hardships on exhibitors. They do not restrict producers. They do not waste their pooled funds in wanton advertising. AND THEY CANNOT ADOPT OR FOSTER POLICIES OR PRACTICES THAT ARE DETRIMENTAL TO EXHIBITOR INTERESTS BECAUSE AUTOMATICALLY THEY ATTACK THEIR OWN WELFARE.

To quote you again: "Should distribution be controlled by the producer, or is it healthier for the industry, and more profitable to producer and exhibitor, that the distributor be an entirely free agent, selecting and selling on merit?"

Frankly, it doesn't matter who controls distribution, or how it is controlled, so long as the exhibitors can book productions on their individual merits. First National Exhibitors' Circuit is an organization of big, successful exhibitors, owning and financing a concern that is a distributing company. Their theatre interests are a separate and distinct matter. Could a distributing company free from exhibitor or producer influence perform better for exhibitors generally? Could Mr. Hodkinson or any other independent distributor give the exhibitors or the producers a better proposition than Mary Pickford's productions independent of any others; the Chaplin comedies on an individual basis, the Roosevelt release without appended booking clauses, the new Anita Stewart specials free from demands that the theatre owners book unprofitable stuff—which we could have had in any quantity without a nickel in advance and at attractive percentage divisions—as the premium for renting proven money makers?

It's not the coat the distributor wears

First National Meeting in New York

Twenty-six Franchise Holders Meet Week Beginning April 21 at Hotel Astor in Second Annual Session—Exchange Managers Gather in the East at the Same Time

TWENTY-SIX theatre owners and operators, among the largest in the country, convene in New York City, April 21, as members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The occasion is the second annual meeting of the franchise owners of the Circuit.

Simultaneously the managers of the twenty-six First National exchanges, owned and operated by these exhibitors, will hold their first annual convention in New York.

Both conventions are held at the Hotel Astor, which, for the week beginning Monday, April 21, is First National's official headquarters.

Plans for the meeting of the exhibitor members of the Circuit include the announcement, by the Board of Directors for 1918-1919, of new contracts recently entered into by First National.

Joint Convention

The joint convention of franchise owners and their exchange managers is a form of coordinated effort said to be without precedent in the operation of a distributing or exhibiting organization. Plans made by the members for the purchase and releases of productions will be referred to the convention of exchange managers, where the commercial problems concerning them will be debated and uniform sales campaigns adopted for the distribution of the releases.

In several instances the franchise owners will be accompanied by men associated with them in their respective theatre enterprises, and who, by virtue of their financial and executive interests in the exhibiting activities of these members, are directly interested in First National.

A number of the branch managers will be present with their assistants and leading salesmen, to whom the trip to New York will mark their first visit to the home offices of the Circuit.

It was just a year ago that the first annual meeting of the stockholders of the original exhibitors' co-operative organization was held in New York. This was less than a year after the formation of First National by J. D. Williams, its manager. Up to the time of its initial membership assembly the Circuit had made comparatively few releases. Its announced policy of "big specal feature attractions only, distributed on the open market system," had found slight favor among the stars and producers.

Chaplin First

Charlie Chaplin was the first of the more popular stars to recognize its value as the true test of ability, the officials state, and as a fair and equitable booking method for the exhibitors. His first special, "A Dog's Life," was presented at the Strand theatre, New York, the week of the first annual meeting.

The box-office receipts for the seven days is declared to have given the members ample justification for their confidence in the policy which they advocated as exhibitors, and for the promotion of which they had obligated themselves financially.

Authorization was given the board of directors to proceed with negotiations for contracts for the productions of other stars, to be marketed through the Circuit on an independent basis. Within the year First National has released through the theatres operated by its members "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany," "Italy's Flaming Front," "The Romance of Tarzan," three additional features starring Madame Petrova, "Our Teddy," and "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," in addition to signing distributing agreements with stars that have given First National the second Chaplin production, "Shoulder Arms," and two of the series of special Anita Stewart attractions, "Virtuous Wives" and "A Midnight Romance."

"Daddy Long Legs"

One of the most widely heralded activities of the Circuit was its contract with Mary Pickford for three special feature productions. The first of these, "Daddy Long Legs," will be released very soon. This was followed by a contract with Norma Talmadge for twelve specials, and an arrangement with Jack Pickford for three features.

Announcement of the other contracts recently signed will be made to the members at the meetings next week.

Chief of the official tasks confronting the stockholders is the election of a board of directors for 1919-1920 and the discussion of plans for extension of the Circuit's interest during the coming year.

Among Those Present

First National members who will be present are: Fred Dahnken, A. J. Jones, H. Schwalbe, T. L. Tally, Robt. Lieber, E. M. Mandelbaum, J. H. Kunsky, H. T. Nolan, W. H. Swanson, E. H. Hulsey, J. B. Clark, A. H. Blank, J. D. Williams, Max Speigel, Nathan Ascher, Adolph Linick, E. B. Johnson, Henry Brouse, E. V. Richards, Moe Mark, T. E. Larson, E. I. Church, F. V. Fischer, Frank Ferrandini, Fred Levy, W. P. Dewees, Wm. Sievers, Thos. Saxe, Tom Moore, P. J. Schaefer, A. J. Gillingham, N. H. Gordon, R. A. Rowland, Jacob Fabian, M. L. Finkelstein, A. Freedman, T. H. Boland.

Branch managers who will be in attendance at the convention of First National exchange executives include: B. Cunningham, Harry Scott, W. J. Heenan, Floyd Brown, L. Bickel, W. E. Lusk, A. C. All Set for New York on "Unpardonable Sin"

New York City is the next citadel which the Harry Garson forces plan to assault with "The Unpardonable Sin." The big picture, starring Blanche Sweet under the personal direction of Marshall Neilan, is scheduled to open at the renovated Broadway theatre, Friday evening, May 2, for an indefinite engagement of which great things are expected.

Crowds in Detroit, where the picture was given its premiere at the Broadway Strand theatre, were said to be very large. It will be interesting to discover whether the same interest will be shown in New York, which "Bill" Rudolph, Mr. Garson's eastern representative, has called the "city of hard-boiled eggs."

Mr. Rudolph has been in Chicago doing work preliminary to the opening of "The Unpardonable Sin" at the new Jones, Linick & Schafer theatre in the Loop district, the Randolph, Sunday, April 20. During his absence, the Garson interests in New York, in so far as they pertain to "The Unpardonable Sin," were being looked after by Herbert H. Sonborn, general sales manager.

Most of the territory on the picture has already been sold, the most recent announcement being the purchase of Kentucky and Tennessee by Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville.

Houses Combine with Marcus Loew

All the motion picture interests of Cleveland were vitally affected by an amalgamation, last week, of three of the leading and most prominent photoplay houses in the city with Marcus Loew. By the arrangement entered into between the reprsentatives of the Cleveland theatres and Mr. Loew, the Stillman, Mall, Alhambra, and Euclid will all be operated on the Loew circuit, and will have the advantage of the Loew booking policy

Ten Cents in Los Angeles Minimum Admission

Los Angeles is now a 100 per cent ten-cent town, as all of the managers of theatres charging five cents, advanced their admission prices to ten cents beginning April 1, when war tax of one cent was added to all five-cent tickets.

This will not in any way affect the general business of the theatres, inasmuch as the five-cent houses were in most instances small ones out of the better business district of Los Angeles. In all there were nine five-cent houses.

Five Per Cent Tax Ousts Reel Charge

It is announced from Detroit that Michigan exhibitors are gradually formulating plans for the payment of the new 5 per cent. rental tax which goes into effect May 1. Geo. W. Trendle, of the John H. Kunsky enterprises has notified his auditors that the tax is to be added to the rental on films whether the contracts for pictures call for the rental or not. In other words Mr. Trendle says that if the exhibitor doesn't pay the tax to the exchange he must remit directly to the Government, and that it is simpler and easier to pay through the film exchange.

The new tax replaces the 15 cents per reel tax which is now being charged to exhibitors. In this connection, what with the placing of a government tax on candy, clothing, soda fountain drinks and other things, exhibitors generally will raise their prices of admission on May 1 to cover this charge.

Cleveland Houses Raise Admission

Cleveland, O. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Cleveland motion picture theatres have raised their admission prices from 15 and 20 cents to 20 and 30 cents. The new scale went into effect last week.

This move, which has been contemplated for some time by all the theatres here, has, so far, become operative only in the larger of the first-run houses. The neighborhood houses feel the necessity of increasing their admission prices so as to compensate them, in part, for the excessive taxations with which they have been burdened, but they are watching the effect of the raise upon the larger houses before putting a new scale into force. The theatres which have raised their prices are the Stillman, Standard, Strand, Metropolitan, Orpheum, Mall and Alhambra. The higher price, however, includes the war tax, and obviates the necessity of dealing with pennies, a matter of serious consideration to the exhibitor.

Laemmle Returns from Coast Visit

Following a visit of three days in Chicago, one day in Omaha and one day in Salt Lake City, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Co., returned to New York April 15 from his first semi-annual visit to Universal City.

Mr. Laemmle spent eight weeks at the Pacific Coast studios, during which time he supervised the production of several forthcoming Universal features, among them a second master-picture now being photographed under the direction of Allen Holubar and featuring Dorothy Phillips.

According to Mr. Laemmle, the erection of new laboratories, several new studio buildings, the return of many technical helpers from the war and generally improved conditions at Universal City will make it possible for Universal to make up a loss of eight weeks in its producing schedule before the first of June.

that matters. It's the pigment in his commercial skin—pictures, life blood of the industry—that concern the exhibitor. To anticipate a little opportunity for criticism at this point, I acknowledge that any distributing agency, no matter what its family affairs, must be conducted on a business-like, economical, practical basis, to be worthy of existence and patronage, no matter how good its releases may be.

One more quotation from your editorial: "What about service with the picture? Who will guarantee it and how?"

Can you guarantee to the exhibitor better service as a trade journal than he can get anywhere else? You may, but he won't believe you until you prove it in practice. If your service to the exhibitor proves by comparison with that the other trade journals render to be the best obtainable, then he'll buy the News and read it. So it is with service to exhibitors on releases. The open market booking policy is going to make "service with the picture" more important, more vital, to exhibitors than ever before. First National has learned that, in the year and a half that it has stood alone as an open market distributing agency. No matter how excellent a production is, no matter how great its box-office value may be, irrespective of the popularity and drawing power of the star or title, if it is released independently, its complement of exhibitor advertising and publicity aids has got to be strictly in keeping with the release in every particular. We have withheld releases for two and three weeks, while the advertising and publicity departments completed their work. We knew that if the production was sent out, and it was not properly advertised, if exhibitors lacked that important link in its success, it would reflect at the box-office. An independently released special attraction is like a high-class executive in a new position. He isn't worth a damn if he hasn't the materials in his organization to work with. He may barely get by through sheer pluck and merit, but he will not achieve anything like the results of a man in a similar position who has the best available tools to work with.

No producer or distributor can guarantee perfect advertising service to the exhibitor. But he can promise the exhibitor that he will employ the best talent he can to provide that service. Then it is up to the exhibitor to determine, in box-office results, whether the particular distributor or producer is any judge of capable service department men. If he decides adversely, and thinks that another distributor has a much better idea of service for him, the open market leaves him free to change.

In conclusion permit me to indulge in a brief summarization of comparatively recent film history. Two years ago this month more than a score of prominent exhibitors met in New York for the first time as the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. They had just released the first production of their contract for twelve by Charlie Chaplin. The industry generally discounted their chances for success. You

Plans for Drive on West Coast in Loan

Plans now being made in Los Angeles provide that the motion picture industry shall take a very important part in the Fifth, or Victory, loan drive, beginning April 21, in Southern California. Perhaps the most spectacular feature will be that of the aerial drive in which actors and directors, it is now planned, shall take part.

As in the third and fourth drives, the motion picture industry of Los Angeles will be in charge of the central public meetings for the drive, and conduct a series of twenty-one at Pershing Square, which is in the center of the city. Committees have been organized at all of the studios, and they will co-operate with the Pershing Square series of meetings, which will be under the management of Carl Jessen, representative of Motion Picture News.

Harry Leonhardt of the California theatre, Los Angeles, has been named chairman of the theatre organizations; A. P. Michael Narlian, chairman of the exchange committees. D. W. Griffith, who is serving as chairman of the Motion Picture Committee, Twelfth Federal Reserve District, will supervise the drive in the studios.

Cleveland Exhibitors to Fight Music Tax

While it is stated that no attempts will be made to fight the constitutionality of the music tax fathered by certain music publishers the exhibitors in and around Cleveland have held meetings in which they have registered a decided protest against the imposition of a tax on all music played in their theatres.

They agreed to play as much untaxable music as it is possible to secure, and are compiling lists of untaxable music suitable for motion picture theatres.

Furthermore it is reported that the Ohio exhibitors have organized a defense fund which they expect to add to daily.

It is asserted that this fund will be used to protect any of them who might become involved in any lawsuit with music firms or organizations.

Producers Father Bill

A bill known as No. 539, introduced by Senator Charles Lyon, of Los Angeles, is up for passage before the California Legislature, which is said to be beneficial to the producers of the motion picture industry. Advice from Sacramento is that the bill was introduced at the request of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, of which W. J. Reynolds is secretary.

The bill provides that parties who agree to work, and then desire to break their contracts, may be subject to injunction, as well as other possible employes, which will tend to prevent the breaking of contracts. The particular clause of the bill which provides this reads:

"To prevent the breach of a contract other than a contract in writing for the rendition or furnishing of personal service from one to another, the performance of which would not be specifically enforced."

Letter Hints at William Fox's Big Plans

Has Lines Out for New Stars and Intends to Make Dramas and Spectacles on Historic European Sites—Will Not be War Pictures, Says the Producer

A LETTER to all Fox managers giving the first information of big plans now under way by Fox Film Corporation was sent out from the New York offices of the organization this week. The letter discloses that William Fox, now in Europe, is negotiating with new stars well known and with some foremost writers. Mr. Fox, it is made known, has spent several days upon the battlefields of France and in other points of interest, picking locations and arranging to use historic spots as motion picture backgrounds.

It is declared the new pictures will not be war films, but that they will be dramas and spectacular productions played by American companies upon the battlefields instead of upon the hills of Fort Lee or Hollywood.

Answer to Inquiries

The letter which makes this announcement to Fox managers follows:

"I know you are beginning to wonder what the Fox Film Corporation has in store for the exhibitors and the millions of movie fans for the coming year. I have no doubt you have begun to receive inquiries from the live exhibitors of your territory.

"I have just received a series of cables from Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan which indicate that next fall the Fox Film Corporation will be in the market with a series of the most spectacular productions which the film industry has ever seen.

"Those of us who know Mr. Fox and know his way of keeping just one jump ahead of popular desire, expected some such thing as this when he and Mr. Sheeman went abroad. I think the newspaper interviewers in London must have divined something of Mr. Fox's purposes and plans, for I notice that a writer for the Bioscope, one of the leading London periodicals, after describing him as the 'living embodiment of all that stands for what is best in the world of pictures' and 'a man of indomitable courage and of resourcefulness and inexhaustive ideas,' intimates that Mr. Fox come to the Old World 'to discover whether it is not possible to utilize the motion picture in welding together the bonds of unity that President Wilson's League of Nations is destined to promote.'

"This judgment of Mr. Fox and his mission was written upon his arrival in London. Since then both he and Mr. Sheehan have been extremely active.

Details at Convention

"Naturally, Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan will disclose to you the full detail of their world-wide, gigantic program at the coming convention of the Fox organization. Nevertheless I think it is proper that I should give you a hint of what may be expected.

"From the cablegrams which I have received, I can assure you that Mr. Fox contemplates some wonderful productions to be made on the other side with American casts and our American stars. Among the things which we may anticipate as the result of the negotiations now being carried on by Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan on the other side are:

William Fox

FIRST: New stars of world-wide fame. Stars who are the equal of those who now stand at the head of our own group; and you and the exhibitors who play them know that the box office drawing power of these stars is unexcelled by any in the land.

SECOND: Stories by the most celebrated authors of today—men and women of world renown.

THIRD: These stories to be filmed in the old world spots which are today the points of keenest interest to the entire American population. They are spots of indellible memory to those two million boys who went across the water to fight. Every American who sent a loved one to the other side—yes, every American who reads the newspapers and keeps pace with the time, is now wishing that he could go to the other side and see the battlefields of France. Thousands will go.

hind will have the same opportunity to see these wonderful historic spots that the favored few travellers will have.

"I am not sure but that they will view them in even a more interesting light. For instead of viewing these points of interest when they are cluttered with hosts of tired

"But through the productions planned by Mr. Fox, the millions who must stay be-and dusty fellow-travellers, they stay-at-home movie fans will see them as the setting for romance, drama and spectacle.

"Think of the wonderful moment in a motion picture in which an episode of intense dramatic emotion is enacted within the shadow of the shell-battered Rheims Cathedral!

"Think what it would mean to you who will probably never see Verdun in actuality, to see upon the screen the players in a modern drama of life and heart interest, living their parts on the very spots which not so long ago were a seething battle cauldron.

"These battlefields, these points of great historic importance will only be incidental scenery—"locations"—to the great love stories, human dramas and big spectacles for the production of which Mr. Fox is now planning.

"Other scenes will be laid in Monte Carlo, Rome, Milan and other points of old-world fame. These productions will be costly of course, but they will be made possible through the expansion of the Fox Film Corporation and the extension of its studios and producing facilities to France and England. Verdun, The Marne, Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood and other historic spots will be almost as easily available for locations as the hills of Fort Lee or the outskirts of Hollywood.

"With the knowledge that this news you now have for exhibitors will be the best news for them and their patrons which has ever been announced by any film corporation, I am,

"Sincerely,

"JACK G. LEO,

"Vice President, Fox Film Corporation."

Mr. Fox is expected to return some time in May.

Hollander to New York from Minneapolis

Harry L. Hollander, at one time connected with the New York exchange of Fox Film Corporation, and for the past three-and-one-half years in the mid-Western territory, has returned to New York City, and is now connected with the Select Pictures Corporation Exchange in the Godfrey Building.

Mr. Hollander was salesman for nearly two years for the Minneapolis Exchange of Fox Film Corporation and later allied himself with the Select Exchange in Minneapolis. Manager Harry Rathner, of that exchange, declares that Mr. Hollander was high man in Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas for Select, and possessed the highest confidence of the exhibitors.

Green Room Ball

It was announced this week that everything is in readiness for the seventeenth annual dress rehearsal of the Green Room Club, which will be held at the Hudson theatre on Sunday night, April 20.

Minneapolis Territory Set for Loan Drive

Motion picture theatres of the Northwest territory served by Minneapolis fired their opening gun in the campaign to put over the Fifth Liberty Loan by showing special film subjects on Sunday, April 6.

E. R. Pearson, manager of the Minneapolis First National exchange, is chairman of the Minneapolis committee having charge of the distribution of the 157 Victory Loan prints allotted to this territory.

To insure the showing of each print in some theatre during the drive, Manager Pearson has urged every exhibitor who does not show each day of the week to notify him what days he does not show. In this way Mr. Pearson plans to avoid booking prints for the use of the exhibitor on days that are dark.

Schedules have been furnished each exhibitor showing where each print is to be forwarded. While 157 prints have a maximum possibility of 4,500 showings in thirty days, the theatres of this territory use about 25,000 shows in that period.

In view of this fact, Mr. Pearson has urged and been promised co-operation from exhibitors to the end that maximum showings of the Liberty Loan subjects are assured.

Motion Picture Club Ball a Success

On Friday evening, April 11, at the new Hotel Commodore, New York City, the Motion Picture Club of America held its inaugural ball. The event took place in the grand ball room of the Commodore and was well attended by exhibitors of New York, together with a few producers and stars. The reception committee arranged for several entertainers to be present, who sang and gave exhibition dancing between the general dancing of the evening.

William V. Hart was the prime mover in making the first ball of the Motion Picture Club a reality. On the Committee of Arrangements he was assisted by I. N. Hartstall.

Those on the reception committee were: Herman Jans, chairman; Charles M. Rosenthal, Lee A. Ochs, Chas. A. Haring, Fred. Dollinger, Max Oestreicher, Morris Needle, J. William Brandon, Charles Steiner, Louis W. Blumenthal, Jack Schwartz, Samuel Rhonheimer, Samuel Boch and M. J. Gerson, secretary.

C. E. Moore Weds Miss Bain

Carlos E. Moore, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was married in New York City on April 10 to Miss Sade Bain, of New York.

Miss Bain is an artist of note in screen work, having been associated with Siegmund Lubin, of Philadelphia, and with Edgar Lewis in his production of Rex Beach's novel, "The Barrier."

She has recently been with the Famous Players and Fox companies, and played with Leah Baird in Harry Raver's Four-Star production of Augustus Thomas' stage success, "As a Man Thinks."

Los Angeles Film Board Praised by Goldwyn

The manner in which members of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade attacked the proposed legislation in Arizona, which would have caused that State to become movieless, has been the cause of the exchange managers of Los Angeles who constitute the membership of the Board of Trade, to receive numerous complimentary letters and telegrams from producers, distributors and exhibitors. One of these addressed to the Board of Trade is from Samuel Goldwyn, and in part reads as follows:

> "Please accept my hearty congratulations on the result of your admirable work in connection with inducing Governor Campbell of Arizona to veto the act, which if ratified, would have imperilled the future of the motion picture industry in that state.
> "It is such decision and determination that you have shown that are needed to protect the industry, and those who are working for its betterment, from unjust legislation and censorship which seek to restrict its natural development. Only by co-operation is it possible to accomplish what you have done; and if every person reached by motion pictures would express himself with equal vigor there would be no question of interference with the people's most popular form of recreation and instruction."

Sol Lesser to New York

After supervising the international premier of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," with the Mack Sennett chorus at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, Sol Lesser returned to San Francisco the latter part of last week to personally see that the opening of "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Tivoli theatre was made an event.

Following his work there, Mr. Lesser left for New York on Thursday, April 10, where he will spend several weeks in connection with the distribution of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," and its presentation at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago and other Eastern cities.

Harry Garson, producer of "The Unpardonable Sin," accompanied Mr. Lesser to San Francisco.

Aronowitz of Des Moines Visits New York

Sam Aronowitz, well known in the Mid-Northwest territory for his film activities in the distributing and selling line from both Minneapolis and Des Moines, is now in New York looking over the State Rights market.

He is particularly desirous of securing Iowa rights on two or three special features which he proposes to exploit himself from Des Moines as a headquarters.

Mr. Aronowitz is registered at the Astor. He states that Motion Picture News covers his territory like a blanket.

Young Zittel Dies

C. F. Zittle, Jr., only son of C. F. Zittel, well known as "Zit," died April 15 at the home of his parents in New York. He was nineteen years old, and had recently been appointed assistant to his father.

The funeral was held Friday at noon from the Martin Picks Chapel, 122d Street and Lenox Avenue, Dr. Stephen A. Wise officiating. Burial was at Woodlawn.

California Exhibitors Re-elect MacDonald

After serving two years as president of the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association, F. A. MacDonald, owner of the Portola theatre, Los Angeles, and a local attorney, was at the annual meeting Wednesday, April 9, re-elected to succeed himself.

The only other candidate in opposition was J. S. Lustig, of the Starland theatre, and following a vote the election of MacDonald was made unanimous. Other officers elected were: J. S. Lustig, first vice-president; Herman Bosley, second vice-president; Glenn Harper, secretary; J. M. Young, treasurer; W. Wyatt, sergeant-at-arms. Both Harper and Young succeed themselves. The trustees are: J. M. Young, Mike Gore, F. A. MacDonald, J. S. Lustig, Glenn Harper, W. Wyatt, Herman Bosley, H. J. Seiler and J. U. Anderson.

The annual meeting was attended by less than half of the membership, which totals ninety. Reports made by retiring officers and various committees, show the organization in a financially successful and growing condition which has been instrumental in doing much good for theatre owners.

Next week more than a score of prominent exhibitors will meet in New York for the second time as the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Any exhibitor, any distributor, any producer, any star, any trade journal, can review their progress as a co-operative concern, and from the facts of their contracts with Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Norma Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Jack Pickford and the several new ones to be announced next week, they can quickly decide whether or not the industry has not had, for many months, an active example of the possibilities of an open booking policy to stars, producers and exhibitors.

Very truly yours,
First National Exhibitors' Circuit,
Manager J. D. Williams.

"House Divided" Shown to Press and Trade

J. Stuart Blackton's special production, "A House Divided," the United States rights to which were acquired last week by Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation for distribution through the Film Clearing House, Inc., was shown to the members of the daily and trade press this week at the Independent Sales' projection room, and was pronounced, it is said, the best of the independent productions made by Mr. Blackton. Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson, William Humphreys and Sally Crute have the principal roles.

The original production was seven reels, but was cut to six to make it stronger and more actionable.

Sign This Resolution for Your Own Help

IN this issue there appears the second of the series of articles by successful managers giving their ideas of advertising, telling the policies they pursue and the reasons why they do this. This one is from Jack Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, O.

Mr. Kuhn's advertising ranks among the most artistic through the country. He is fortunate in that he gets good printing from the Cleveland papers and therefore he is able to use half tones with good effect. Exhibitors who get poor printing will not be able to follow his plan successfully, but right here is a point to bear in mind—that you can often improve your printing by getting in touch with your paper, asking for cooperation and possibly finding out what is the matter with your cuts.

But this is incidental. We want to call your attention to one sentence in the article by Mr. Kuhn where he says: "I frequently find great help in the press books of the various distributors and I do not hesitate to use them."

There is a lot that could be improved in the exploitation matter that comes from most of the companies, but we are glad to find that at least one leading exhibitor pays this tribute, for we believe that there are a lot of managers who could get a lot of help from this ready prepared material if they would study the possibilities more carefully.

IMPORTANCE of this series of articles was commented on from a new point of view the other day. These articles are being printed purely for the benefit of the exhibitor, but the advertising mana for one of the biggest companies finds that there is another benefit from them:

"That's a great plan in getting the best advertisers of the country to tell how they advertise and why. Certainly there will be no excuse for us, after this series has come to an end, if we do not know just the sort of advertising matter that most of the exhibitors want. Of course, there will always be a great deal of individuality in the work of the exhibitors and even if it were possible it would not be desirable for all of them to follow the same set plan. But these articles are going to show us just what results the showmen are trying to achieve."

Therefore these articles will benefit not only the showmen of the cities, but of the smaller communities in getting them better material from the exchanges. And these articles are not to be confined to the larger cities, though, of course, we are not going to print matter except from those who are really trying to do things better than others.

And while we cannot promise that all of these men will have the time to answer inquiries from the individual exhibitors we will be glad to get the solution of any problem that may come up through these discussions.

HERE is another way in which these articles will help you. You should have arrangements already made with the newspapers whereby the same man or men prepare your advertising all the time and you should be in touch with that man, or at least the advertising foreman so that your own ideas will be understood. It will be a good idea to call the attention of these articles to the man who does your work.

Although the reproductions that are made here have to be greatly reduced they are sufficiently large to get the general idea and any printer of intelligence can understand just what you want by these examples.

And this brings up a point: One reason why much of the motion picture advertising is bad is because there is no trouble taken with it in the newspaper office. The printers in many instances have found that they can put anything over on the theatre man, while the same sort of a work would draw a terrible "holler" and probably loss of business from a merchant. The printer takes advantage of the fact that the average exhibitor does not know a great deal about advertising. With these articles you can see the results that you want to obtain, and have something concrete on which to base your complaint.

FROM this time on let all of us determine that there will be a little improvement in motion picture advertising generally during the summer. We know that this is the season when a lot of managers mistakenly let down in their activities because it is the summer season. Of course, that is absolutely the wrong thing to do, for at the season when business is inclined to fall off there should be all the more effort put forward in exploitation.

We called attention last week to some changes made in "Your Ideas and Ours." We are giving attention here to just as much of the advertising and as rapidly as possible. In cases where you want speedy action we are glad to give the advice by mail.

We are willing to put on more steam—LET US KNOW WHEN WE CAN HELP YOU.

When Newspapers Balk, This Theatre Man Puts Whole City to Work for His Picture

LAST time we heard of William H. Branch he had the whole city of St. Paul talking about the "Fairy Tale Week" that he put over with the exploitation of "Snow White." Now he is down in San Antonio, Texas, attending to the exploitaton work of the Royal, Empire and Princess theatres.

In this case the picture was "The Forfeit," which was made in San Antonio, and on the face of it there should have been no trouble in getting the cooperation of the newspapers of that city—of which there are two. Local quarrels had caused the newspapers to adopt a policy of not mentioning the picture, though it was a local product.

But there is generally a way to do this, if you have the enterprise and that is the middle name of Mr. Branch—spelled, of course, the H'English way. But here is his own account of the stunts that he used and the way that he got a six-day run for his picture, something that had never been accomplished in the history of the Empire theatre, which seats 1,820:

"Since the end of the war, the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce, which was largely responsible in making San Antonio the home of several army cantonments and flying fields and incidentally the military capital of America, has been casting its eyes about for something new to keep up San Antonio's prosperity. That they were casting envious eyes at Los Angeles and its film progress, I knew. They were making arrangements toward bringing Maclyn Arbuckle, the stage star, and the Wharton Brothers of Ithaca to this city at the time. So I saw in the Chamber of Commerce, the way of the least resistance in putting over this picture. I pointed out to them that in boosting this picture they would also be boosting San Antonio as a film center. They saw my point, and at my suggestion, asked Maclyn Arbuckle if he would be present and speak at the premiere of 'The Forfeit.' This he agreed to do. The Chamber of Commerce arranged to have its entire membership to attend in a body on the opening night, and gave the picture considerable publicity in their magazine, the space of which is unpurchasable.

"As a local girl who had recently won a beauty contest conducted by a national magazine played a role in the picture, I also arranged for her to be introduced. The fact that two other companies were down on location about San Antonio, gave the idea added impetus, and the members of the two companies were invited to attend and box seats saved for them. Naturally the newspapers fell for anything the Chamber of Commerce was behind, and the publicity that was denied at first was written for us by reporters as news stories.

THE PICTURE MADE IN SAN ANTONIO THAT THE ENTIRE NATION WILL TALK ABOUT

WILL HAVE AN INDEFINITE RUN

This radical change from the Empire policy of booking pictures for a set number of days was made necessary because of the ovation accorded the San Antonio-made photoplay that night, when more than five thousand persons were unable to gain admittance. Judging from last night's attendance "The Forfeit," which was booked for but a three-day run on the Empire screen, will hold sway there for five days, at least.

Here's What Those Who Know Said About "THE FORFEIT"

"No picture could be more interesting."—Mayor Sam C. Bell
"It's the most unique Western I've seen in years."—Maclyn Arbuckle, Famous Stage and Screen Star.
"Holds you as only a great picture can."—Ruth Stonehouse, Star in Numerous Photoplays.
"Truly an exceptional photoplay."—Aubrey Kennedy, Noted Film Director.
"Will turn the eyes of the film world toward San Antonio."—LeRoy Wharton, Producer of "Patria" and other successes.

$10,000 REWARD

Offered for information which will lead to the arrest and capture, dead or alive, of Bob Whitestone, wanted on a charge of cattle rustling. Last seen in the Buckhorn Saloon, San Antonio, December 6, 1918. Height, six feet. Hazel eyes. Brown hair. Dark skin. Weight about 165 pounds.

Sheriff, Bexar County.

Even the sheriff was induced to cooperate

"Though 'The Forfeit' was getting all the publicity of the higher grade that could be desired, there still remained a certain part of the city's populace, who needed to be acquainted with the picture. The kind that turn out only when they are given a stiff jolt, and who as a rule steer clear of a picture which by the quality of its lithographs might be sane, and flock to something with a lurid title.

"San Antonio, though it is a city of 200,000, is but a few miles from the big cattle country, and ranch men and cowboys are common sights in its hotels and on its streets. In fact if there is one thing everyone in San Antonio is familiar with it is cattle. Again, another good maxim to pursue in putting over a picture is to select something of common interest which may be associated with the picture you are pushing and play upon it. The more common it is the greater will be the response.

"In 'The Forfeit' the selection was easy. It was a story of the cattle country, and therefore a story with which San Antonians would be thoroughly familiar. The stiff jolt needed, took the form of an ad offering '$10,000 reward, for information leading to the arrest of a man, dead or alive, wanted on a charge of cattle rustling.' Now such ads were wont to appear in San Antonio papers but a decade ago, and they still do in small town papers in the cattle country, though the reward is not generally so large and the 'dead or alive' clause is omitted. The idea then presented itself that if this ad bore the name of the sheriff of Bexar County of which San Antonio is the county seat, the notice it would attract would be tenfold as it would appear to be genuine.

"A talk with the sheriff brought him around and the ad was published as you see it. It created more talk than anything that appeared in the San Antonio papers since the extra the morning the armistice was signed. At my suggestion the Chamber of Commerce had several of the members paste the ad up on the plate glass display windows of their business establishments, and with the further embellishment of show card ink these window signs were the centers of curious crowds at all times, benefiting the merchant as well as the theatre.

"The opening night of the picture was the biggest in San Antonio picture house annals. For the first time evening dress was in evidence at a picture house here. Members of the film colony in evening clothes occupied the boxes and were the object of the eyes of the audience at all times. The secretary of the Chamber of Commerce made a short speech, lauding the picture and then introduced Maclyn Arbuckle, who told a few humorous stories and likewise praised the picture and then introduced Miss Blanche McGarity, who appeared in the picture. She was smothered under with flowers and cheered by the audience.

"The next morning I followed with an ad carrying the opinions of the mayor and a number of the leading film people regarding the picture. As a result of this bit of exploitation which cost no more than the exploitation on any other feature, 'The Forfeit' instead of playing the Empire for but two days is being held over for six."

TRIED METHODS

That Is the Reason Why We Ask Your Full Co-operation

IT is mighty seldom that you find in these pages suggestions coming from producers or exhibitors telling you what to do with pictures. And those that are printed have to pass our acid test of what we believe to be feasible and profitable.

We want to record here actual results and that is the reason that we keep on asking you that have not yet responded to let us have regularly accounts of live wire things that you do so that others may have the benefit. You need not fear that they will aid any rival for if the competitor is live enough to worry you he is also on the job enough to find out what you are doing.

But the same idea that you have tried may mean dollars for another across the continent. Let's have ALL the live ones—and we can't unless YOU help.

Special Service Book Issued for "Bolshevism on Trial"

Select Pictures has just issued a complete advertising aid on "Bolshevism on Trial." This contains sixteen pages which covers all angles of the production and reproduces the aids that are available. These include the reproduction of a full page display which appeared in the New York Herald and which can be used by exhibitors. A special electro and mat service has been arranged.

Spring Is Idea Time, Says Harold B. Franklin

By Harold B. Franklin

Managing Director, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

"Along the Meadow Brook," latest of Franklin's stage re-creations of famous paintings. An electric fan gave the moving water effect

IN the Spring an exhibitor's fancy should turn to a Spring theme in the operation of his theatre. It is the season of the year that suggests the birth of new ideas, new thoughts and new fulfillments.

These are the days when the theatre must be made more attractive than ever, if it is to compete with the many attractions that are offered to the amusement-seeking public in the great out-of-doors.

In every motion picture theatre there should be some visible effort to brighten up generally. Your patrons have their Spring cleaning at home and they will appreciate it to find that their favorite motion picture theatre is also "cleaning house." Your theatre should reflect the spirit of peace that is in the air, bringing a need for happy surroundings. Now that gaiety rules again, get victory atmosphere.

At Sheas' Hippodrome, we get the Spring atmosphere by placing attractive flowers atop the Marque, giving the effect of hanging gardens, the electric signs are all retouched and varnished and where this is not necessary they are washed. Bay trees are placed at the entrance to the theatre. Hangings are freshened or replaced and the stage is enriched with a new floral setting. Ushers are donned in new light weight uniforms. Our newspaper advertising suggests the Spring atmosphere. The colors used for the lobby displays are lights which give a refreshing "feeling." Even the program cover design is changed to suggest the new season.

For the same reason that you dress up in your best when you want to make an impression, so should your theatre be "garbed" in new Spring clothes so that you will make an impression on your patrons. It indicates progress.

The charm of Spring should be apparent. Eliminate the dark hangings, the heavy uniforms of attendants, in fact, get away from the winter attire and start to introduce the coolness and inviting surroundings of Spring and Summer. It is a good time to break away from monotony and traditions. The enthusiasm with which your public will receive any changes will more than repay the efforts you exert.

One of the reasons that motion pictures are the most popular entertainment in this country is because the management at the exhibition end of the industry is further advanced than any other branch of the theatrical business. The great care with which the modern motion picture theatre is operated and the atmosphere and environment that has been instilled has given it first place in the hearts of the American public.

Innovations of all kinds are a distinct claim for patronage. The 100 per cent theatre must not rest on its laurels.

The theatre into which so much devotion goes in planning and operating is absorbed by the audience and is radiated all over the house. It should always be the aim of every exhibitor to endeavor to get the spirit of the day in the operation of his house, because it will please the most discriminating of your patrons. This is especially true this Spring, when the world is emerging from the desolation of winter and with glorious peace about to settle over the earth once more, we are about to enter a season of unusual merry making, of color, of music, of happiness—and the exhibitor is the man who should be foremost in leading the merrymaking.

Christie Issues Its Own Paper to Help Exhibitors

In order to co-operate with exhibitors who are advertising its comedies, especially the new two-reel specials which are about to be released, the Christie Film Company has started the publication of a four page mabazine called "Film Follies," which will make its appearance each month. It gives the news of the company's activities and includes stories about the players and the pictures, together with reproductions of a number of the stock cuts available. Pat Dowling, who recently joined Christie as publicity director, is the editor.

Two pages from the Orange, Tex., Leader, showing what a small city paper can do in cooperation

ANONYMOUS

We Don't Care for that Form of Stuff for Use Here

WITHIN the past week we have received a half-dozen items which show no trace of where the matter comes from. They may all be genuine enough, but we do not care for anonymous matter here.

Several of these items pretended to be about activities of exhibitors. A couple of others enclosed specimens of very bad advertising and asked what we thought about them. You won't find any of this matter represented in this issue or any other.

We are mighty glad to help any exhibitor in any way possible. We'll do it by mail, at our expense, but sign your name and let us know from whom the matter comes. We want to help, to build up—and certainly not to do knocking for people who are afraid to sponsor their own thoughts.

Little City Down in Texas Show What Can Be Done With Real Cooperation of a Newspaper

BECAUSE the main object of the article was to stir up exhibitors and newspapers to greater cooperation so that both might benefit from more liberal and better advertising and more generous treatment of motion picture news matter, it was necessary to confine the series of survey articles to the large cities, as an undertaking to cover the entire field down to the smallest city and to reproduce the pages here would be impossible.

However, we do mean to encourage the papers that are really doing something and as we told you last week any time that we can be of service to the exhibitors in showing the newspapers how they can build up their photoplay departments, we will be delighted to do so. And at the same time we mean to continue to encourage the papers that are doing things by giving them recognition in this department week after week. But the newspapers that are treated here will have to follow the test of all other exhibitor matter that we print here—worth.

One of the most encouraging things in the entire outlook is the way that the smaller papers are turning toward the motion picture. This means more than appears on the surface. It is a fact that when motion pictures began to get their popularity there was a certain amount of hostility on the part of the newspapers, for which the exhibitor was largely to blame. As a matter of fact the most of the exhibitors then believed that the photoplay was simply a passing fad and they relied on the novelty of it to get their crowds. Then as they progressed a little further they rested their exploitation on a noisy musical instrument in front of the house and on gaudy posters.

Another thing that did not help for better relations with the newspaper was the habit of most of the houses to devoting their screen to advertising slides and therefore putting the theatre in competition wth the newspaper. It was bad enough that the theatre itself did not advertise, but when it came to trying to take money away from the newspaper it was worse. That was not resented so much in the larger cities as in the smaller communities, where it has been, as a rule, harder to convince the motion picture men of the value of regular and liberal advertising. When the smaller cities begin to show progress then it is unquestionably a sign that the photoplay is taking a big stride forward.

All of which is preliminary to pointing to the case of Orange, Texas. Here is a city with a census population of 5,527 and one daily paper. There are four motion picture theatres there and a part of the time one of them is not in operation. Until last August the newspaper, the Leader, paid no attention to motion picture news matter. It printed reading notices from time to time. Advertising was on the same uncertain basis. The theatres cared mighty little about advertising, and sometimes they did, but more often they didn't. Handbills and any old sort of exploitation was resorted to and it was largely a case of the people going down the street and seeing which show they wanted to attend.

But the Leader became interested in motion pictures, and this work was put in charge of a young lady, Miss Edna Beasley. She was enthusiastic and set out to conduct a photoplay department that is really worth while. In no time the theatres were as enthusiastic as she, and you can't find a person in Orange these days that doesn't say this daily department is one of the first things they read when they get their copy of the paper. It appears every day occupying about three columns of space with the reading matter, and generally being set off with a cut. It contains matter not only about the pictures being shown locally, but carries the regular news matter of players and productions. It would be a credit to any paper. It is an especially fine showing for a six page paper.

And the result has been liberal advertising from the theatres. The Strand and the Liberty use considerable space every day in the week as is shown in the two pages reproduced, while the American is well represented, and the Airdrome advertises most of the time.

What has been done in Orange, Texas, can be done anywhere else if the newspaper will take the step and put some one in charge of the work with the enthusiasm. If the exhibitors do not see the value of cooperating with such a department it is a pretty good sign that they belong to the class that won't be in business long.

Exchange Man Pays Tribute to Tom Moore's Judgment

When the Tom Moore's Rialto theatre, Washington, plays a feature subject, it "puts it over" in a manner that no other theatre in the city even remotely approximates in effectiveness. A conspicuous example of the manner in which a tremendous box-office success was scored the week of March 9th, when "A Midnight Romance," with Anita Stewart, was the Rialto's attraction, may be found in the advertising preceding, on the day of and following the opening performance.

The run was such an overwhelming earnest of the public's discriminating sense of advertising values and its confidence in Tom Moore's choice of pictures that B. C. Cunningham, manager of the First National Exchange, in Washington, assembled the advertising matter used in connection with this showing to use in the form of a press sheet in his territory. The press sheet in question is herewith reproduced.

This press sheet was devoted entirely to the Tom Moore presentation. The front cover bears a letter from Mr. Moore which he wrote before the picture was shown and the double-page spread reproduced the advertising that was used in the Washington dailies. The last page is devoted to Mr. Cunningham's tribute to Mr. Moore as a judge of pictures.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

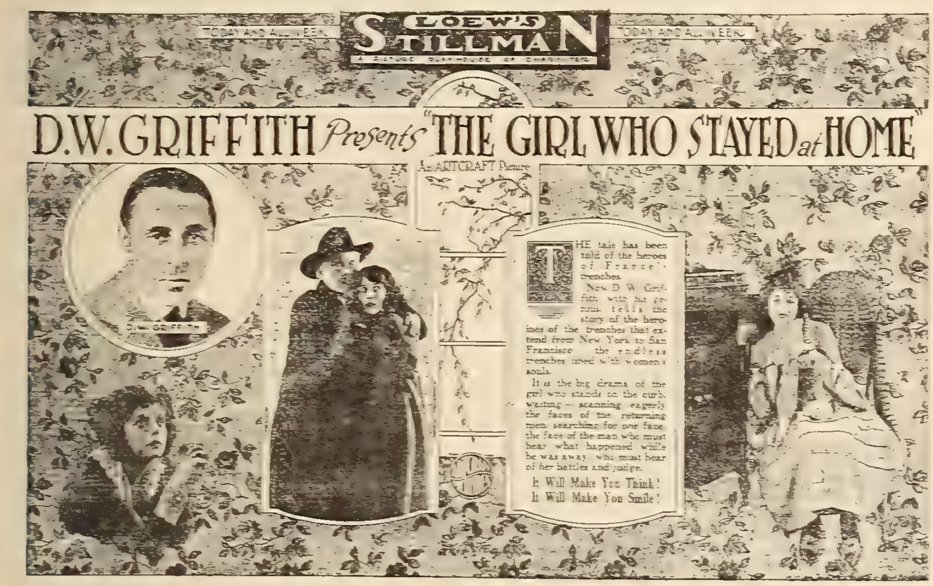
Getting Half-tone Appeal

By Jack Kuhn

Manager, Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, O.

IN exploiting photoplays through newspapers there has always been one thought uppermost in my mind, namely how can I attract the attention of most readers and tell them what I think would be of the greatest interest at a glance. Some times I am unable to do this in a few words, but this happens very seldom.

I also employ a striking half tone of the star I am featuring, and if possible, another one showing a part of the action.



LOEW'S STILLMAN
TODAY AND ALL WEEK

D.W. GRIFFITH Presents "THE GIRL WHO STAYED at HOME"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

D. W. GRIFFITH

THE tale has been told of the heroes of France's trenches.

Now D. W. Griffith with his genius tells the story of the heroines of the trenches that extend from New York to San Francisco — the endless trenches lined with women's souls.

It is the big drama of the girl who stands on the curb, waiting — scanning eagerly the faces of the returning men searching for one face, the face of the man who must hear what happened while he was away, who must hear of her battles and judge.

It Will Make You Think!
It Will Make You Smile!

Four pictures used here, and they tell the story of the offering well. It's a half page.

If I can secure a good photo of the star shown in action that will hook up with the title of the feature, I am sure that I am going to get the best results.

Previous to my regular announcement on Sunday, I frequently use a series of teaser ads, generally using space from 1 to 3 inches. I try to create interest by using snappy sentences appertaining to the action of the picture. In doing this I rarely use any cuts, and confine myself solely to reading matter. I have used half tone cuts on teaser advertising announcing a big production with increased space about 8 to 12 inches and with excellent results.

I use the name cut "Loew's Stillman" and slogan "A picture playhouse of character" as a means of indentity, and never change always using the same style in all the different publications.

Previous to exploiting a feature photoplay it is necessary to "see it" before you can intelligently talk about it, and while reviewing it, to ascertain exactly what possesses the human appeal, and after you have seen the picture and decided what this special appeal consists of, then you have the "material" to play upon for publicity. By human appeal I mean is it a story of love, revenge, sacrifice, etc., or perhaps it may possess all these, but whether it has one emotion or all the emotions you are certainly in a position to tell the public something that will interest them.

So with a small reading notice telling them a part of the story, in a concise manner which I generally use in a box form, and a striking picture of the star, and another photo portraying action and the star's name and title of photoplay brought out prominently I make as direct appeal in few words as possible.

Jack Kuhn

It may seem rather peculiar to some that I at times use pictures of the star and also scenes from the production and more frequently than not several scenes from the same offering. My reason for doing this is very simple. I believe that the people are coming more and more to buying the production itself. Of course they want the big stars because they know that these players are likely to give them the best results, but they want something more than that. They want to know the character of the picture and they want to have some reason for them to come.

It is my belief that when the scene pictures means something that they form the very best selling argument, because you don't have to worry about whether the public will read a lot of small type or not. I know that these displays attract their attention. I am able to get good results from half tones in the newspapers, and employ them almost exclusively. The greater part of the other matter is hand-drawn and I

Your Idea and Ours

AS we have told you a number of times, when you want to use a half tone with a reverse black and white effect there should always be a slight white line left between the cut and the background matter. Otherwise the half-tone will not get the effect that is desired. That is true in the case of this twelve-inch, five-column display of the Strand, Syracuse, N. Y., but the name of the star and the title of the picture have been so well played that the attention is drawn immediately by these big white letters on the black background.

"Common Clay" Is a dramatic story of a human woman—a thriller of city life with a woman as the victim.

"Common Clay" shows us a young girl's soul in the agonies of Golgotha—a girl handicapped by adverse circumstances—telling the innermost secret of a bitter experience and eventually finding a way to face life with renewed courage.

ENTIRE WEEK MARCH 30 "SALOME"

At the right quotations from four of the New York dailies have been taken. These are available in the press book. At the right there is an independent selling argument which says:

> "Common Clay" is a dramatic story of a human woman—a thriller of city life with a woman as the victim.
> "Common Clay" shows us a young girl's soul in the agonies of Golgotha—a girl handicapped by adverse circumstances—telling the innermost secret of a bitter experience and eventually finding a way to face life with renewed courage.

This is all very good, but one thing that is lacking here is the statement that there is a happy ending to the picture. A much more serious omission is that this picture was made from the A. H. Woods' success which ran a year in New York. That certainly should have been played.

Prospering has a hankering to associate with perseverance.

HARD to find a better example of the use of white space than in this ten-inch, eight-column advertisement of the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit. This white space effect was achieved with the working out of the double heart outline and then the designer of this did the correct thing in using the least matter possible for his main display. He counted on putting over such a wallop there that everyone would read the quotations from the New York newspapers at the extreme right and we feel very sure that he succeeded. You will note that the two selling lines have been confined to "A drama of mother love and love of children. An epic of tenderness. The BEST picture you have ever seen."

The smaller type matter at the lower left of the display gave the prices for the engagement and there is a novel effect used for displaying the hours of the performance—a thermometer being used instead of the usual clock.

For simplicity, punch and conviction we haven't seen a better all around display than this one.

The war's over—let camouflage go with it.

IN the face of the fact that H. H. Hicks, manager of the Plaza theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ill., did big business with "The Light of Western Stars" in the face of strong opposition, we are asked how we like this five-column, ten-inch display. We must frankly answer that we don't. It probably attracted attention because unusual space was used, but it is a badly put together display with plenty of mistakes such as spelling the name of the author two different ways and starting a sentence with a quote and then omitting it at the end. There is also repetition occasioned by using a stock ad as the central display and then building matter around it.

As a matter of fact it would have been far more effective to have used a two full column display here with the cut at the top and rules continuing down the column and other matter below. As it is the title of the picture does not stand out as large in the type matter as it does in the cut. We certainly would have played Farnum's name much stronger.

This manager conceived that it would be a good idea to quote from the recommendations of two other Illinois managers that had shown the picture. Good stuff, but he let a lot of trade stuff get in like, "If your next United picture is as good as this one I will make more money than on 'The Birth of a Nation.'" Good stuff for United, but it means nothing to the public.

STRAND THEATRE
"Where All the Big Stars Play"

ONE of the headings in this department says: "From 100 Per Cent to Zero." Here is one that belongs in the hundred per cent class very distinctly and there are mighty few of them that come up to that mark.

Now one only needs to be around motion picture theatres frequently to overhear the comment, "I wonder what has become of Mary Pickford. I haven't seen her in a long time." And motion picture editors everywhere have been kept busy denying all sorts of reports because she hasn't been seen on the screen in a new production for a long time. Therefore Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., does just the right thing in the line calling attention to the fact that "America's sweetheart is back again," and it sells the house along with it by adding "And at the Strand, of course." Then it calls attention to the fact that this is the first picture of her since September. For the benefit of others we are giving the reading matter:

> "Little Mary" has not been seen on the screen in a new production for seven months, and her return is a joyous announcement to thousands of Birmingham movie fans. Mary Pickford, the world's most famous movie star, is as refreshing and sweet as ever—with her curly hair and delightful smile. It's the treat of the season and you will be overjoyed that you saw "Capt. Kidd, Jr."

All of this appears alongside the cut of Miss Pickford and then we have the selling talk on the picture itself, which says:

> Mary had one great failing—she wanted to get rich too quick. And her efforts to accumulate wealth rapidly will make you roar. This story of hidden treasure is as whimsically pleasing as Barrie and as full of genuine humor as one of the old-time Hoyt comedies.

Proper sense of values is shown in the display of the rest of the bill and the announcement for the latter half of the week.

It will be noted that the company advertises only the attractions for the first days of the week and that it is content to let the matter about the later attractions be carried in the reading matter. This is a splendid idea where you can put it over.

We like the way in which separate space is given the Mack Sennett comedy and "Maggie Pepper." It avoids any reference to the double bill stuff and gives a chance to sell each picture separately. But, we'll admit, that after noticing that we are mystified as to why the announcements for the Palace and the Princess theatres should be included under one heading. They should have been separated, for this gives the appearance of selling both pictures instead of inviting the patrons to choose between the offerings, as results with the present arrangements.

Had Noah been an advertiser it would have necessitated a fleet of arks.

LEO A. LANDAU, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, likes to do things "different" and he is constantly pulling something new for he knows all the tricks of the trade. It is shown in this eight-inch, eight-column display. Now in the case of the Hayakawa picture Mr. Labdan has quoted from the criticism that appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and then just to the right of this, under the heading "The Butterfly Management's Opinion," he says:

Now the entire result of this display has been to indicate that he doesn't want to stand for all our critic says, but at the same time he has said more than the NEWS did, but he has done it so cleverly that it is bound to increase confidence in his theatre.

REX theatre, Racine, Wis., started advertising "The Heart of Humanity" heavily on the Wednesday before the Monday opening of the picture with fourteen inches across three columns and kept up the heavy display through its engagement. In most of this advance advertising the announcement of the Alan Holubar was made in separate space from the rest of the bill.

This advertisement is from the Saturday afternoon issue, a total of fifteen inches, four columns, being used while the announcements for the Saturday and Sunday shows were combined in a two-column display alongside. This certainly resulted in attracting all possible attention to this picture. There has been excellent judgment used in arranging the display. This heart itself gets the spirit of the production and then the Rex confined itself to only a few selling lines and then short quotations from two of the Chicago dailies.

Aim counts, but the gun must be loaded.

THIS sixteen-inch, four-column display from the Victory theatre, Tacoma, Wash., is mighty good stuff. As a matter of fact the advertising in Tacoma is far above the average and therefore to attract especial attention a display has to be there with the goods. There could have been some improvement by having used fewer cuts. We have called your attention to the fact that the use of several cuts has to be very carefully done or there will be confusion. We think some results here. Certainly we would have omitted the drawing at the lower left showing a drunken man on the sidewalk in front of the cabaret. It's a mighty safe rule to eliminate from your displays anything that will give offence to any one. Better dodge even a main point of a picture than put in your advertising something that will keep people away. There are a lot of things that get over without giving offence when they are incidental to a picture, but leave a bad taste in the mouth when put in cold print.

This is the motion picture production that has just completed a run of eight solid weeks to packed houses in Los Angeles.

The TURN in the ROAD

BOB was a little ray of light, born mid the chaos of a storm.

Death claimed his mother—bride of a year.

Bob's daddy became a drifter in Chicago's wastes.

Strange as it may seem, this child brought back love and faith to his own father—

Touched the stony heart of a money-mad capitalist—

Kindled flames of love in the soul of lonely June Barker—

Revealed to a minister a secret of salvation to which he had been blind for years

There is an excellent selling argument here and the writer has coupled the leading players up with other productions that Tacomans have seen, for it says: "In the cast are George Nichols, of 'Mickey' fame; Little Ben Alexander, Griffith star; Pauline Curley, Metro favorite; Helen Jerome Eddy, leading woman for George Beban."

Your house will remain yours as long as it is the public's.

THIS one, from the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., is a little late getting attention, but it is too good an example of the out-of-the-ordinary display to allow to get by without comment. It is a case of grabbing the eye so that no one can miss it.

In the first place there is the name of Nazimova strikingly displayed with a reverse effect and then there is a half-tone of the star, which might have printed a little better. Then there is a third appeal with the sketches of "Nazimova's Acrobatic Eyebrows" taken from "Ireland's Passing Show," a series of cartoons well known to the people of Columbus.

There has never been a better line coined than: "Star of a thousand moods," and it applies equally well to any of this star's offerings.

Although "Revelation" was an earlier release than "Eye for Eye," it had not been shown in Columbus, hence the reference.

The little cogs are as necessary to the watch as the mainspring.

HERE is a clever piece of work in playing a star. Evidently Tom Mix has a great big following at the Rialto, San Francisco, and the manager seems to have done the right thing in making his personality dominant in all parts of the display. You will note that the only selling argument used is contained in the statement that this is the star's latest and most thrilling photoplay and that "Tom Mix will thrill you with his many audacious and daring stunts in this touch-and-go story of the West, where men were more dangerous than wild beasts."

Of course the first thing that gets the eye is the reversed effect, white on black, of the name of the star, and then the use of two line cuts exactly alike helps to emphasize the personality point. This display occupies eight inches across four columns.

A considerable improvement on the same idea is seen in the ten-inch, five-column display of the Colonial, Toledo, O. Here there is a little trick work in using the name of the star out of line and in type that dominates the whole thing, but there is more of the selling matter here.

In the first place the use of the two cuts brings before the reader some idea of the action of the picture and then there is a line under the title that says: "There is life and romance as well as thrills in this Tom Mix play."

The Colonial is using a good line with all of the Mix pictures: "The boy that never fakes!" And in this case this striking sentence is followed up with: "No stunts of daring that Tom Mix ever before performed for the screen rival the man death-defying deeds that this daring star does in his latest sensation." Of course this is pretty strong language and in most cases we would not approve it, but here is a more or less of the circus style of picture, depending largely upon the thrills and therefore more or less of the circus style of advertising is justifiable.

You will note that the Colonial never lets the idea of the theatre itself get away and that it used a prominent box to call attention to the fact that all features shown at that theatre are first run. We like the line: "If you hate crowds, come early." It is much better than any of the many others used which suggest that you are mighty lucky to get in at all.

Liberty theatre, Tacoma, Wash., gets even more of the personality idea into its twelve-inch four-column display by the excellent use of a cut against a background of a line drawing. The latter is not particularly well done and in the drawing Mix looks more like he was admiring a sore finger than wielding the trusty six shooter, but that is a minor affair. The main benefit of the drawing is to make the half tone come out all the stronger.

Underneath the title of the picture the Liberty has come very near giving a mighty idea of the character of the picture with a single sentence: "The daring westerner who stopped the wild stampede."

Ordinarily we would say this was mighty good, but the Liberty shows why it could have been improved when it announces: "This is the second of our new first run Fox features." This pre-supposes that Tom Mix is not familiar to Liberty fans and therefore it would have been a good thing to have used a few lines about him.

It is always a good idea, when you start a new service to introduce the stars to the patrons. Of course, they know a lot about them anyway, but don't take any chances on that. Be sure that everyone knows their strong qualities.

It's not the ideas that you have that count, but those you use.

HERE is some mighty effective advertising that is being done by Jean Finley, who prepares the displays for the Queen and Old Mill theatres, Dallas, Texas. Mr. Finley combines the use of cuts and the selling argument on the picture splendidly and for comparatively small pace we believe that he is getting just about the best results. Each of the displays shown here is seven inches across three columns.

In the case of the Tom Moore display there is a freak use of rules that is most effective. The diagonal lines have the effect of concentrating the gaze of the star immediately on the selling argument, which says:

> A valet to puppies all because he loved a beautiful girl.
> She threw him down when he showed his love for the wild night life and the cocktail glass.
> Then he shows her a thing or two and gets a job as man-servant to Mrs. Moneybags and keeps the pups perfumed and powdered and exercised daily in their pink and blue boudoir.
> Then he learns that Mrs. Moneybags is her aunt.
> You'll never know what happened until you see this picture.

There has been another freakish effect obtained by chopping the top of the hair of Ethel Clayton off straight. It was not a question of saving the little space, but to get the white effect between the name plate and the head. Now here is the talk:

> You know this girl—wonderful golden hair, sparkling ivory teeth, lips like a thread of scarlet, and complexion like a rose—that Ethel Clayton, the sunshine girl with Monte Blue in "Pettigrew's Girl," a Saturday Evening Post story by Dana Burnett—a story of Daisy Heath, a chorus girl, that takes you behind the scenes and back of the footlights.

Mr. Finley has the right idea in making the play on the first picture that he has to sell and simply announcing the bill for the latter half of the week. We feel quite sure that this will result in an average greater amount of patronage than the policy of dividing the display.

You wouldn't go bear hunting with bird shot; remember that in your advertising.

HERE is a new wrinkle. Gift's theatre, Cincinnati, realizes the fan interest in motion picture players and when it cannot get the newspaper to print the mattter in the news columns that will help the theatre the most, Gift's pays for the space itself.

GIFTS THEATER

Recently it has been carrying on the same page as the display a one-column cut of some player in the offering. In the case of "The Brand" the picture of Kay Laurel was used because there was a strong reason for this. Ziegfeld's "Follies," of which Miss Laurel was one of the stars, was playing at a legitimate theatre at the time and so Gift's invited the members of the company to attend a performance and see how their former associate succeeded on the screen. In this instance the theatre was able to place the cut right alongside the display.

IT is a mighty easy thing to overdo the matter of quoting newspaper opinion as the sole selling point of a picture. However, the Majestic theatre, Winnipeg, has been able to do this by taking an excerpt from the Chicago Tribune for Priscilla Dean in "Kiss or Kill."

This quotation gives some idea of the character of the production, but we would much rather have added a selling argument in addition. However, we will have to admit that it has the quality of brevity and that coupled with the curiosity arousing cut and the strength of the title that a greater portion of those who read this advertisement went to see this picture to find out what it was all about.

EVENINGS

THIS is a good display except for one thing. We distinctly do not like the idea of advertising "Two big features." It is excusable only when your opposition is such that you have to put on such attractions. The mere appeal to quantity is one that every theatre should try to get away from. Now, the artistic quality of this fourteen-inch triple-column display of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., takes away some of the curse, but it could have been much improved and had the same effect, except much stronger, without giving the bargain counter idea.

In the first place, this could have been advertised as an all-comedy bill, for certainly there are enough laughs in "Maggie Pepper" to warrant that. And then the design of this display almost gets the other, and even better point with the reference to Maggie as "full of push, pep and persistence." Now, any one who has seen Chaplin in "A Night at the Show," certainly knows that he showed those qualities in his role there. Then why not advertise it as such a show all the way through.

We know that many disagree with us about advertising double bills, but we believe that more and more every day you have to sell your theatre and not a "bargain."

It's good to get the spirit of the man who started out in the storm to sell tickets to see the rainbow.

He who fails to put personality in his theatre belongs to the same class as the man who wrote for a doctor and then forgot to sign his name.

prefer that to type for in this way the lettering fits in better with the spirit of the offering.

I have found that even for arranging the displays as they should be it is important to see the picture in advance. One might get the wrong idea of the hunch of a story simply from looking over the stills and every exhibitor knows that he is often sent stills of action that is not shown in the picture. The patron wants to see mirrored on the screen the actual scene that has appeared in the paper and all exhibitors who follow this plan of exploitation should take great care in this particular.

I do not caption the scenes that I use because I always try to make sure that the pictures I have used mean something in themselves. For instance, in the half page display that I used in one of the papers on "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" I used four different pictures, including one of D. W. Griffith. The title was lettered across the half page and the figure of the little cabaret entertainer was placed immediately below the words "Stayed at Home." So it became very evident to everyone that she was the one meant. Toward the left enter I employed a picture of the old Confederate who had never surrendered and the little Franco-American girl taking refuge in his arms. And then at the lower left there was another picture of the same girl kneeling. I believe that this brought out more clearly to the average person the humor and pathos of the story than any mere statement would have done.

In conclusion I would say that I am not entirely original as I frequently find great help from the press books of the various distributors, and I do not hesitate to use them.

Some people figuratively lock their ideas in a safe—where they are hidden from public attention.

Complete Casts of Films Given by Los Angeles Paper

An interesting feature has been added to the Saturday photoplay department of the Los Angeles Express by Monroe Lathrop, editor of the department, which appears weekly under the caption "Who's Who in the Films This Week." The department gives the titles of the film plays, name of the theatre at which the film is being shown, the brand, star, director, cameraman and complete cast of each picture.

The present day method of casting each picture with respect to types, brings together in every film a notable collection of players. Under the stock company plan formerly followed at the studios, one player would continue in a given brand for many pictures, and it was possible for the following of each player to know where his or her pictures could be viewed. The printing of the complete cast gives additional assets in publicity for the theatre over the method of merely mentioning the star which is followed by some publicity departments, newspapers and theatres.

Noble Concentrates on His Lobby in His Long Run with "Heart of Humanity"

IN putting on "The Heart of Humanity," last week Paul ("No-Bull") Noble, manager of the Columbia theatre, in Portland, Ore., followed the theory that when you've got a photoplay that will "deliver the goods" to an audience, you don't have to go much beyond your lobby and your newspaper advertising to get it across with a bang.

"The Heart of Humanity" proved itself in Portland in a private viewing which Sol Baum, manager of the Portland exchange held for exhibitors and officers of principal societies and clubs of the city, and when it was booked for the Columbia it was already assured of the backing of every person who had been in the audience of more than 500 at the private viewing.

Noble concentrated on his lobby. Prior to the opening of the run, he festooned chains of hearts from the top of the building to the edge of the markee announcing the coming attraction. After the opening hundreds of hearts were clustered under the markee and the lobby paintings were displayed to the best advantage in the entrance.

Noble relied upon the picture itself to take care of itself on the inside, and used no special stunts to put it over, with the exception of an eight piece orchestra to handle the musical score.

His method of handling the picture justified itself. Throughout the first week it played to capacity business on the fourteenth day, "Going fine and holding up great," was Noble's testimony. Throughout the run Noble used newspaper space liberally.

Three Special Service Sections Appear in This Issue

Swiping the Moon to Exploit Picture

S. BARRET McCORMICK, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, literally went out and swiped the moon for his campaign in advertising "Virtuous Wives." With the exception of the smallest advertisement used during the run of a week, every one of the displays carried the moon with some expression on the face of the "Man" to fit the scenes that McCormick used in half-tone.

One's attention doesn't need to be drawn to the manner in which the moon fits in with romance, but instead of having a lot of sickly sentimental stuff McCormick really made this moon a feature, and we haven't the slightest doubt that the people of Indianapolis day by day promptly turned to these displays to see just what McCormick had the moon doing. That's not exaggeration; it can be done with clever advertising.

Eleven inches across four columns was used the Saturday before the showing and in the Sunday morning paper. It was illustrated with a still from the scene where Holt is making love to the girl in her handsome gown, and this carries the caption, "At midnight a queen of love and silks," and then to the side of the cut with the moon above looking on in open-mouthed wonderment this selling talk:

> Spirit like, a Cinderella in bathing suit and flowing hair, she romped and reveled with the playful waves, only the stars and the midnight moon her companions.
> That was how handsome, wealthy Roger Sloan first saw her.
> "Who are you?" he asked, drunk with the intoxication of the midsummer night's madness. The nocturnal courtship, sans introductions, unconventional like wooing a mermaid, had flown to his head like old wine.
> —then she disappeared.
> —he haunted the beach nightly.
> —She was the first woman he had ever really wanted and failed to interest.
> The next he say her was in drab cotton, a housemaid—then again in silks and satins.

Then below the title this follows:

> Miss Stewart's second production by her own company, and only picture since the tremendously successful "Virtuous Wives," is a fascinating romance, filled with mystery and a lure that is hard of description. Perhaps it is the charm of the star, dainty, elusive, elfin disembodiment, that she is. Wondrous settings, gorgeous gowns—and unconventional story.

Now in the lower left-hand corner appears the girl in servant's garb and "Blonde Mazie," with the caption, "At noon a drudge in gingham."

First of the displays, with the moon idea incidentally brought in

Now McCormick, in getting this romantic element into his exploitation, didn't overlook the mystery element, for in nearly everyone of his displays he featured a cut in which "Blonde Mazie" was shown almost as strong as those showing Miss Stewart. His references to her went just far enough to suggest to the reader that here was something they would have to find out about.

Another one of the displays carried on Saturday showed another picture of the girl in evening gown and the man in evening dress, while immediately behind them was a larger and this time smiling face of the moon. The caption is "When lovers meet sometimes the moon is the only chaperone." Then in the lower left hand corner the "villainess" is brought in with the caption, "But 'Blonde Mazie' was unwilling to loose such a valuable goldfish." The selling argument to the left of the upper cut is:

> FIRST HE SAW HER:

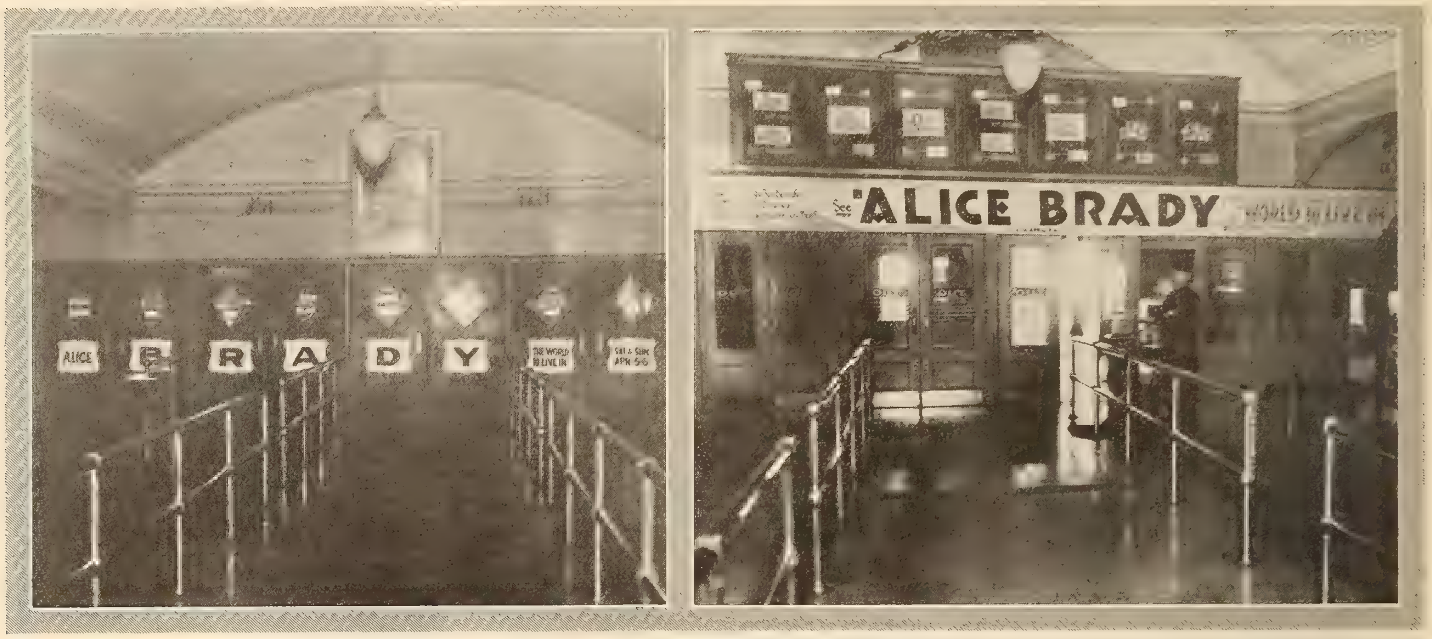
Moon and all, McCormick doesn't forget the adventuress angle



Manager Kuhn made certain that all would know that Alice Brady was coming to his theatre. Looking toward entrance and then the sign greeting patrons on the way out

N. Y. Manager "Gets 'em Goin' and Comin'" With Unique Announcement of Attraction

MANAGER Sam N. Kuhn, of Loew's 116th Street theatre, New York, has just about solved the problem of getting the greatest star exploitation in the lobby of his theatre. In short he has evolved a plan that seems to "get 'em goin' and comin'."

All managers recognize that the name of certain players means a great deal to their theatres, but they have not been able to work out a display on a coming offering because they have to devote the front of the theatre to the current offering. To those having a lobby of any considerable depth the plan of Mr. Kuhn offers a solution.

For instance when he got ready to show Alice Brady in "The World to Live In" he decided that every person entering the theatre during the week preceding the showing and everyone leaving the house during that time should know that the picture was coming. And he decided to have that message conveyed by the display itself without folders and advertising matter which most of his patrons will not read.

There are eight entrance and exit doors across the back of the lobby and these were utilized. The name "Brady," with one letter to each door, occupied five of them, the word "Alice" another one, and then the title of the picture and the dates of the showing of the other two. It was found that even at the busiest times when the doors were constantly being opened persons would stop in the lobby to get the full message.

In case anything could happen that a person would miss this there was another appeal made to those leaving the theatre for above the entrance was a huge strip bearing the name of the star in large letters and the title at the side. Mr. Kuhn has always announced coming attractions in his lobby, generally using the glass frames, with scenes from the production and hand lettered matter, but he reports that this smash that he used on "The World to Live In" was responsible for a greater attendance than any of the usual forms of displays.

One great trouble about lobby announcements is that they are all very much the same. It is pretty hard to get the average playgoer to walk around the lobby and look over the stills and then read the lettered matter unless there is something unique about them. In entering and leaving the theatre they are generally in a hurry and the biggest advantage of such displays has been found by most managers to sell the person passing the theatre and induce him to come later or to appeal to the lessening few who walk up and down the street picking the picture they want to see.

There is another idea along these lines that will be found successful to use once in awhile provided there is room at the side of the lobby. This is the employment of streamer effects with the name of the star and then the use of large arrows, black on white, running down and into a set of scene pictures. If it is not used too often it is likely to arouse the curiosity of most of your patrons who will conclude that it is something so important that they cannot afford to miss it.

Saenger Amusement Company Gets Its Fiftieth Theatre

Saenger Amusement Company, with headquarters in New Orleans, is now unquestionably the biggest circuit in the country from the point of view of theatres under its control. The number is now an even fifty.

It has just obtained control of the Hattiesburg, Miss., field by acquiring the Lomo theatre of that city from A. J. Xydias and the Gem from E. N. Hirsh. The Saenger company was already operating the Strand.

McCormick has the figure of Miss Stewart thrown into a chair, with a helpless expression on her face. The moon looks in at the window with a look of alarm on his face, and then we have the caption "Like Cinderella." Love and silks one moment, cotton and abuse the next." Then comes along the selling talks to the left:

> Roger Sloan couldn't understand it.
> —She was even more mysterious than the other beautiful creature at the same hotel.
> —But this girl, whom he had met at midnight on the beach.
> —One moment in silks, the next in drab housemaid's clothing.
> —What was the desperate game?
> —But he was soon to find out.

At the lower left there is a picture of Mazie in negligee in her bedroom with the hero standing near her and the caption: "'Blonde Mazie' was playing a desperate game. 'Come to room 236, quick,' she had said."

There was a number of other different ones used during the week, with the same spirit carried out through them.

This is an example of carefully planning a campaign in advance, getting down to the greatest appeal of the picture and playing it straight through with the idea of making the general public watch for the announcements. The psychological effect is certain the people will at first read the advertisements out of curiosity, but before the campaign is over they will feel something pushing them into the theatre.

Here the appeal is to the love of romance and mysery, and the use of Old Man Moon has added to those two appeals and has given a reflex of comedy that helps a lot,

McCormick has planned many brilliant campaigns, but none better than this one.

Let's build every show on faith—faith that it will be so good that they'll come again to-morrow.

How New York Stages the Show

PREPARATIONS for the Victory Loan are seen in the arrangements of the weeklies at the leading houses, for once again the government is going to count on the motion picture theatres to do the biggest share in stirring up the patriotism of the people. The first appeals are made this week in showing the preparations for the loan.

Once more comedy dominates the bills at the Broadway theatres, and the people seem to like it for they are all doing unusually heavy business for Holy Week.

At the Rivoli "Pettigrew's Girl" is really a comedy, though it has a patriotic and touching line through it. "The Ghost of Thunder Mountain" is given its first showing at that house this week and there is another one of the Chaplin revivals—"The Bank."

At the Strand there is considerable comedy in the feature, Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road" and bunches of it in the new Sennett, "The Foolish Age." There is also an Outing-Chester on the bill. The Strand by the way is preparing for a big birthday celebration next week.

At the Rialto Tom Moore's new picture "A Man and His Money" is almost straight comedy. And there are more laughs provided with "The Foolish Age" which is also being shown there. Overture at the Rialto has been arranged to fit in with the scenic, "The Eagle and the Fawn."

There is another Chaplin revival at the Broadway with "The Jazz Waiter" while Mae Murray is charming the audiences with the humor that she arouses in "The Delicious Little Devil."

Strand Theatre

COMEDY again dominates the bill at the Strand theatre this week, for though there is a lot of action in the drama, it has a comedy setting and then there is the latest Mack Sennett, which is also being shown at the Rialto this week, to bring the more riotous laughter while there are a number of laughs in the scenic and then more in "Topics of the Day." And though he has been devoting most of his time to planning the big anniversary show for next week, Managing Director Jos. L. Plunkett is supplying a mighty well rounded current bill.

Selections from "Faust" make a splendid overture and this is played with the lights in gold, a greater portion of the number being carried on the strings, well harmonized and without the blaring of the brasses.

Strand Topical opens with Pathe pictures of Billy Sunday, the evangelist, at the baseball game between the Giants and Boston in Tampa, Fla., and with the trombone dominant at the start "Trouser Ball" is played for this. Then comes International pictures showing Admiral Sims returning to the capital after his long stay abroad and he gets lots of applause while "Jack Tars" is used. This same music continues through International pictures of the largest American battleship, the Idaho, being put into commission. It opens with a shot of the top of the fighting masts and then the camera is pointed slowly downward until it sweeps the decks. There is a fine shot looking down on the big guns and another excellent effect that shows the depth of the hull, this taken in the drydock. From the same source we have pictures of the damage wrought by the Omaha cyclone while "Roust D'Omphale is played.

Still another subject from International is a picture of the first German airship flying over New York City—but under the guidance of American aviators. "Keep Your Head Down, Fritzie Boy," is most appropriately used here. Then Paramount-Bray give some interesting scenes of camping in the northwest. "Birds and Butterflies" is the music with the effects of singing birds being used when they are shown. The effect of the falls and the swift stream rushing through the rocks are also well reproduced. You can hear sighs of envy all over the house when the scenes are shown with the campers cooking flapjacks. "Topics of the Day" then furnish a lot of laughs. One of these is: "Henry Ford is to build a Lizette to sell for $250. Thank heaven something is coming down." And then: "A Boston man wants a divorce because his wife hasn't spoken to him in five years. Better think it over. She's ideal." "Me-ow" is the music through these quotations.

Then we go back to the news events and under the caption "All aboard for the U. S. A." Pathe shows us one of the daily sights of doughboys in France entraining for the seaports. "Good-bye, France" is played with a great deal of spirit. Pathe also shows pictures of the Y. M. C. A. festival in Peking and the growth of national friendship is well evidenced by the applause that the British flag in the procession is given. "Mandarin Darin" is played. Then from International we have pictures of German civilian prisoners being released by the British and escorted from the country and here the accompaniment is "Guards to the Front." From the same source come pictures of the football game between two American regiments in Paris and then we get a flash of Gen. Pershing in the grandstand without any title and the audience goes wild. It's a good enthusiasm aroused for the propaganda Pathe picture at the end which shows Secretary Glass hoisting the Victory Loan flag over the Treasury building. "Second Connecticut March" is used for both of these pictures.

Organ carries the music for the Outing-Chester, "Up in the Air After Alligators." This shows us first some scenes on a Florida 'gator farm and then the decision of two aviators to go hunting them in the Everglades, making the trip in an airship.

Herbert Waterous sings "Armourer's Song" and then we have the feature, Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road." At the screening "Dance Piedmontesi" is played to action until the introduction of "Toodle" Waldron when we have "Bagatelle" and the second melody of the same following with the title "Dorothy Ward." When Wheeler goes in to explain to "The Bear" why he is resigning "Serenade" is used until the point where the old man begins to try out his fake fall down on "Toodles" and here an agitato is employed. There is another dramatic with the mechanic and with the title "Poor Daddy" we have "Flirtation" without the introduction and then as the race starts we get "The Plunger" with "Sawdust and Spangles" and "The Vanderbilt Whip" following through.

We want to say right here that we were mighty glad to see that Mr. Plunkett did not use a lot of loud effects for these race scenes. There was just the slightest imitation when the machines flashed across the screen and thus a mighty tiresome effect was avoided.

"Clematis" is the music which starts with the title "This is just a bluff" and this continues until the title "Weeks pass" when we have "Canary Fox Trot" and then as Toodles is seen to leave the hotel the organ takes the music for sixteen minutes, returning with a gallop and a hurry for the scenes of the race between the auto and train and then "Romance" at the end.

After Miss Cora Tracy, soprano, has delightfully rendered "An Irish Love Song" by Lang and "My Little Sun Flower" we have "Stunts and Thrills," the latest one of the Pathe analyses of motion films. This one gets lots of laughs for it pictures a bunch of cowboy tricks on horseback, first at the ordinary speed with which they are executed and then with the ultra slow effect, shown to organ music.

It stirs up just enough laughter to prepare for the hilarious Sennett that follows. At the screening of "His Foolish Age" we have "Frou Frou" until the title "A Foul Plot" when a dramatic suspense is used and then at the title "Throw 'Em Up" a furioso. At the scene where the blacksmith kisses the man goodbye we have Tosti's "Goodbye" rendered on the organ with burlesque effect and then there is another laugh-provoking arrangement with the scene where the man is seen playing the trombone and we have that effect until the scene changes and "Some Jazz Blues" is used. At the scene of the applause the music pauses for a moment and then the selection is repeated. Where the director stops the band "Helen" is used and after it is played twice through "Can't Shake Shimmee" is used to the end.

"Selections from Grand Opera" form the organ solo.

Rialto Theatre

AT the Rialto this week a most pleasing effect is being supplied with the blending in of the overture with the scenic picture. This is "The Eagle and the Fawn," released by Educational, and it affords an opportunity to get the performance started in a good spirit—with the overture doing a great deal to help that along.

Lilies banked on either side of the stage give a delightful Easter tone to the house.

With the house lights all in red and the orchestra bathed in that color, selections from "Natoma," form the overture, the lights coming up to gold at the end. Then the scenic immediately starts with drums and mysterioso effect, "Passing of the Red Man" being played, with "War Dance" following through. This picture, "The Eagle and the Fawn" illustrates the Indian custom with a youth of the Crow Indians. One of the first things that he must do is to become a great hunter and with the title "After every hunt" the music changes to "Indian Agitato" and then with the scene "A tent of visions" where the youth is put in a tent and red hot stones cast in we have "Indian Invocation" with the title "He followed the Fawn" we have "Love Song" to the end. The picture gets a good hand.

With the lights red L. VanDyke, cellist then plays "Evening Song" and "Moment Musical" and then comes the Rialto Magazine with its wide variety of subjects showing that production Manager Joseph LaRose hasn't lost any of that energy of his hunting up the material. It opens with International pictures showing how the West Indian "Yaknees" welcome their own troops back home. Here "Invincible Eagle" is played. Then Pathe takes us to the Great Lakes naval station and then we are shown yeomanettes preparing to fly. "Louisiana" is played here and is carried through Pathe pictures with the American fleet off Santiago.

Gaumont shows pictures of the newly invented folding bridge at San Francisco with "Bees" no intro, used. Kinograms shows us interesting pictures of motorcycles climbing a roadless mountain with "Harrison Fisher" used. Gaumont gives us the thrill of an aviator jumping 4,000 feet from an airship at Camp Lewis. We have "Remembrance" used until the man is seen to leap and then the orchestra is tacet, with effects used. Organ carries the music for the Omaha tornado views.

McCORMICK

No, He Hasn't Deserted Us With His Brilliant Ideas

WITHIN a week or so we will resume the splendid advertising articles that have been written for this department by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis. There have been none that have attracted more attention than these talks about exploitation which have appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Out in Indiana there has been a Sunday legislative fight on and Mr. McCormick has been giving his time to this and therefore we have had to sacrifice our own pages to helping the exhibitors of Indiana. We have had scores of exhibitors to write and ask when they were going to start again. Don't miss one of them and file them away for future reference.

These articles will be independent of the general talks on exploitation from various managers. Mr. McCormick will talk largely about specific exploitations. There is a mighty good article about his swiping the moon in this issue.

Yes, there's a lot of advertising matter printed here. It's the biggest point in showmanship.

The brains of the motion picture world is working for you through the NEWS.

Now we get our first chance for real laughs with another chapter of "The Sayings of Toblitzky." Here again the aged Yiddisher is talking to a small boy and one of them that gets a good laugh is "It is true that money talks, but when you meet a girl all it says is 'Good-bye.'" At the end the kid cries "Bull" at the old man for an other laugh. Jewish music is used for this.

Gaumont gives us pictures of the Twenty-Six Division arriving in Boston and here we have scenes in the harbor and then at Camp Devens. "Regiment's Return" is the music with whistle effects for the harbor scenes. This continues through Gaumont pictures of the throngs cheering General Edwards at Bangor, Maine. Then the music changes to "Diplomat March" with the scenes of printing the new Victory Bonds and continues through the final punch which comes with the football game in Paris and shot of General Pershing.

With the lights in gold Edouardo Albano sings the aria from "L'Africaine" and then comes the feature, Tom Moore in "A Man and His Money," a comedy, "Mock Morris" is played at the screening and then when the girl tells him that he was splendid the theme, "Love's Melody" is introduced. Then with the title "In the morning" we have "The Last Waltz" and then with the evening title the music changes "Hang Your Hat." At the scene where he leaves in the auto "Nuits de Prieutemps" is played and then "Limbo Land" as he enters the club with "You'll Do It All Over Again" following through. Then with the next morning we get "Won't You Help Me Out" and then with John Sturgeon "I'll Pray for You." The theme is brought back as he sends the note to the girl.

Three months later brings us "Sunshine and Shadows" and with the titie "In a distant city" we get "The Thing I wrote in the Leaves of My Little Books" and here the organ takes the music coming back with the reference to the aunt's room and then playing three numbered selections to "Which is the road" when we have "In Saint Malo" with the theme back as the girl exclaims "Harry Dear."

We have never known the Rialto orchestra to carry the effects through a comedy better than they do with "Those Foolish Days." In fact there are so many whistles, imitations and effects that one cannot undertake to describe the music. The selections used start with hornpipe effects and then continue through "It's a Pippin," "Baby Doll," a numbered selection, "All Night, "Happy Go Lucky," "Good Scout," a hurry and then whistling effects that make the audience roar. After this is a hurry and then "Universal Fox Trot" and at the title "at last my eyes are opened" we have "Hearts and Flowers" played burlesque, but the hit of the whole score comes with the title "He also led in musical circles" when we have the "Sextette from Lucia" played with the prize burlesque effect, now with the organ, then the bassoon, then the trombone and all sorts of other effects. After this we get "Scenes Humoresque," by Leonard and then we have a bassoon solo again that gets more laughter.

"When a Maid Comes Knocking at Your Heart" is played for the love scene, then "Ruspana, Siegfried" as a piccolo solo, hornpipe effects and then "tweentweet" effects as he sees the birds for the first time and the "cuckoo" with the other one. "When a Maid" ends the comedy showing.

We had a stranger to the city with us Sunday afternoon when we saw this show: "Heaven's sake," he observed, "I never knew that I could laugh so much—and the music made me do it."

Meyerbeer's "Coronation March" is the organ solo.

Rivoli Theatre

THERE is really a study in music at the Rivoli this week, for there is so much done through the varied program that it is impossible to more than hurriedly cover it here. The feature, which is really a comedy, affords an opportunity to get in some of the war music which is effectively done, while the news portion of the bill and the Chaplin bring in a lot more of the effects.

"Oberon" is the brilliantly played overture and then we have the first showing of Herbert M. Dawley's "Ghost of Slumber Mountains," a remarkable picture in which the beasts of ages long past are reproduced. It is well introduced by a group of children begging the man to tell them a story and then he relates the incidents which he said he saw. "Schuman Suite" is played until the point where the kids ask for the story and then "Rural Scenes" is used until the title "Joe Told Me" and here we get "Desert" and with the title "After a long time" there is a trumpet call with "March of the Caravan" (Desert) At the title "There was a rush of air" there is another trumpet call and with "Far, Far Away," "Silent Night" is played followed by manuscript music and then when the big fight between the animals starts "Freischute" is used, the music changing to the last strain of "Fairy Tales" as he wakes up.

John Wenger has made one of his most beautiful settings for the number that follows, an interpretative dance arranged by Adolf Bohm, of the Metropolitan Opera House. "Caucasian Sketches" is the title and as the curtains part we see one of the men of the far east seated at a tripod fire at the right of the stage, two girls in oriental costumes beside him and a third on a sort of dais on the left of the stage. Then from the left one of the girls slowly rises and begins to dance, then the second and finally the third. Then the man gives them wine and there is a graceful effect at the end. It is one of those highly artistic numbers that defies the pen.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with International pictures of Lieut. Smith being decorated after he had eluded the officials several times and there is a stirring scene as the regiment is marched in review in his honor. "Yankee Tars" is the music. Gaumont shows us Salvation Army lassies bringing comfort to wounded soldiers at Chicago and here "Gospel Hymn" is used. From the same source come pictures of noted screen stars becoming newsboys for charity at Los Angeles and the views of Charles Ray, Charles Murray, Mary Pickford and Fairbanks get applause. Then we have the pictures of Bill Sunday at the ball game. "My Chocolate Soldier," without intro. is played through these two pictures.

Then comes one of the side-splitting Silk Hat Harry pictures released by Educational. This shows what a wonderful fighter Silk Hat is until he induces the Judge to bet on him. "Spooky Spooks" is used at the start and then when the Judge leaves the bank with the family jewels "Uncle Tom" is played until the fight starts with the ringside bell effect. "Everybody's Crazy About the Doggone Blues" is the music here which continues until he bangs the girl on the chest and then the organ carries one chorus of "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" with "Plenty of Pep" following through and then an andante mysterioso used as the Judge approaches the friend and with the title "Are you sure you are absolutely helpless?" we have a tympany rumble and effect.

Then we get back to news events with interesting Pathe pictures of Hun airships coming in to aid the Victory Loan while "Send Me Away with a Smile" is played. Gaumont shows us pictures of launching the huge airship R-34 at Glasgow and here "Rainbow Waltz" is used. We have a striking appeal at the end with a Pathe picture which shows in order the flags of the first, second, third and fourth Liberty Loans, with the amounts raised fading in and then Secretary Glass hoisting the Victory Loan flag. "Stars and Stripes Forever" adds to the enthusiasm.

With a window to the rear of the stage and the heavy curtains half parted, Miss Gladys Rice, garbed in white, sings Tosti's "Goodbye" delightfully and at this point we note the Easter lilies banked at the sides of the stage and along orchestra rail.

Then comes the feature, Ethel Clayton in "Pettigrew's Girl." This is the story of a chorus girl and a soldier who "had no folks" and who adopted her picture as that of his sweetheart. There is lots of good war music introduced here and you can imagine there is a different feeling about it now that the fighting is over.

"My Dough Boy" is played at the screening and then "So Long Sammy" follows through. Then as the boys on leave start for the big city we get "Give My Regards Regards to Broadway." As Pettigrew sees his soldier friend and the latter's girl at the subway we have the chorus of "Gee, I Wish I Had a Girl." Then with the title when night comes "Sidewalks of New York" is used, and during the scene in the theatre "Picking Peaches" is played. When Daisy gets sore because of her failure to move Pettigrew we have "Some Way" without intro., and then as the soldier speaks to the girl at the stage door the theme is introduced, "Cherry Blossoms."

"The Blue Bird" is played with the title "Why Man" and then the theme again as he escorts the girl home changing to "Won't You Send a Letter to Me?" as the auto is seen. With the title "Meanwhile the Cavalier" the music changes to "The Girl Behind the Gun" and at the title "I Do Get 'Em Up" we have the bugle call, this being followed through with "The Trombone Man." Now we come back to the theatre and the music is "Trousseau Ball" with the piano first alone and then after he stops playing the orchestra taking it up. With the title "The cavalier in khaki" we get "The Banquetless March" and then at the title "A song for a brave soldier" the chorus of "Over There." Then the organ takes the music until the title "I thought those roses" when there is one chorus of the theme played as a violin solo and then with "I reckon we'll never meet" as a cello solo the organ carrying the music. Then we see the Friars raising funds we have Dr. Riesenfeld's own composition "Friars' March." With the scenes showing Pettigrew bringing in the Germans "Keep Your Head Down Fritzie Boy" is played and then with the return of the soldiers and the happy ending "Till You Come Back."

After "Oh Boy" is played by the orchestra we have another one of the Chaplin Essanay revivals, "Police." At screening "At the Jazz Band" is played and then a hymn on the organ as the fake preacher approaches, returning to "Jazz Band" after he shakes hands with the preacher, then "Marie" as he enters the fruit store and "More Candy" as he leaves it. Again the hymn is used for the second preacher and then with the start of the action, "More Candy" is played very fast. "Ja Da" is played as he goes to the lodging house, with "Strutters' Ball" as the gang is seen going in, followed by a numbered selection, and then "He's My Pal" as he meets his old prison companion. "Rainy Day Blues," following through and as Chaplin opens the door "April Buds." Then there is "Tremulo Trot" as he jumps from the piano, followed by "Ypsilante" as the girl enters the kitchen. When she says "Let me help you" the hymn comes in on the organ again, the "Ypsilante" returns, and when the girl begs the burglar not to go up we have "Fi-Fi," and when the girl says that Chaplin is her husband "Once Upon a Time" is played. For the final scenes "Chaplin Feet" is used.

Shaw's "Solonelle" is the organ solo.

WHY WE DO IT

Yes, There's a Lot About Advertising Here

ONE of the leading advertising men in the country and a man who makes a salary that requires quite an income tax to be paid to the government, said to us the other day:

"If all the trade publications of every character were doing what the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing there wouldn't be much room for us. It looks to me like you are devoting a considerable portion of your publication to this and if the exhibitors don't appreciate it I don't know what is the matter."

But after he had seen one day's mail he knew that the appreciation was there.

We believe that advertising is the first and biggest element of showmanship and that's the reason why we are stressing it so hard. And there's lots of good material right in this issue.

By-the-way, have you started the series on "Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation"?

The Broadway

THERE are a lot of laughs on the Broadway bill this week, some of them coming in the feature, Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil" and a lot more in the Chaplin comedy, "The Jazz Waiter," one of the old timers which has been revived in what appears to be a new wave of Chaplinism.

Suppe's "Morning, Noon and Night" is the brilliant overture, and this is played with a blue flood on the orchestra pit and the remainder of the house dark. This selection offers splendid opportunity for the range of the various instruments and under the leadership of James C. Bradford, it is rendered in a manner that brings vigorous applause.

Topical Digest opens with pictures of the greeting to Admiral Sims in Washington, which are shown to the music of "Keep Going," and then come views of the daring leap from the aeroplane for which "Oh, My!" is played. Then come the Omaha cyclone, with "Valse Pathetique" used. "Hunkatin" is played for the pictures of the tanks and then there are some interesting views showing the making of an American seaman for which "Money Blues" is used. "Pozieres" is played for the decorations of the American hero, who so long dodged the honor, and then there follows the review in his honor. Then there come the pictures of the football game in Paris and of Gen. Pershing as a spectator, and here "Up in the Air" is used. Pictures of the American soldier boys leaving the Rhine are then shown as the final punch with "March National" played. All of these pictures are International and Current Events, and have been described under the accounts of the other theatres.

"Topics of the Day," as shown at the Strand, follow, and then Harry Thomas, the Biltmore pianist, plays "March Hongroise," and then as a change "How You Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm." Following this there are some beautiful views of Palestine shown to mark Holy Week, and these are accompanied by "Three Henbrew Melodies."

Theme of the feature, Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devils," is played at the screening, the selection being "The Irish Have a Great Day To-Night." At the title "Kitty and the Girl," we have "The Whistler and His Dog," and then as Kitty sees the foreman a funeral march is played in burlesque style. When we are told that Kitty is out of a job we have "The Emerald Isle," and then there is another clever touch given with the use of "On the Level You're a Little Devil," with Michael Calhoun, and then the theme comes back with "Sunday Was a Day." There is still another touch of popular music with the title, "Larry," and here we get "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm," and then with "Nigger States" "Teddy Trombone" is played, and with "You're Sure" there comes in "Keep on Smilin'."

There certainly is a wealth of tuneful airs in the arrangement of the music for this picture, for then with the title, "And at this moment there comes in," "Oh, Frenchy!" and then on the opening night we have "Miss Trombone, Forosette," with Jimmie Calhoun, and then the theme with the title, "Ladies and gentlemen," as Kitty enters her dressing-room "Eve" is played and "Serenade Coquette" for the scenes the following morning. With the next appearance of Jimmie we have the theme again, turning to "When I Look Into Your Eyes," with Peachtree Inn. Then when he declares that he loves the girl there is the theme brought back changing with the title, "About this time" to "Valse Fantastique," and then with the evening scene, "Yaka Hula," and when "Ladies and gentlemen" is repeated "Mariette." There is one of the old timers which gets a good laugh with the cold gray dawn, and we have "I'm on the Water Wagon." With the title, "Home Along the Rocky Road to Dublin," is played, and at the end with the title, "Gloria," the theme is used.

For the Chaplin comedy the selections are: "Razz Berries," "Harry Fox Trot," "Don't Cry, Frenchy, Don't Cry," "Me-Ow," "Trombonium," "Rainy Day Blues," "Oh, Helen!" "Cheer Up, Father; Cheer Up, Mother," "Belinda," "The Circus Is Coming to Town," "Oh. Susie, Behave!" "Bengal Bay," "Oh, You Daddy!" and "The Big Show."

"Sealed Envelope" Stunts Draw Crowds to Portland House

A combination of clever advertising, striking lobby displays, and a novel street stunt enabled Manager Walter Armstrong of the Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., to put over "The Sealed Envelope" as one of the most successful pictures of the early year at that "photoville" house.

Strand patrons like thrilling pictures—tales of action and replete with thrills—so Armstrong centered his publicity drive on story rather than players.

Four sixty-inch newspapers display ads., an art drawing centered about a big envelope attracted much attention, particularly as the Strand doesn't often go in for big ads. in all papers. Nowadays Armstrong uses big space in one paper for a show he considers worth while, and rotates these ads. among the four dailies of the city.

Attractive cutouts in lobbies were aided by 150 legal sized envelopes, each bearing a big red seal, dangling from the ceilings.

For a week prior to the four-day showing of the production a 50-foot trailer, showing flashes of the big fight scene and the hand-over-hand escape, via telegraph wire, and this proved another valuable publicity medium.

The street stunt was engineered by Armstrong with the aid of two strong men. Posing on a light delivery truck and garbed in gladiator costumes, they relieved each other in pulling a big truck about the streets of the downtown district with their teeth. Each side of the towed truck displayed huge envelopes, with heads of the leading players breaking through the top. Under big red seals were these words: "The Sealed Envelope contains many surprises. It will be opened at the Strand theatre today. Look for it."

Live News from the Producers

Abrams Sells Rapidly on Beban Film

Hiram Abrams announced this week that "Hearts of Men," in which George Beban is starred at the head of his own company, is selling steadily and rapidly on the territorial rights basis.

Territory already disposed of by Mr. Abrams is as follows: Boston Photoplay Company, Fred Murphy, for Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut; New Jersey Rolfe Film Company, H. F. Jans, for New Jersey; Frank Beverstock, for Ohio and Kentucky; the Greater State Productions, Inc., Clyde Elliot and F. M. Brockell, for Illinois and Indiana; the Pioneer Film Corporation, M. H. Hoffman, for New York; the Middle West Distributing Company, Ralph Wettstein, for Wisconsin; and the All Stars Features, Sol Lesser, for California, Arizona and Nevada.

The disposition of these rights were reported by Mr. Abrams during the early part of the week, at which time he also announced that a large number of other State rights men were negotiating for the purchase of other territories which he expected to close within a few days.

Mr. Abrams has persuaded Mr. Beban to remain in the East a few more weeks, so that he will be able to meet more of the State rights buyers who have been transacting their negotiations with Mr. Abrams at his offices in the Longacre Building, 42d Street and Broadway.

Motion Pictures Antidote to Bolshevism, Says Arthur Levey

Arthur Levy, exporter, who served with the 307th Infantry and the 2nd Corps, A. E. F., believes that motion pictures are the antidote to Bolshevism. He says:

"The most effective medium for combating Bolshevism is undoubtedly the motion picture. Tons of literature and lectures by inspired orators cannot be nearly so impressive as this method of visualization. We in America, worship and fight for an 'ideal' when that 'ideal' is so clearly visualized to us, that we come to understand and believe in it. Little can be gained by ignoring the evil—the public must be made to realize that the very foundation of society is being attacked and that there can be only two issues—world liberty or chaos —and slavery for all. It should not be difficult to prepare a special programme of publicity through motion pictures which would tend to enlighten the masses and educate them as to the real danger of Bolshevism. The people must be taught to realize that the future of civilization actually hangs in the balance and that no sacrifice is too great to crush Bolshevism."

March Smashes Pathe Records

Declared to Have Been Biggest Month in History of Organization—Prizes Incentive to Branch Managers

A STATEMENT made this week by Pathe Exchange, Inc., to MOTION PICTURE NEWS carries the information that all records for booking and collection went sky high during the month of March, and that Pathe established the record of the biggest month's business in the history of the house during the thirty-one days of the month.

Pathe executives attribute this to two factors. March was designated as Brunet Anniversary Month in honor of the year's anniversary of the accession of Paul Brunet to the office of vice-president and general manager and a sales contest was inaugurated with cash prizes to the winners.

A prize was also offered to the branch manager showing the greatest volume of business and with these inducements all the Pathe branch managers and salesmen went to work with the vim and vigor. "All of this special effort of course would not have been sufficient to have given Pathe the biggest month in its history had not the house backed up its men on the firing line of film which appealed to the exhibitors," said a Pathe executive.

"The Pathe men went out to hustle for their big month with a supply of pictures which were easy to sell. They had a new Pathe serial, Ruth Roland in 'The Tiger's Trail,' and a Pathe serial is always in demand. This one rolled up bookings which bid fair to break the Pathe serial record. Then the Pathe line of features including such stars as Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan, Baby Marie Osborne and Bessie Love was certainly a great help in piling up business. The two Pathe special features booking during March were 'Common Clay,' which has proven one of the most successful specials ever released, and 'The Unknown Love,' which gives promise also of being a record breaker."

The official continued: "When it comes to short subjects Pathe stands supreme and the always-in-demand Pathe News, the Harold Lloyd Comedies constantly increasing in popularity and the unique magazine reel, The Pathe Review, all helped to swell the total for the big month."

American Handles Christies in New England

AN announcement of importance in connection with the new Al Christie two-reel comedies—the "Christie Specials"—was made by Charles Christie in New York this week.

Contracts have been closed by which the American Feature Film Company will distribute the Christie Specials in the New England territory. It is also declared that negotiations are under way by which the American organization will take over the Christie one-reelers for this territory.

The deal just concluded places the distribution of the new two-reelers in the capable hands of Edward A. Golden for the six New England States. Mr. Golden, through his previous affiliations, is familiar with the Christie subjects and looks forward to a successful season with the comedy features.

American Feature Film has offices in both Boston and New Haven, thus being able to give unusually efficient service to New England exhibitors. Mr. Golden is well known throughout the territory and has at his service a picked organization.

Prints of the first Christie Special, "Sallie's Blighted Career," have already been shipped from Los Angeles on their way to the American offices. This two-reeler, with Fay Tincher in the lead of a typical Al Christie cast, will probably be ready for booking by New England exhibitors within a few weeks.

Charles Christie, when interviewed by a Motion Picture News representative, was enthusiastic over the new affiliation. "Mr. Golden has a top notch organization,' he declared, "and the prospects are bright for a happy association. The two-reelers, for which the contract has already been closed, will be issued once a month during the coming year. 'Sallie's Blighted Career,' the first release, has met with a corking reception and theatres that are showing it in the California territory have favored us with many flattering reports. We have been especially pleased with the way theatremen are featuring both the one-reelers and the new specials in their advertising and billing."

"Fatty" Arbuckle's Next in Mining Camp

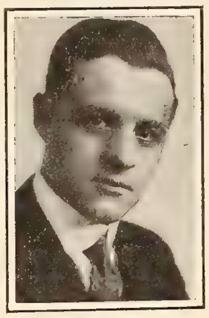
Famous Players-Lasky announces that "Fatty" Arbuckle is getting on rapidly with his new Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, which has not yet been given a title, but which is laid in a mining camp in days of gold and wild adventure.

Molly Malone is his leading woman and the story for the picture is said to be excruciatingly funny. It is said to consist of the innumerable happenings of ludicrous nature that might transpire in a mining camp.

Rothacker Begins on Tenth Year

Next Month Signalizes Ninth Anniversary of Chicago Motion Picture Concern—Many Achievements Noted

WHEN Watterson R. Rothacker organized and launched his company in 1910, it was known as the first organization in the world to specialize in motion pictures adapted for industrial exploitation, commercial education, general advertising and publicity.



The month of May ushers in the ninth anniversary, and the growth of the Rothacker Film Manufacturer Company has been pronounced remarkable.

Along the lines of developing film, the Rothacker organization has the privilege of doing all the developing and printing for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Many scenics have been produced by the concern and released as "Rothacker's Outdoors." Along this line it is stated that Mr. Rothacker will soon have a very important announcement to make anent a new ingle-reel novelty subject, a new single-reel review series of the high class magazine type, and a single-reel superscenic.

W. R. Rothacker is said to have written the first booklet on the subject of motion picture advertising, issued in 1910. Previous to that time, and since, his articles on this subject have received prominent space in Scientific American, Printers' Ink, Advertising and Selling, Judicious Advertising, Novelty News, London Bioscope, and the motion picture trade journals.

He was one of the vice-presidents of the original Motion Picture Board of Trade, and is at present chairman of the membership committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and chairman of the studio committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Mr. Rothacker was also a member of the War Co-operation Committee appointed by President Brady, member of the Advisory Committee Bureau of Motion Pictures, American Red Cross, and a member of the National Cinema Commission.

The following clubs and associations, exclusive of fraternal organizations, claim Mr. Rothacker as a member: Chicago Athletic Association, Lambs Club of New York City, Chicago Association of Commerce, Illinois Manufacturers' Association, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

"Elmo, the Mighty," Thrilling

First Three Episodes of the New Serial Shown to Universal Reviewing Committee

"ELMO THE MIGHTY," featuring Elmo Lincoln and Grace Cunard, a Universal serial, is said to have some of the most unusual and daring feats ever enacted before a motion picture camera. The first three episodes of the new serial were shown to Universal's reviewing committee April 15, and the picture was said to be one of the most extraordinary ever viewed.

Though the new serial features Elmo Lincoln and brings out many of his marvelous feats of strength the first few episodes of the serial bring out numerous thrillers in which Mr. Lincoln does not play a part. The action of the first three episodes, for the most part, transpires in the wooded hills of California where a big lumbering syndicate is seeking control of valuable timber lands patrolled by Capt. Howard Armstrong, a forest ranger and former army officer. Realizing that the ranger has knowledge of its plans the syndicate engages a band of lumberjacks to aid in keeping the government agent from interferring with the plans laid out. A masked motorcyclist, who seemingly helps the ranger when he needs aid, but who proves a complete enigma to both the ranger and the syndicate plays a prominent part in the serial's story.

Miss Cunard is seen as Lucile Gray, a daughter of a wealthy man and a former Red Cross nurse who has met Capt. Armstrong on the battlefields and who recognizing him in the woods, renews old acquaintance with him. The leading characters of the serial are introduced in the first episode and from the very start the serial picks up speed and interest and so complicated do events become that, according to the previewers, solutions to minor parts of the theme of the first three episodes could not be reached within several fast and intensely interesting episodes, alone.

Tossing men of gigantic stature about like flour sacks, Mr. Lincoln clearly demonstrates that he is another Maciste, and in addition to his great strength he is called upon to do some intense dramatic acting and some daring riding.

"Elmo the Mighty," now nearing completion at Universal City, where Henry McRae is directing the action, is from the script provided by William E. Wing and Joe Brandt. It is expected that this serial will be ready for release the second week of July.

Arthur Levey Returns from War

Arthur Levey, exporter and pioneer film man, has returned to New York and received his discharge from the service. He is re-establishing his offices at 1457 Broadway and preparing for an extensive campaign in the foreign market on behalf of American film manufacturers.

Methodists Study Films

A party of twelve, headed by Dr. C. R. Reisner, of New York, who represent Methodist-Episcopal churches, are in Los Angeles for the purpose of studying the making of motion pictures with the view of introducing pictures in the churches throughout the country.

It is the plan of Dr. Reisner and his coworkers, to raise a fund of one hundred and twenty million dollars for the purchase of entertainment devices to be placed in the churches, the principal feature of the program being motion pictures. If this plan is carried through, every Methodist church of the land will be equipped with a projection machine where educational and such other releases as are decided upon, may be shown to the members and their friends. It is the plan of the church workers to give the young people a place of amusement that will hold their attention.

While in Los Angeles, Dr. Reisner and party are spending considerable time with D. W. Griffith and at the Griffith studios.

Simplex Office Undergoes Change

E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, announces that increased business has again necessiatted the changing around of the splendid office arrangement, which has prevailed at the Simplex factory and which, at the time of its installation, was considered adequate for some time to come.

That section of the office formerly occupied by exhibition machines is now being fitted up to accommodate the large bookkeeping and auditing department, whose present quarters, when made over, will be the luxurious and commodious housing for the sales department.

And the already friendly and cheerful atmosphere prevailing at this factory is accentuated by the color scheme which is employed in the paneling throughout and which is French grey and white.

This is but one of the many contemplated changes which the added business is making imperative.

Why Robertson-Cole Subjects Are On Open Market

An Interview with A. S. Kirkpatrick of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation

THE picture market is "wide-open" because the exhibitor has made it "wide-open," according to A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager and director of sales of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, who declares in an interview that the exhibitor dictates the selling policy of motion picture distribution.

Mr. Kirkpatrick asserts that the so-called "program" has been banished, that "series booking" exists only where, for his own protection the exhibitor wants to book series, and that the policy of booking a picture at a time is here because the exhibitor has finally come to a definite conclusion that the "wide-open" market is the most equitable plan under which he can secure product for his screen.

He declares, however, that no distributing organization, serving exhibitors of all classes, can establish and maintain a rigid selling policy in all its territories, because the exhibitor, as the buyer, has become the dictator of the market and insists upon buying his pictures in the way he wants to buy them.

A Matter of Evolution

"We are in the midst of an interesting evolution," declared Mr. Kirkpatrick in his discussion of the question, "and because some of our contracts date back beyond the time when the exhibitor began to swing into the 'open-market' plan we are able to observe the evolution from the inside.

"The fact of the matter is," he continued, "that the exhibitor is king in this business. He has not always been I will admit, but he was long before he knew it, and we knew it long before we were willing to admit it.

"In fact, if not in theory, the exhibitor has been buying his pictures as he wanted to buy them for a long time. The distributing organizations which were keenly alive to the trend of affairs within the industry saw the shadow of impending events and so adjusted their policies that when the change came they were in a position to meet it gracefully.

"Since December 15, 1918, when we began the distribution of the Robertson-Cole subjects our sales policy has been based on the policy of a 'wide-open market.' We have sold all the Robertson-Cole subjects, a picture at a time, except in instances where the exhibitor insisted, for his own protection, upon contracting for a star series.

"Many exhibitors are not yet convinced that the policy of buying a picture at a time has advantages over buying a star series. These men feel that the star series booking plan gives them a protection which is impossible under the open market plan and they are right in some respects.

"Under the star series plan the exhibitor is in a position to popularize the productions of a particular star in his neighborhood or community and capitalize on the popularity which his money and his efforts have created.

"He has a contract for a certain number of productions in which the star appears. As a matter of business he increases the star's popularity in his neighborhood. There is a cancellation clause in his contract by which he can discontinue the series if the productions do not meet the standard he has expected. In short he has a guarantee that a competing exhibitor cannot steal the pictures which come in that series. He benefits, too, by a reduced selling cost—six or eight pictures sold at the cost of one under the open market plan.

A Specific Example

"As an example of the success of the star series plan I may cite the plan under which we offered the current series of Haworth productions starring Sessue Hayakawa. There are eight pictures in the series. They were sold under the star series plan for the two first productions with an option on the rest.

"The Haworth studios actually produced a series of pictures, which, up through the fifth release, has excelled anything the exhibitor expected. The third and fourth productions were better than the first and the second. The fifth excels them all.

"As a matter of fact the Hayakawa productions now being released are as near a series of specials as any series that ever was made. 'The Courageous Coward,' the current release is a special in every sense of that maligned word. Under the 'wide-open market' policy it would have been possible to get bigger prices for 'The Courageous Coward' than for any of the previous Hayakawa releases.

"Exhibitors who bought the Hayakawa series, at their own insistence, on the 'wide-open market' are paying more money than the exhibitors who booked the series. The pictures are worth more. Their own 'open market' policy made it possible for their competitor to step in and bid for the pictures. In the territories where the pictures were sold as a star series the competitor was shut out.

"Under the 'wide-open' market the principles of competitive business apply on each individual production. The law of demand forces the prices up, and the demand is perfectly healthy business condition because it is established that the specific production will produce greater profit to the exhibitor.

"No industry can survive if any particular division of the industry plays the hog. The distributor cannot gouge the exhibitor and expect not to suffer from the reaction which affects the entire industry. The exhibitor cannot compel the distributor and producer to operate without profit and expect not to suffer from a poorer quality of product.

"Exhibitors' Mutual is operating on a policy of fair play. We are doing it without fuss or feathers. We are exhibitor controlled and exhibitor owned and our efforts are directed to delivering to the exhibitor a quality of product which he can retail at a profit. We are trying to serve him intelligently and efficiently, keeping a close finger on the pulse of public demand.

"The 'wide-open market' plan has been a policy of this organization since the last month of 1918, and it has worked out with great success. All our pictures, star series and specials, have been offered under that plan with the option of star series up to the exhibitor.

"I am convinced that the 'wide-open market' is here to stay."

Keenan Finishes Third Picture for Pathe

Working under a Pathe contract at the Robert Brunton studios in Los Angeles, Frank Keenan Productions Inc., has just finished the third in its series of what is described as eight powerful dramas. Mr. Keenan has just started on the fourth subject, "A Nameless Story."

The completed pictures are: "The Master Man," a story of political intrigue and tragedy; "The Gates of Brass," a story of crooked exploitation of desert lands in the Southwest, and "The Tide Book," a story of the shipping industry on the West Coast.

Press Praises Hodkinson Policy

Single Unit Open Booking Sales Policy Wins Support of Press and Exhibitors, It Is Stated

WHAT is described as the dramatic decision of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to offer all productions, past and present, distributed through that organization on a wide open booking basis to the exhibitors of the country was considered too important a step to permit of delays in making such a policy known to theatre owners in every section of the United States.

Therefore in addition to using the recognized mediums of the industry for the announcement of this sales policy, the daily newspapers of America were used through their motion picture departments and the important regional newspapers in the large cities were mailed directly to exhibitors by the Hodkinson representatives operating through thirty Pathe distributing offices.

As quickly as New York learned of the decision of W. W. Hodkinson to make open booking, his recognized new sales method in the industry, San Francisco, Chicago, Atlanta, and all other sections knew it, and it is stated that telegrams approving the policy were being received at the Hodkinson Home Offices in New York.

Such an important newspaper as the New York Times said:

"Exhibitors have justly made complaint against the rule of distributors of selling photoplays in groups or series, charging that by such rules good pictures are made to carry poor ones, the exhibitors and public paying the freight. Therefore the move of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is in the direction of bringing about better relations between exhibitors and distributors and of insuring better photoplays because in an open market, the exhibitor will be able to choose what he wants and each production will have nothing to recommend it except its own merits."

Herewith is a flash from the first Leah Baird-Augustus Thomas special "As a Man Thinks," which W. W. Hodkinson will release

Hodkinson officials state that a large exhibitor in Washington, D. C., wrote them as follows:

"The step you have taken to sell pictures validly is the first move by a man of big repute and standing in the industry to wipe out of existence the vicious programs and star series systems as they are now employed. I have always been a believer in the program system if properly operated with a proper effort to uphold the quality of the pictures that compose a program. But those producers who have resorted to the system have chosen to regard the program as the dumping ground for all such pictures as they were unable to sell in a star series or under the designation, "special production." The step you have taken will now mean that a lot of bad product of all companies is going to be wiped out of existence."

Briggs Comedies Are Not Animated Cartoons

FROM the hundreds of inquiries said to have been received by the recently organized Briggs Pictures Inc., many exhibitors have immediately jumped to the conclusion that the famous cartoonist, whose comedy pictures of kid life appear in 125 of the leading newspapers of the country, is producing animated cartoons for the screen.

For the information of the motion picture trade in general, the producers wish to emphasize the fact that, although Mr. Briggs writes all the scenarios based on his well known cartoons, these one reel comedies are actually portrayed by real honest-to-goodness children.

Briggs Comedies are real one-reel photoplays enacted principally by the three clever Carr children, Rosemary, Stephen and John. The premiere was held at the Strand theatre in New York a few weeks ago and they are to run there every other week, as it is reported the first subject jumped immediately into popularity.

C. A. Briggs, the well known cartoonist of the New York Tribune is president of the producing company and writes all the scenarios. James S. Gillespie is treasurer and Alex Yokal is vice-president and secretary.

Seven one-reel subjects have already been completed and the general title of the series is "When a Feller Needs a Friend." No national distributing arrangements have as yet been made. "Married Life" is another of the famous Briggs series that may be produced with real photoplay actors and actresses later on. The "Skinnay" character is familiar all over the land and since the premiere at the Strand the producers have made elaborate plans to secure a wide distribution of the Briggs Comedies.

The reception accorded the first subject of "When a Feller Needs a Friend," was enthusiastically pronounced spontaneous enough to warrant them in producing these single reel comedies on a large scale.

Mr. Briggs, previous to his New York Tribune affiliation, was drawing his well known cartoons for the Chicago Tribune.

Simplex Notes

Miscellaneous Simplex Installations

A glance through the records of Simplex installations made in fields other than the theatrical one, brings to light the fact that many of the leading colleges, industrial plants and institutions are now using motion pictures in connection with their several other activities.

A report from a Simplex official informs us that elaborate plans are being outlined which will embrace the educational field, which is now open and in a receptive condition to receive an absolute fireproof machine which is usually required for institutional use.

Glancing through the list of Simplex installations, we find among them the following:

Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala.; Stanford University, Palo Alta, Cal.; University of Ilinois, Urbana, Ill.; Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.; Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.; Drake University, Des Moines, Ia.; Cornell College, Ithaca, N. Y.; Harvard Medical School, Cambridge, Mass.; Harvard University—Class 1917, 1918, 1919, Cambridge Mass.; Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.; Bushwick High School, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Washington Irving High School, New York City; Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y.; State University, Albany, N. Y.; St. John's College, Brooklyn; Ohio Northern University. Hardin, O.; Ohio State University, Columbus, O.; U. S. Indian School, Carlisle, Pa.; Norwich University, Northfield, Vt.; University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.; Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.; Curtis Publishing Co., (Saturday Evening Post Ladie's Home Journal) Philadelphia, Pa.; Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., Wilmington, Del.; John Wanamaker, New York City & Philadelphia Pa.; Biltmore Hotel, New York City; Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., Reading, Pa.; John Stetson Hat Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Automobile Club of America, New York City; Museum of Natural History, New York City; Art Museum, Detroit, Mich.; Polyclinic Hospital, New York City; Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, O.; State Prison, Sing Sing, N. Y.

This forms a very small part of Simplex installations made in similar quarters and the number of which would easily run up into four or five figures, which shows the increasing popularity of the motion picture in other fields.

Emil J. Dirks, a live wire exhibitor operating the Easterly Theatre in Chicago was an interesting visitor at the Simplex plant this week. According to Mr. Dirks, who is a well-known real estate broker, he took hold of the Easterly Theatre some time after several poor tenants had mismanaged it to such an extent that it was listed in the "lemon" class.

Mr. Dirks, however, rolled up his sleeves and jumped in, determined to bring the theatre up to a paying proposition. His first act was to send out 5,000 personal letters to his neighbors, at the same time booking high class features and today the Easterly is recognized as a splendid example of a successful theatre, despite its location—between two one-thousand-seat houses.

Mr. Dirks was keenly interested in the Simplex improvement shown him and was high in his praise of the part that the Simplex played in the rehabilitation.

Jesse Lasky Flays the Film-cutting Evil

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Organization, has some interesting and beneficial things to say this week in regard to the film-cutting evil practiced by some exhibitors. Mr. Lasky admits the subject is not new, but believes it is one that needs doctoring before it grows older.

I AM well aware that this is not a new subject. I am equally aware of the fact that others have discussed it with fervor, sought some equable means of adjusting the situation, and yet so far as I can determine, the practice on the part of many exhibitors of cutting photoplays to suit themselves seems to continue unabated.

I am of the opinion that this is an evil, a foe in our own household, I might say, the results of which cannot fail to be disastrous to everyone concerned unless those exhibitors who practice it can be made to see the error of their ways and be convinced that they are simply injuring their own prospects and hurting the cause of the motion picture to a far greater degree than they perhaps realize.

I am charitable enough to believe that no wrong is intended in even the most flagrant examples of this indiscriminate "trimming" of films. The exhibitor who deliberately mutilates a photoplay simply to render it possible to crowd in an extra half-reel of some other character, or for any other reason, while he may be of the opinion that he is doing a shrewd bit of business, giving more variety to his program, etc., is in reality destroying the best efforts of producer, director, actors, authors, scenarists and everyone else concerned in making motion pictures—and, finally, insulting the intelligence of his patrons and laying the foundations for failure on his own part.

Let me cite a specific example in support of this assertion: Not long ago we purchased from the Saturday Evening Post a novel by Wallace Irwin called 'Venus in the East.' It had been widely read and commented upon for its originality and charm. The story was translated into continuity form by an expert scenarist, a cast headed by Bryant Washburn, the Paramount star was chosen to interpret it; a competent director undertook to produce the film; the company went to New York from Hollywood to make the Eastern scenes and then returned to complete the picture in the west. In the production, as is customary with all our pictures, the utmost care was taken to make the photoplay as perfect as possible. There was no superfluous padding. The best efforts of technical and artistic experts trained to this very work, were expended to make the finished product in every way entertaining and worthy of the author's conception.

Yet this picture, when exhibited in a certain theatre, was cut by the exhibitor so that to a large extent the efforts of those who make it were stultified and the public which paid to see a finished production were cheated—there can be no other word for it. Something like twenty-four scenes, including all the Eastern shots, costing approximately $15,000 to secure, were eliminated. This theatre was one of the highest class; a top price is charged for admissions. And yet, people might go to a neighborhood house and for half the money see the unmutilated photoplay. What is the answer? Is it not obvious that the exhibitor must sooner or later lose custom if he persists in such practice?

I am speaking not only for our own productions, but for those of our allied producers, such as Thomas H. Ince, D. W. Griffith and others, all of whom in times past have protested against the practice of cutting on the part of the exhibitors perhaps with even greater vehemence than I am doing.

Aside from the direct injury it works upon the producer, the difficulties it causes with stars, directors, authors and others, who are justly incensed by this mutilation of their work, the ethical side of the question needs to be considered. It is a certainty that the exhibitor, even if the terms of his contract make it possible for him to cut to his heart's content—is by no means—generally speaking—competent to judge just what parts might be eliminated without actual injury to the continuity or the effect of the picture. He has not studied the story as have those who produced it. Very possibly he has not even read the original, if published in book or magazine form. He has not the time to decide what is least essential.

What would be said of a bookseller who deliberately removed certain pages from a popular novel and then sold it to his customers at the full market price? He would soon be tabooed by all his former customers and would probably have to shut up shop unless he desisted from the practice.

Is there any difference between this and the cutting of films by the showman who is in the final analysis the retailer who vends the product to the public?

Take the stage play. It is rehearsed, edited, cut, and finally produced for the public gaze. After the first night it may be improved by judicious cutting under the eye of the producer—all of which corresponds to the work in the laboratory and projection room of the studio. But once the play is declared "okey," it goes forth in that form, and even years later, when reproduced in stock is seldom mutilated, the only changes being caused by the limitations of the smaller producers. Even the one-night stand companies will hesitate about deleting that which is vital. But many film exhibitors have no such scruples apparently with regard to their pictures.

I feel certain that it is only a question of time, unless exhibitors desist from such ruinious cutting, that some action will have to be taken by producers in self protection. They must keep faith with the people; the authors, actors, directors have reputations which they must jealously safeguard. If they are at the mercy of the exhibitors who amputate films indiscriminately they are in danger constantly.

As I said before, I am quite willing to believe that exhibitors, generally speaking, mean well; that they believe they are serving their own interests and those of their patrons best by cutting down features to make room for a long and varied program. But I am satisfied that if the public was consulted, it would invariably protest against the practice. The photoplay patrons would rather see one complete and unmutilated picture than half a dozen chopped and incomplete offerings.

Speaking for our own product, I am confident that when a photoplay leaves our laboratory for the exchange it is trimmed down to the limit. The scenes have been matched perfectly, the continuity has been preserved. Much film has been discarded, but it has been done by those trained for the work and who have made a study of the individual picture. To cut it further is to do an injury that is far reaching in its consequences.

If a campaign of education does not have results in eliminating the obnoxious practice, it is evident that some other measures will be necessary to curb what is unquestionably an unmistakable evil.

"Rustling a Bride" Is Thrilling Romance

Lila Lee's new Paramount picture "Rustling a Bride," is scheduled for release April 27th.

The story and scenario were written by Edith M. Kennedy and the picture directed by Irvin Willat.

The picture stars Miss Lee as a lonely Eastern girl, who through the death of her grandmother, a scheming elderly neighbor and a letter from a young cowboy, goes West to meet many adventures, but finally succumbs them all and is married to the cowboy.

Monte Blue plays the leading male role and L. J. Shumway that of the villain.

George Walsh's Next a McCutcheon Story

George Walsh, after completing "Help! Help! Police" at Palm Beach is back in New York again and is preparing to begin work on another comedy-drama, "The Seventh Person." This story was written by Benjamin F. McCutcheon.

This picture, it is said by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, is crammed with exciting situations and good fun, and is considered an ideal vehicle for the athletic George.

Edward Dillon who directed the last three George Walsh subjects, will direct "The Seventh Person."

Rothapfel For Forty-Five Cities

Complete Program of Entertainment to Make National Premiere Throughout Country in May

FOR the first time in the history of the theatre, either on the speaking stage or on the screen, a complete programme of entertainment will be given day and date in more than forty-five cities throughout the country, when the first Rothapfel Unit Programme is given to the public in May.

The legitimate producer can cite instances where four or perhaps five road shows in addition to his New York and Chicago companies are playing day and date. The producer of opera, musical comedy, burlesque or any other form of theatrical entertainment can cite multiple engagements of the same attraction, but never in the history of the stage or screen has the same complete programme played in more than six or seven cities at the same time, it is claimed.

In booking the first Unit Programme in more than forty-five cities, a record has been established. The opinion is not based on expectancy, but on the actual bookings recorded at the New York offices of Independent Sales Corporation and the Film Clearing House. They declare that when the first complete programme is released as now planned, in May, this will be the record established.

Striking an average of the seating capacities of first-run houses throughout the country, each averaging five shows a day, and with at least fifty and probably more cities booked and in some instances three and four theatres in the same city booking the Rothapfel Unit Programme, the same week, it is considered logical to deduce that from three to four million persons will have seen his programme the first week that it is presented.

Frank G. Hall, President of Independent Sales Corporation, and his staff of assistants, are doing everything known to modern exploitation, advertising and publicity, to assist the exhibitor in presenting to his patrons this programme.

Contracts have been signed by Mr. Hall for space on the billboards throughout the country. The special representatives now out have with them every possible aid in the way of suggestions and exploitation material so that the exhibitor may know what to expect and how to bring the Programme before his patrons.

Harry P. Diggs has prepared a booklet, finished in purple and gold, which has been pronounced by those who have seen it one of the most artistic of mediums of announcement containing a short synopsis of the subject matter of each of the features in the Programme, and statements by Mr. Rothapfel and M. Hall.

United Secures Frank Crane to Direct Reed

FOR the third of the series of special productions in which Florence Reed is being starred by United Picture Theatres, J. A. Berst announces the appointment of Frank H. Crane as director. The selection of Mr. Crane for the position was made in consultation with Mr. Berst by A. J. Bimberg, general manager of the J. M. Shear Company, which will make the production for United.

The scenario of the new Reed subject is by John K. Holbrook, who also wrote the continuity. Preliminary work on the piece, the title of which is as yet unannounced, has been put in hand, and a cast is being selected for Miss Reed's support.

To follow the first Florence Reed United offering, "Her Code Of Honor," presented, it is reported, to S. R. O. audiences at its recent New York release, the second picture of the series is in process of cutting and titling. Because, it is said, of the nature of its title, early publication of which might lead to imitation owing to the timeliness and importance of its subject, no main title has yet been announced, but it is promised that the piece deals with a topic of new and vital public interest hitherto unutilized either on stage or screen.

The strong supporting cast includes Hugh Thompson, who plays the part opposite Miss Reed, David Powell, recently in support of Elsie Ferguson and Billie Burke, and Gareth Hughes, notable for his work with Marguerite Clarke and other prominent stars. May MacAvoy, Mildred Cheshire, Florida Kingsley, Harold Entwistle, Tom McGuire, Edward Miles and Mrs. Jennings are also prominent in the roster of players.

Rex Beach Returns from Mexican Journey

AFTER weeks of adventure and excitement in Mexico, Rex Beach, novelist, is back in New York, where he will spend several months preparing the adaptation and continuity for his next Goldwyn picture. Mr. Beach looks back on his Mexican adventures as the most interesting of his recent career.

"You will say that the man-eater doesn't exist in America," he told his interviewer, "but I can take you into a lonely country where for miles and miles the only human companionship you can find is the intimacy—and I call it intimacy deservedly—of a forgotten people who still cling to cannibalism.

"It is no unusual thing to travel across Mexico now with an armored car both fore and aft. In some way guns have found their way into the hands of these grim savages, and where the Seri dwells in a small country there are hundreds and hundreds of Mexican miles that pay tribute only to the Yaquis, who plunder and kill without restraint."

Much of the Mexican material gathered in his recent trip the novelist expects to use soon in a new Goldwyn picture, the details of which are still in process of formation in his mind.

"The Other Man's Wife" Acquired by Hall

The British-American Pictures Finance Corporation has acquired the world rights to H. M. Warner's late independent production, "The Other Man's Wife," starring Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy, for release by Independent Sales Corporation through the Film Clearing House, Inc., as a special.

The British-American Pictures Finance Corporation is one of the five picture corporations with which Frank G. Hall is associated and will acquire, from time to time, the exclusive rights to independent productions to be released through the Film Clearing House exchanges by Independent Sales.

With the acquisition of its first special, this newly formed corporation enters the picture industry with a production that is said to reflect credit on its initial move in making its debut as a factor in the independent field.

Both the domestic and foreign territories have been taken into consideration in its formation. The United States and Canadian territories will be handled by Independent Sales through the Film Clearing House and the foreign territory will be covered by the Apollo Trading Company.

"Sally's Blighted Career" Given Pre-Release

The first of the Christie two-reel specials, "Sally's Blighted Career," was given a pre-release at the California Theatre in Los Angeles during the week of April 7. Very favorable reviews of the first Christie specials were made, it is said, by the Los Angeles critics, among them Mr. Anthony Anderson, the Times; Mrs. Florence Lawrence, the Examiner, and Miss Gertrude Price, the Record.

Commenting on the picture the Examiner says: "Fay Tincher's coin-spot socks are an amusing incident in a film which was lively, humorous and best of all, based on a tenuous plot."

The Record said: "Fay Tincher in 'Sally's Blighted Career,' with thirty Christie beauties, is a gloom dispelling riot."

Says "Miss Adventure" Is Hyland's Best

Many who saw the first print of "Miss Adventure," the Wiliam Fox Excel Picture, which Peggy Hyland has just finished on the Pacific Coast, declare it is the best Miss Hyland has made.

It is said to be full of thrilling action, pathos and the sprightly good-humor that characterizes most of Miss Hyland's productions. The story was written especially for her and is said to fit her like a glove.

In "Miss Adventure," which was written by J. Anthony Roach, Miss Hyland is said to have the support of a large and exceptionally capable cast, which includes Lewis Sargent, Frank Brownlee, Edward Burns, George Hernandez, George Webb, Alice Mason, and little Gertie Messenger.

THERE are two kinds of NET. One is net profit—the other is the net of the 52-weeks-contract—don't get caught in it!

Universal Special Attractions net profit the exhibitor more than any other brand of pictures simply because the Stars, while nationally popular, are rationally paid—because the Directors are masters of their art—and because we have the very important mechanical equipment. As a result, Universal Special Attractions draw bigger money in proportion to their cost to you than any other productions.

For this reason, we don't need any 52-weeks contract. When you hear of, say, Campbells Soup insisting on the grocer buying a case every week for 52 weeks or none at all, you may expect the Universal to force the contract scheme on you, but not till then. Until that far-off day, we prefer to have you consider a Universal Special Attraction as standard goods—the best for the money—buy it when you want it. But you generally want it.

Special Service Section on

Rupert Julian in "The Fire Flingers"

RUPERT JULIAN has not been seen in a motion picture since "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and since that picture attracted such crowds everywhere we would be certain to call attention to the fact if you are going to play "The Fire Flingers." At the same time it should be brought out carefully that this is not a war picture for the title might convey that impression to some.

There should be emphasis placed on the fact that this is made from the Saturday Evening Post story by William J. Neidig. There is a mighty good line that you can use, and we would advise it being employed in every advertisement that you use and every reference in your general exploitation, immediately after the title:

"The Saturday Evening Post story that made a nation lose its sleep."

This is a very tense story and the mystery idea should be kept dominant and therefore the selling talks should go only to the extent of telling the character of the picture without giving away the entire plot. Here is an instance where you can use the climax of the story for your selling point without destroying the interest, provided you do not tell all that goes before, but be very careful that you do not know both. Climax advertising is valuable when you have a situation that arouses curiosity to see how such a state of affairs came about.

THIS is the way it happens: Richard Hatton and his cellmate, Chris, have just been released from prison and agree that henceforth they will go straight. Both printers, they apply in the nearest town to Richard Olwell, rich and crafty publisher, for work and get it. But hard luck continues for a detective from their home city has seen them enter the workshop of Olwell and wires back their identity. Olwell drives them out, refusing to pay them for the half day's work.

THESE Special Service Section are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that he has booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture or any others?

In the meantime we get a splendid characterization of the brutal print shop owner and of his treatment of his beautiful wife who has ceased to interest him since he has become enamored of Maggie Driver, an employe, with whom he is planning to elope. We see too, the realization of his wife who confides her troubles to her cousin, the local chief of police. It is to occupy her attention that the chief gives her his accumulation of finger print records to classify and index.

Hungry, and without a cent the two ex-convicts determine to go to Olwell's house and demand food. Olwell is dining with Maggie in a cafe, and when the maid sees the bearded figures she is alarmed, but after hearing their story Mrs. Olwell orders them admitted and serves them herself.

Olwell, having taken $200,000 from his safe, now comes home with the declaration to his new love whom he leaves outside in the car, that he is going to drive his wife out of the house and then shave so that he will not be recognized on his elopement with Maggie.

BUT when Olwell reaches the house, although beastly drunk, he realizes that Maggie may be only after the money and so he decides to hide it between slices of bread, fixing these up as sandwiches, for he knows that she is not likely to examine anything so coarse.

Then he goes to drive out his wife and sees the two ex-convicts at the table. He goes into a wild rage and attacks them. Chris is for the fight, but Hatton restrains him and himself receives a blow over his head from Olwell that stuns him as Olwell crashes into the wall and falls dead. And then, peering into the face of the dead man and that of Hatton, Chris is struck by the remarkable resemblance there would be if both were beardless.

Facing trial for murder Hatton decides to take the place of Olwell and shaves himself, at the same time placing his prison discharge papers on the body of the dead man. When the chief of police arrives he is satisfied with the explanation of the supposed Olwell that he cannot remember what has happened on account of the blow on the head. Then Chris after his arrest wins his freedom when the supposed Olwell claims that he is his secretary.

WIFE and chief of police and everyone else is amazed at the change that has come over Olwell and the love of his "wife" rapidly returns. The one thing that remains a mystery is what has become of the $200,000, which turns out to be mostly that of the wife. But here the return of the wife is shown when during the search for this she replies to the police chief, "Why he can do what he likes with my money, cousin."

At right, Hatton reveals his true identity to his "wife," and at the left the tense finger print scene. In center, a close-up of Jane Novak, as the wife

At left, the fight scene which results in Olwell's death; center, his abuse of his wife as he threatens to drive her from his home, and at right, Olwell and the girl with whom he plans to elope—Fay Tincher

The real Olwell has placed the sandwiches in his grip and this is taken to the printing office in the course of the search and the chief tosses them into a wastebasket. The supposed Olwell is saved from any charge of aphasia resulting from the blow.

But Hatton has come to love the woman now as much as she loves him and he sees that he can follow the pretense no longer and so he tells her that he is not Olwell at all, but Hatton. In her daze she summons her cousin, the chief of police and a moment later tells Hatton how much she loves him.

NOW in the course of the story she has taken the finger prints of the supposed Olwell as a matter of fun and the finger prints of the dead man were also taken by the chief and left in her possession. Now comes the chief on the scene and the wife tells him of the confession, but indicates that Olwell is a little "queer" and the chief laughs at his story.

Then comes another unexpected and most dramatic development. Finger prints of Hatton have been sent to the chief from the prison and he has them with him, so as a final test he sends the wife for those of the dead man. Now the whole problem is up to her and she substitutes those of Hatton for the dead man's and naturally this convinces the chief that he is the real Olwell, laboring under a hallucination. The story ends with the declaration of the woman that she is going to marry him again so that she will be Mrs. Hatton, too, if he believes that he is that person.

There is not a single one of the scene pictures on this production in which there isn't a punch because the dramatic element is so unusually strong all the way through it and in case you are designing your own advertising you can get a wide variety of appeal. Of course, you will use one in which Rupert Julian appears. We have illustrated three of the strongest of these, one where the police chief, the wife and Julian are seen together, another with the wife shocked as Hatton reveals his true identity and another one where she is making his finger prints in a spirit of fun.

As we have suggested, we would make this climax, or at least incident advertising so as to make everyone wonder what comes before and after the incident.

For instance, if you use the one of Julian and the wife together, try a selling talk like this:

"She thought that her husband had become a changed man and her great love for him had returned. But this man loved her, too, and it was this that caused him to reveal his true identity.

"'I love you, and haven't the right,' he tells her. 'I am not Richard Olwell, your husband, but Richard Hatton, the ex-convict whom you befriended. When your husband fell dead I took his place and made him the ex-convict.'

"What did she do then? It was up to her to produce the absolute truth and prove that his story was true—or to trick her cousin, the police chief, and be happy with the man she really loved. What did she do?"

HERE is one that can be used with the scene with the police chief:

"She had a husband that she loathed. He came home to her with the threat that he would drive her out of the house and install his new sweetheart in her place.

"She fled from the home and when she came back she found a new husband there, chivalric, solicitous—the sort of a man that she believed she had married and made her wonder.

"But this man had just told her that he was NOT her husband—that he was really an ex-convict who was posing as a man who was dead? This announcement dazed her and she called for her husband who was the chief of police. Then her love for the man became dominant. She wanted him for her own.

"She used the chief to make this man see that she loved him, but then there was thrust into her hands the document that would prove that the man she loved was not her husband after all. It was her's for a decision. But she wanted him."

AND then here is this one to be used in connection with the picture showing the wife, with amusement written on her countenance, taking the finger prints of the man she believes to be her husband:

"Finger prints never lie.

"She had hated this husband of hers who treated her brutally, but a wonderful change had come over the man who wore his clothes.

"Her cousin, the chief of police, had made her the custodian of his records and so she took the prints of this man she believed to be her husband in a spirit of fun.

"A few hours later they stood between her and happiness—between the man and trial for his life. It was hers that he might live and she might love. What woman would hesitate. But your heart will get right up against your teeth while you are waiting for the answer."

OUR own conviction is that the proper way to exploit his picture is with big space and the cut dominant with his name of the star displayed prominently, but if you need shorter selling talks for your smaller advertisements, here are a few of them:

"He had told her that he was an ex-convict, posing as her dead husband. She had his fate in her hands, but she loved him. What would any woman do?"

"Her husband had come home drunk. He told her that the woman he really loved was waiting outside and that he was going to drive her from the house. There was a fight with two ex-convicts; she did not see the end. But when she came back her husband was a different man and the love returned as quickly as it had fled. And when he told her—told her that he was not her husband she rebelled. She called for her cousin, the chief of police. It was in her hands—but it was in her heart. Of course you can guess, but you'll miss a lot by failing to make it a certainty."

"Over night this husband of hers changed from an abyssmal brute to a loving human. How she thanked the stars. And when this man told her that the brute was dead and he another, that she was not his wife, no wonder she called for the police chief. And he had the evidence to send this man to prison—if she would only verify it. What was a woman who really loved a man to do?"

Rupert Julian and Finger Prints Can Be Featured

RUPERT JULIAN made such a hit in his impersonation of the Kaiser in the great success that he himself wrote and produced "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," that he is today one of the best known men in the photoplay world. Any exhibitor who fails to make it clear that he has not only directed "The Fire Flinger," but that he enacts a double role, is going to miss opportunities.

There should be the statement in all of your advertising, but we would also devote a great deal of attention to planting news stories about Julian in the newspapers. Here is an Englishman who was for nearly eighteen years an actor in the legitimate, and who was nearly thirty-five before he jumped into the photoplay. He made good from the start and some of the big pictures in which he scored success were "The Bugler of Algiers" (also known as "We Are French"); with Ella Hall in "Jewel," with Pavlova in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" and "Mother O' Mine."

But it remained for Julian to come along in "The Kaiser" and startle Broadway and then the whole country. The war is over and you want to keep this out of the category of war plays, but you do not want to fail to get the pulling power of Julian with your showing.

FINGER prints suggest an effective teaser campaign on this picture, but we would prefer to first use this by mail. You can get these by giving the thumb a good impression on an ordinary inking pad and then pressing them against a fairly heavy soft paper that will absorb the ink readily. We would suggest a single one of these on a neat card and then the inscription, "What did this mean to Richard Hatton?"

This should be sent out well before the announcement of the picture and then should be followed up with a letter telling the people that the climax of this picture hinges around finger prints.

If there should come up in your community any big criminal case where the solution hinges on finger prints you may be able to couple the picture up with the current news story through the news pages.

THREE OF THEM

Feature the Trio of Well Known Actresses in This

WHILE Rupert Julian, playing a double role, dominates this picture, there are three mighty well known women actresses who are seen in "The Fire Flingers." We would mention this fact incidentally in all advertising.

Jane Novak, who has appeared with Wm. S. Hart and many of the most prominent stars, is cast as the wife and has an appealing part.

Fay Tincher, best known for her comedy work and now a star in her own right, has the near-vampire role, though she appears in only a few scenes.

Importance of the cast is shown in the fact that no less a known actress than Fritzie Ridgeway plays the maid and she adds an appealing bit to the picture.

Fred Kelsey, Clyde Fillmore, and E. Al Warren are also in the cast.

This same finger print idea can be carried out in the lobby. Get two different ones of these and have them greatly enlarged. Under one use the caption:

"If his finger print looked like this it means that he had to face trial for a murder that he did not commit, but of which he was helpless to prove his innocence."

And then under the other one:

"But if his finger print matched this one world of happiness lay before him—a prosperous career and the love of a woman he wanted as he had never wanted anything before."

This will lift the picture above the crime level, and you always want to keep the suggestion of murder away.

THIS picture is very tense and for that reason it should be given a comedy balance on the bill. Any musical numbers should be also of the lighter sort and for the overture it would be a good plan to use selections from some popular comic opera such as "Florodora," "Mlle. Modiste," or "Mme. Sherry."

So much as possible avoid the ordinary hurry and mysterioso selections with the action and get high class in accord with the action. For instance, when this was given its pre-release presentation at the Broadway such selections as "Erl King" for the attack of Olwell on Hatton and "Un Sonnett d'Amour" when the wife goes after the finger prints are employed. There can be a clever little touch put in with the use of "Wearin' o' the Green" at the sight of the Irish policeman.

The theme should not be introduced until after the death of Olwell when his wife finds the man she thinks is he so much changed. Then it should be brought back for the renunciation scene and again at the end of the picture.

IF you have never tried the plan and you can make the arrangements with the local dealers of the Saturday Evening Post it will pay you to include in each copy delivered the week before the showing the announcement that this picture is to be shown at your house. The story was printed in serial form several months ago, but it will be well remembered.

Get all of the newsdealers in your community to co-operate with you to the extent of putting a special poster in their windows. This should be illustrated with a picture of Rupert Julian and then several scenes from the production, and then add this selling talk:

"After the wonderful sensation that Rupert Julian scored in 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' his friends almost feared that he would never again have such an opportunity. But he has found it in the Saturday Evening Post story, 'The Fire Flingers,' the story that made a nation lose its sleep. It's at the Empire all this week."

Names Cast for "Hell On Earth"

Select Pictures Corporation Declares That Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey Will Have Excellent Support

WORK is now well under way for the Select production starring Sergeant Guy Empey and entitled "Hell on Earth." The interiors are being made at the Biograph studios in New York City.

In addition to Sergeant Empey, who will play the part of "Jack Duncan," the cast includes such well known names as Evelyn Martin, Marguerite Courtot, Betty Blythe, Sallie Crute, Charles A. Steveson, William Dunn, Frederick Buckley, Lilla May Lowry, Harry Lee, Frank Norcross, Eugene Strong, Arthur Donaldson, Joseph J. Donahue, Betty Hutchinson, William H. Stucky, Edward Elkas, Roland Osborne and Victor A. Stewart.

Sergeant Empey has already achieved fame as an author and actor, his early book of the war, "Over the Top," in which he later stared on the screen, having placed him in the foremost ranks of author-actors.

Evelyn Martin has the role opposite Sergeant Empey, that of "Lucy Duncan." Miss Martin is described as one of the most beautiful women of the spoken stage, and she has recently developed into an ununusually accomplished screen actress, it is said. Some of her most recent and successful work on the screen was with Theda Bara in "The Tiger Woman" and with Marguerite Clark in "Miss George Washington."

Marguerite Courtot, who is cast for the part of "Fanny Bruce," has appeared in "The Natural Law," "Crime and Punishment," "Feathertop" and with Paramount in "Rolling Stones" and "The Kiss."

Betty Blythe's screen career includes "So Long, Letty," "Experience," "Who Knows?" "His Own People" and many others, including "Over the Top."

Sallie Crute made her stage debut in "The Deep Purple." Charles A. Stevenson, who has the distinguished role of "Mr. Lowring," is at present playing an important part with Norman Trevor in "Toby's Bow" at the Comedy in New York.

"Hell on Earth" is an original story by Sergeant Empey, but contrary to general opinion it is not a war play, nor a play in any way dealing with scenes or incidents of the great war. It is being directed by Wilfrid North, who directed "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Over the Top."

World Film Take Over Houdini Serial

A RADICAL departure from its accustomed policy of never handling a serial has been made by the World Pictures, it is announced, in taking over the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," for the States of California, Nevada, northern Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

This serial was taken over by the World Pictures only after a large number of reports came into the home office from the exchange managers of the World Film Corporation, in which they spoke of the tremendous box office value of the Houdini serial. It was stated that it was cleaning up. The executives of the World made inquiry as to the possibility of securing the distribution of the picture for all territory still open, only after the closest investigation into what the picture was doing.

When the World officials approached B. A. Rolfe, president of Octagon Films, Inc., who produced the Houdini serial, with a proposition, Mr. Rolph, knowing the reputation of the sales organization of the World, was inclined to look with favor upon it. All details were quickly arranged and the exchange managers of the territory indicated above were notified that World Pictures would give them a chance to show what the company could do in making a record for serial distribution.

Houdini, the star of this picture, enjoys the reputation, it is claimed, of being the greatest drawing card ever known to vaudeville and the best advertised entertainer in the world. This was one big factor in influencing World pictures to handle the Houdini serial. He is said to be known from one end of the world to the other and the New York Hippodrome recognizing this engaged him for a season, with the result, it is claimed, that every record of the house during its many years of existence, was broken.

Crandall Books "Suspense" in Large Houses

THAT Frank G. Hall's series of 10-20-30 releases are not confined to the programs of the smaller houses but have reached the screen of many of the largest first-run houses, is shown by the following letter from Harry Crandall, owner of seven of the largest theatres in Washington, D. C.:

"When I signed for your 10-20-30 service, I had no open time in my theatres, but I felt that this plan should be encouraged and figured that I could use some of the shows at my Crandall Theatre, and could afford to shelve the rest. But I have been agreeably surprised at the pictures we have been getting and have used them all at all of my theatres, often times shelving other program shows to make way for the 10-20-30 series.

"I have just viewed your picture, "Suspense," starring Mollie King and find it so good that we are going to use it first-run in our Metropolitan, as you know to be, one of Washington's largest theatres. We think it better than many we have run here and too good for our small Crandall Theatre.

"Hoping that your company will keep up the good work and that all exhibitors will appreciate your efforts in trying to get them good shows at a reasonable price."

Six of this series are now being booked by Independent Sales through the Film Clearing House—"Her Mistake, starring Evelyn Nesbit; "Life's Greatest Problem," with Mitchell Lewis; "A Woman's Experience," with Mary Boland; "Suspense," with Molly King; "When My Ship Comes In," starring Jane Grey and "When a Woman Strikes," with all-star cast including Ben Wilson, Neva Gerber, Rosemary Theby and Murdock McQuarrie.

Second Select for April Is "Veiled Adventure"

Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure" is the second Select Pictures Corporation offering for the month of April. Lewis J. Selznick announces that the first of the three April productions, Marion Davies in "Getting Mary Married," was released during the first week of the month, and the third, Alice Brady in "Redhead," be ready later in the month.

"The Veiled Adventure" is an original story by Julia Crawford Ivers, who also furnished the scenario. It was directed by Walter Edwards. Harrison Ford is Miss Talmadge's leading man, thus bringing to the screen once more that happy combination of star, director and leading man which is said to have won such universal approval.

Censorship Menaces "Cannibal" Picture

Martin Johnson's "Canibals of the South Seas," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, after playing three weeks at the Randolph theatre, in Chicago, is being held over for another week.

The censors of Illinois are said to be on the job again, and the Chicago Herald has rushed to the defense of the picture, saying, "These meddlers are perhaps sincere, but they go on the theory that what they don't know will hurt them. To censor the cannibal pictures is nothing short of surrender to superstition. It is every whit as superstitious as the cannibals' hatred of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson because they wore clothing. It is time those cloistered hamlets who object to it should come out into the sun."

Priest Joins Blackton Sales

J. Stuart Blackton has announced the appointment of Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market Corporation, as general sales agent for Blackton Productions, Inc. This arrangement was introduced in the consummation of deals negotiated for Mr. Blackton by Mr. Priest disposing of all rights to the latest Blackton production, "A House Divided."

The first deal covered the sale of all foreign rights on "A House Divided" to Bech Van Siclen & Company and the second recorded the sale of the United States and Canadian rights to Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation.

It is understood that Mr. Blackton is now completing preparations for a number of big special productions which will be announced shortly.

"Tempest and Sunshine" Has Eleven in State

Eleven prints in a single State and all working steadily. This is the record claimed for "Tempest and Sunshine," a recent release of the J. Frank Hatch Enterprises.

"Our Philadelphia and Pittsburgh exchanges have had such an unprecedented demand from Pennsylvania exhibitors desirous of booking 'Tempest and Sunshine' that we are compelled to keep eleven prints in active work for that State alone," declared Mr. Hatch.

The latest territorial purchase recorded came late last week when J. L. Parks, of Abiline, Kans., bought the Iowa and Nebraska rights.

More than half of the United States has already been sold on this six-reel screen adaptation of Mary J. Holmes' widely read novel. The book is said to have had the heavy circulation of more than 20,000 copies.

Another powerful adjunct to the drawing power, says the producer, is the popularity of the stage drama. "Tempest and Sunshine" is reported to have played every city, town and hamlet in the country. It is declared to have had a wide vogue among repertoire shows and it is estimated that it has been produced on the stage fully fifteen thousand times.

Arrow Film Buys Rights for "Masked Rider"

"The Masked Rider," a fifteen episode serial, produced by Bill Steiner, has been bought for the United States by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation.

It is a western serial, with a plot, it is said, which hold the interest from one episode to another and has a thrill in every foot of film. Aubrey M. Kennedy, who wrote and directed this serial, also directed "The Witching Hour" and many other features, together with other serials.

The cast contains such notable players as Harry Meyers, Ruth Stonehouse and Paul Panzer.

A special advertising campaign has been arranged to exploit "The Masked Rider," which will make it easier for exhibitors to cash in on this picture.

Zena Keefe to Star in World Picture

World Pictures announces they have entered into a contract with Zena Keefe to star her in a five-reel picture which bears the working title of "The Amateur Widow." Work on this picture began on Monday at the World studio at Fort Lee. Oscar Apfel is directing .

Miss Keefe was starred by Ivan Films in its production "Enlighten Thy Daughter." Harry Rapp also starred her in "The Exiled Princess." Another notable film production in which she was the star was in Jack Noble's production of "Shame." Following this she appeared as the star in "The Challenge."

Michelena for Robertson-Cole

"Just Squaw" is First of Three Beatriz Michelena Productions to Be Distributed Through Exhibitors Mutual

IN the statement from Robertson-Cole, containing the information that three Beatriz Michelena features had been acquired for distribution through Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges, "Just Squaw" was announced as the first of the series.

A prominent official of Exhibitors' Mutual stated that because of her exceptional characterizations in "Salomy Jane" and other equally well-known contributions to the silent art, Miss Michelena has long been an established favorite with screen enthusiasts. She has not been seen in any new productions for more than a year, for the simple reason that she has been devoting all her time to the three features which Robertson-Cole have just acquired.

Miss Michelena and her associates in the promotion of her own company, decided that a superb motion picture product could only be obtained by devoting time, and plenty of it, to every detail in the filming of a photodrama. Consequently, nearly four months is said to have been spent on each of the attractions, the last of which has just been completed.

George E. Middleton supervised and personally directed each of the three Michelena photodramas. This in itself is declared to be a guarantee of attention to every minute detail that contributes to the general success of a motion picture.

Miss Michelena is reported to have been accorded superb support in "Just Squaw." Andrew Robson, as Snake Le Gal, gives a performance that is cited as a model for Western bad men. He is said to handle his part skillfully at every stage, and where most actors would have overacted and made the part ridiculous. Robson has subdued it, and made Le Gal a real, hated villain minus anything that borders on the burlesque.

Albert Morrison, William Pike and D. Missoras are others who contributed "bits" to "Just Squaw" that will help to establish it as one of the premier Western dramas of the past year, the announcement states.

In enumerating the successful screen offerings of Miss Michelena, a Robertson-Cole official states that one cannot overlook her high-class work in "The Unwritten Law," by Edwin Milton Royle, which drew unstinted praise from press and public.

Likewise her lovable characterization of the Salvation Army girl in the screen adoption of Mrs. Fiske's stage success by Edward Sheldon, "Salvation Nell."

Wm. Fox Leases Road for Wreck

Producer Wanted to Put a Realistic Train Wreck in a Motion Picture and Succeeded at Great Expense

AN entire railroad system was leased Sunday, April 13, in New Jersey, when William Fox determined to put a realistic train wreck into a picture. For half a mile the burning cars sped down a grade toward an open drawbridge in the Raritan River, while more than two thousand persons from South River, a New Jersey village, and the surrounding country, looked on one of the most interesting dramatic spectacles they had ever seen. And when the crash came as the train tipped over the open draw into a deep channel of the river they gasped in astonishment.

Richard Stanton, director of "Checkers," a forthcoming Fox picture, which will be one of the largest spectacles of the year when released some time in the future, spent between $4,000 and $5,000 to produce this scene which did not run more than 200 feet of film.

It was undoubtedly one of the most costly of picture operations. But before Mr. Fox went to Europe some weeks ago, he insisted this incident of the story should not be slighted.

It is asserted that when the picture is shown on the screen, it will be one of the most interesting spectacles of the year. Beneath the flaming cars, four actors risked their lives in ice cold water to add to the realism, and two of them were badly injured, while one was nearly drowned when he dove and caught in debris at the bottom of the river.

Mr. Fox, when he purchased the play "Checkers," founded on the famous novel of that name by Henry Blossom, Jr., determined to utilize every realistic incident of the story to make a picture which should be one of the great spectacles of the year.

For that purpose he gathered a company of many first class screen actors, including such as Thomas J. Harrigan, Robert Elliott, Miss Jean Acker, Miss Ellen Cassity, Tammany Young and others.

The story is described as one of real life, and its scenes run from vicious fights to dark and dangerous passages in an underground Chinese quarters to brilliant scenes on one of the great race tracks of the country. In fact, Director Stanton is now at the Havre de Grace track in Maryland to get real scenes of real racing.

In Henry Blossom's story, which had a long and successful run on the stage, after it had made money as a novel for the author, there are many stirring incidents. The one chosen for the wreck scene required the use of the road.

Frank Keenan Celebrates His Birthday

On the occasion of the anniversary of his birthday, Frank Keenan, star and head of the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., received more than a hundred letters from friends and screen admirers on April 8th.

"Of course, I'll have to admit that I'm more than 31," said Mr. Keenan, to representatives of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "but more than that," he added—with a whimsical smile—"well there are reasons"

Leslie Film Gets Final Touches

Star's Latest Vitagraph Feature Before "A Stitch in Time" Also Wins Exhibitor Approval—Serial Appreciated

FOR many weeks past Gladys Leslie, under the direction of Ralph Ince, has been at work on "A Stitch in Time," the play that Irene Fenwick appeared in on Broadway early this season. The picture has been completed and is being put in final shape for release.

One of Vitagraph's studio officials stated that the finished production exceeds every expectation of the company. Ralph Ince was especially engaged to direct the production and a strong supporting cast was employed, which included Eugene Strong, Agnes Ayres, Julia Swayne Gordon, Earle Schenk, Charles Stevenson, George O'Donnell, Cecil Chichester, and Charles Walton.

"A Stitch in Time" is shortly to be screened for exhibitors.

An indication of the reception being accorded Vitagraph's latest Gladys Leslie picture, "Miss Dulcie from Dixie," in the South, is the week's run of the picture at the Leader theatre in Washington, D. C., and an extended run at the Bluebird theatre in Richmond, Va.

"Miss Dulcie from Dixie" is said to offer exhibitors an opportunity for unusual presentation in that it admits of striking settings and rousing music. The photoplay is an adaptation of Lulah Ragsdale's novel of the same title and was directed by Joseph Gleason.

The Vitagraph Company is proud of a letter it has received from Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company in Butte, Mont. Vitagraph's pride lies in the fact that Mr. Davis' letter is an absolute verification of everything that Vitagraph has claimed for its big Duncan serial, "The Man of Might."

Vitagraph's production of Charles Klein's drama, "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is starred, has completed a run at the Liberty theatre in Seattle, Wash., and it is reported that the production attracted more attention than any other picture that has been put on in he Northwestern metropolis for a long time.

The management of the Liberty theatre had their own 24-sheet prepared and posted liberally throughout their vicinity. The Tivoli Opera House in San Francisco likewise reports a smashing run and Messrs. Turner and Dahnken wired Vitagraph "The Lion and the Mouse" opened at Tivoli Opera House to exceptionally big business. Picture satisfying public in every way.

"The Lion and the Mouse" is also being used as the opening feature of the New Euclid theater in Cleveland.

Twede Dan Is Seen in Jester Comedies

Territorial rights to the new super-series of Jester Comedies are rapidly being disposed of by the Territorial Sales Corporation of New York.

The method of distribution of the super-series was announced only a short time ago, and already several contracts with exchanges have been signed. The contracts guarantee two pictures a month.

The series consists only of two-reel subjects. The stories of the different comedies are in no way related.

Twede Dan is seen in all the comedies. These pictures were produced by William Steiner.

Lieut. Vezine Will Fly for United

Lieutenant George L. Vezine, formerly of the British Royal Flying Corps, who is to be the flying ace of the United Pictures Theatres, Inc., of America, has arrived in this country from England.

Lieutenant Vezine received many flattering offers, it is said, to go in business but turned them all down, in order to continue in his chosen vocation, that of flying. He aims to visit each of the United's twenty-three exchanges in the United States, as flying ace and special representative, his trip taking him from coast to coast. These journeys in the air will also include flights to Canada, where the United has branch offices in Montreal, Toronto, Quebec and Winnipeg, the lieutenant combining salesmanship with flying.

In commenting upon the acquisition of Lieut. Vezine, to the forces of United Pictures Theatres of America, Lloyd Willis, assistant to the company's president, said:

"United is particularly fortunate in having induced Lieut. Vezine to become its flying ace. I think his advent is typical of this company—for we are trying at least to lead them all."

Metro Releases "After His Own Heart"

HALE HAMILTON, the popular Metro star, according to reports from the Metro offices, has never had a more satisfactory vehicle than "After His Own Heart," which is to be released on April 28.

"After His Own Heart" is another of the stories produced by Metro under the new policy of the adaptation of popular novels and stories by authors with a reputation outside of the silent theatre. Ben Ames Williams, well known writer of short stories and novels, is the author.

The production has been given a wealth of luxurious settings for the interiors of the fashionable homes of the elite, and nothing to make the picture a success has been overlooked, it is said, either by Harry L. Franklin, who directed the star, or Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro, who supervised it in its making. Rudolph Bergquist, Hamilton's regular cameraman, has brought out some novel photographic effects.

The story of "After His Own Heart" deals with the life of one Thomas Wentworth Duncan, familiarly known as Tom Duncan, and played by Mr. Hamilton.

Naomi Childers, as Mr. Hamilton's leading woman in "After His Own Heart," has a stronger and more important part in this picture than in anything which she has ever done on the screen. She is steadily coming to the front as one of the screen's most versatile leading women.

The balance of the cast includes such capable players as William V. Mong, Harry Carter, Herbert Pryor, Frank Hayes, Stanley Sanford and Mrs. Louis.

World Releases Five Chaplin Revivals

The Essanay Film Company announces that five of the Essanay-Chaplin comedies, distributed by the George Kleine System, are now booking at the World Film Corporation Exchanges. The pictures include, "A Night in the Show," "Shanghaied," "The Bank," "Police" and "Triple Trouble."

Lieut. Georges L. Vezine of the British Royal Flying Corps, who saw service since the early days of the war. He is now United Picture Theatres' Ace and will visit exchanges in his machine

William Farnum's Next Is "Jungle Trail"

"The Jungle Trail," the first of the series of big features which William Farnum inaugurated upon the renewal of his contract with William Fox, will be the next Farnum release it was announced this week. This picture was made at Miami, Fla., and is reported to be the most costly production the star has made since "Les Miserables."

The scenes are laid in New York, and in the African jungle, every foot of which is declared to be filled with thrilling action. There also is strong love interest through the picture.

Some of the most magnificent sets ever seen on the screen are said to be erected. One, that of a towering temple, is said to have cost $25,000.

Mr. Farnum is said to be supported by a strong cast in this picture, the leading feminine role being played by Anne Luther, who plays the part of a native princess. G. Raymond Nye is the heavy. More than 500 persons are shown in the native village scenes.

Long Runs Reported on "Turn in Road"

The Brentwood special, "The Turn in the Road," released by Robertson-Cole through the Exhibitors' Mutual, is said to be going bigger and bigger each week. This picture open at Quinn's, Los Angeles theatre for a run of eight weeks, its latest honor being a run of two weeks in San Francisco and Seattle, Wash. The Stanley Booking Corporation has listed this feature as a coming attraction in every one of its eighty houses through Pennsylvania and big booking for long runs, it is claimed, is taking place through the country.

This big feature is not to be construed as a religious picture. It merely touches on the efforts of a half crazy youth to find the true God and of the belief of a child that God is love.

Famous Players-Lasky Arranges to Distribute "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo"—First Since Contract Expired—Released on May 18

ARRANGEMENTS have been consummated between the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation and Douglas Fairbanks, it is announced, for the distribution of "The Knickerbocker Buckeroo," the star's first Special production since his contract with that organization expired several months ago.

When the year's release schedule of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was announced last fall, a series of Douglas Fairbanks pictures was included, it being confidently felt at that time that Fairbanks would renew his contract for a number of films during the coming year. With the release of "Arizona," however, the contract expired last December, and negotiations for the distribution of "The Knickerbocker Buckeroo" were started by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation when Fairbanks started on this film.

The new Fairbanks production is seven reels in length, and will be handled as a special attraction for longer bookings and with greater exploitation than in the case of previous Fairbanks offerings, according to Famous Players.

"The Knickerbocker Buckeroo," according to reports from the West coast studio, is undoubtedly Doug's most thrilling film. A series of episodes taken in a railroad yard are heralded by the press agent as the most exciting stunts ever disclosed in motion pictures—even by the acrobatic Doug. Assisting Fairbanks in the presentation of these thrills is William A. Wellman, aviator.

Marjorie Daw, playing the feminine lead, takes the part of Mercedes, a girl with whom the hero falls in love. Miss Daw played prominent parts in "He Comes Up Smiling" and "Arizona." Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman and Albert McQuarrie are among the other players making up the cast.

"The Knickerbocker Buckeroo" was staged under the direction of Albert Parker, who produced "Arizona." Two cameramen were used in filming this production; Hugh McClung and Glen MacWilliams.

What are declared to be the largest sets ever built for a Fairbanks picture were erected and in some of the scenes over three hundred persons are said to have appeared. After an allegorical opening, the story with an episode in a New York club, where Doug offers his reasons for seriously considering the Horace Greely bromide, "Go West, Young Man." He decides to take this advice and goes out to the land of cactus and rattlesnakes, where he proceeds to show what a young man from Longacre Square can do when he feels like it. Several weeks were devoted to developing the story alone. Each episode was constructed by Doug's staff which included Elton Banks, Joseph Henaberry, Ted Reed, Frank Condon and Albert Parker, director.

Links "Our Teddy" With Chaplin

Pasadena Exhibitor Promotes Novel Advertising Stunt and Is Said to Have Scored Heavily

D. H. Schumann, proprietor of the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., is described as a progressive exhibitor whose mind is always in a state of healthy dissatisfaction. He has a good location and finds it little trouble to attract the regular movie-going crowd. But that doesn't satisfy Schumann.

Always Schumann's brain worked something like this, it is said: "In this city of Pasedena there are hundreds of people who never go to the movies. Why? Not because they are hostile to them, and not because they haven't the time and money. Simply because they haven't gotten the movie habit. Once I induced them to come to my theatre, it's a cinch I could keep them coming. How could I make them pay that important first visit?"

Schumann's big chance came through his own ingenuity. The idea occurred to him to link "Our Teddy," the McClure authorized Roosevelt picture, with Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" and show them on the same program. Charlie Chaplin and Theodore Roosevelt on the same screen the same evening!

Every exhibitor can profit by the interesting story of what happened, which Mr. Schumann tells in his own words:

"When I booked 'Our Teddy' I realized that there was a class of people who would come to see the picture that had never seen a Chaplin picture. Then I booked the Chaplin subject on the same program because I knew there were people who would come to see Chaplin that would not come to see Roosevelt.

"I knew further that if the people who wished to see Roosevelt, ever saw Chaplin they would like him and they would tell their friends. I knew also that if the Chaplin fans saw the Roosevelt film they would like it—they would enjoy its fine story, action and dramatic setting—and they would also tell their friends.

"I played the two against each other. Then I did a little personal advertising. I called on several hundred friends and asked them as a personal favor to come and see Chaplin. I asked others to see the Roosevelt film. I knew these people would be pleased, and a pleased clientele is your best advertising medium.

"My plan worked like a charm. I played to a house jammed to capacity during the entire double engagement. My point is this: The exhibitor must not depend upon made-to-order advertising, but he must use a little originality of his own.

"When I played 'Virtuous Wives' with Anita Stewart, I inaugurated an elaborate advertising campaign, because I believed this picture merited unusual exploitation. I study my subject and I take an inventory of my clientele, and then I conduct my advertising campaign accordingly."

United Reaches Very High Total

Circuit Includes Over 2300 Theatres and Organization Rejoices—Berst Wires Managers the Good News

A TELEGRAM sent on April 9 by Mr. J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., to managers and salesmen in the United organization reads as follows:

> United today passed the twenty-three hundred theatre mark. It is now as safe as the Rock of Gibraltar. Its success of the past and present is but an indication of its brilliant future. Your hardest work and our hardest work is over. In view of this achievement the price of United stock will be shortly raised. We want to thank you for the part you have played in bringing United to its present state. We expect you, however, not to rest upon your laurels but to grow with United. Kindest regards.
> J. A. BERST.

Immediately upon receipt of the above telegram, the United managers in the company's twenty-three exchanges reproduced the wire and sent it to every exhibitor in their respective territories.

In commenting upon United's achievement, Lloyd Willis, assistant to president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., said:

"This means, of course, that United's Rubicon has been crossed. It means that the United idea has been firmly intrenched in the minds of exhibitors from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf. It means that United today is serving more than 2,300 theatres—that every theatre now entering United is a profit theatre for United and its exhibitor members.

"The work of intrenching the United idea in the minds of exhibitors has been no easy task, but United officials feel, and always have felt, that the co-operative plan upon which United is built is one which would eventually succeed. Their faith in this has now been fully demonstrated.

"United officials feel that they have now one of the most effective managerial and sales organizations in the world. This belief is not based upon theory but upon demonstration. United is growing at the rate of from 50 to 100 theatres each week. This fact in itself is the most convincing argument that United's past and present achievements are but an indication of its future."

With an announced total of 2,301 theatres now being regularly served with its product, United Picture Theatres, Inc., in the latest week of its "drive" lists the following new members: W. D. Grace and Wm. Shore, Coalport, Pa.; Bijou Theatre Co., La Crosse, Wis.; Chas. DePaul, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; L. C. Schmitt and Leo H. Huckenstein, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mrs. C. F. McGinley, Elizabeth, Pa.; Augusta Theatre Co., Augusta, Me.; Rolla Duncan, Rexburg, Idaho; H. W. Poole, Klamath Falls, Ore.; F. H. Durkee, Baltimore, Md.; Fred M. Bickhardt, Philadelphia, Pa.; E. B. Hulse, Mt. Holly, N. J.; A. M. Fisher, Harper, Kans.; Whitney & McCluskey, Molsington, Kans.; Mr. and Mrs. Don T. Palmer, Great Bend, Kans.; S. H. Grove, Louisville, Ky.; A. R. Michaels, Genesco, Ill.; F. A. Kornig, Baltimore, Md.; Rome Amusement Co., Rome, Ga.; Lemen & Heki, Newton, Ia.; Alex. R. Boyd, Philadelphia, Pa.; Joseph James, New York City; Sig. Samuels, Atlanta, Ga.; Andy Battison, Yukon, Pa.; Wm. Epstein, Laredo, Tex.; Maxahachie Amusement Co., Maxahachie, Texas; John Smith, Philadelphia, Pa.; S. E. Thomas, Plymouth, Pa.; H. E. Lippincott, Burlington, N. J.; Koen Bros., Haverhill, Mass.; Chas. G. Goodnight, De Soto, Mo.; E. H. Philips, Ft. Worth, Tex.; Waldorf Amusement Co., Lynn, Mass.; J. Goldberg, La Porte, Ind.; V. W. Langford, Chicago, Ill.; John F. Hayes, Philadelphia, Pa.; M. E. Hanley, Kent, O.; Miss D. Smythe, Defiance, O.; Doan Amusement Co., Cleveland, O.; T. A. Roosevelt, Columbus, O.; R. S. Wehrly, Bluefield, W. Va.; Roma McCabe, St. Mary's, O.; Mrs. Chas. Hauser, Franklin, O.; Endress & Banker, Germantown, O.

One of the most important membership contracts in the list for the current week, United points out, is that of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., the largest first run house in that city and in the Atlanta territory. The Criterion purchased no less than six shares of United stock, and is thus entitled to play United productions for that number of days. This contract was executed by J. W. Hanlon, United's Atlanta manager, and Sig. Samuels, treasurer and principal stockholder of the Criterion theatre, that city.

Herbert A. Wagner has been engaged as United representative in the Indianapolis district, under the managership of Milton Simon. Mr. Wagner has been been connected with the Cincinnati office of Goldwyn since that branch was opened, until he associated himself with the Cincinnati office of the Independent Sales Corp. The new United representative is said to enjoy a high standing among mid-Western exhibitors. W. A. Ginn has joined the sales staff of the United New York office, and J. H. Gilmour has been engaged as a United salesman traveling out of the Denver office.

Metro Regards Alice Lake a Genuine Find

Bert Lytell's next picture will be "The Lion's Den." The story is by Frederick Orin Bartlett and adapted to the screen by George D. Baker of the Metro staff, who is also the director.

Little Alice Lake, who is to play the leading feminine role, is the first star that has appeared opposite Mr. Lytell in two consecutive productions, they having just finished "Blackie's Redemption."

"We know it is unusual," said Maxwell Karger of Metro, "but we have found what we think to be one of the best working combinations since the famous Lockwood-Allison team."

Mr. Lyttell when questioned on the matter said: "I have played with many leading women, but it is not easy to find a leading woman who possesses both pleasing appearance and ability, and I am confident that Miss Lake has permitted me greater ease of expression and a fuller play for the histrionic powers with which I am credited."

H. L. Muir Announces Educational Booking

The Standard Film Corporation of Minneapolis, through its manager, H. L. Muir, reports bookings of the Educational Films Corporation's products, prominently the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" series of twelve monthly releases to the Blue Mouse of St. Paul, the Rialto of Aberdeen, S. D., the Colonial of Sioux Falls, S. D., and the Fotoplay of Grand Forks, N. D.

During the current week Messrs. Ruben and Finklestein are playing "The Wanderer and the Whozitt" in their New Garrick theatre in St. Paul.

"The Third Degree" Ready for Release

Vitagraph's big Alice Joyce production of Charles Klein's famous drama, "The Third Degree," is now ready for release. It will be heralded, it is said, by a monster billboard campaign, national in scope, and Vitagraph is anticipating greater business than was obtained from "The Lion and the Mouse."

"The Third Degree" was produced under the direction of Tom Terriss, and Miss Joyce's supporting cast includes Gladden James, Anders Randolf, (Mrs. De Wolf) Hedda Hopper, L. Rogers Lytton, Herbert Evans, George Backus, J. P. Wade and L. O. McGuire.

Selznick Forces Return to East

President and Secretary of Selznick Pictures Corporation Arrives in New York

The Selznick forces, including Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures Corporation, David Selznick, its secretary, their brother Howard and Mrs. Selznick, wife of Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures, arrived in New York this week from Hollywood, California, where they have been engaged in making their first two productions with Olive Thomas as star. Miss Thomas will probably leave California within the next few days to come east.

In speaking of the projected activities of Selznick Pictures Corporation, its President, Myron Selznick, expressed his conviction that the city of New York and its vicinity were far superior to the much vaunted California climate for the production of motion pictures. "Not only does production in New York," says Mr. Selznick, "make possible the closer co-operation between the producing and the administrative branches, with the increased efficiency which such close co-operation inevitably brings about, but since so great a part of the picture is devoted to interiors, a studio in New York is as good as a studio anywhere else and probably a lot better.

"This week's trade papers will contain some information which will interest every exhibitor, and every other man in the picture business," said Mr. Selznick, when asked about the plans of his company. "We are announcing the acquisition of a new male star, in response to a popular demand to see him star, which has grown and grown within the last year and a half, so that his initial stellar appearance will doubtless establish him at once in the front rank of American moving picture stars. There are several other propositions in the fire, which I cannot divulge at present, but I am sure that our forthcoming announcements will be of real interest and importance to the industry.

"We have not yet decided as to whether we shall make some of our Eastern productions in the Geo. Backer studio, which my father, Lewis J. Selznick, has just acquired. In any event, our productions will be filmed in a studio commensurate with their importance, and the value of the stars and stories on our program."

Ruth Roland in "The Tiger's Trail"

MOST exhibitors look upon a serial as business insurance. They count on the likelihood of the greater portion of those who have seen the first episode coming back to see the others, and thus building up regular business for their theatre. This is basically a sound idea, but the serial must not be expected to carry itself and the succeeding business. Why not attempt to go out and get new patrons for the first episode, and therefore for the succeeding ones?

If you have "The Tiger's Trail" booked for your house, we would make up our minds at the start that we were going to get more people into the theatre to see this first episode than were ever there before. For the moment we would forget the fact that this is a serial. We would go about the exploitation just as we would if some solicitor had been around and sold us "the biggest ever" feature. Largely this should be built around the content of the first episode, and a suggestion of the matter that follows and the popularity of the star.

Most exhibitors have been induced to start in the game of heavy advertising because they have been heavily sold on a picture. The exchange man has told them that here is a wonderful opportunity, and under this lure they have gone out and done more—with the result that they have done bigger business than ever before.

THIS money is spent on a picture for a single run. But with a serial here is the opening episode for which a comparatively small amount of rental has been paid, and there are fourteen other episodes to follow. The common sense, business building thing to do is to spend more money advertising the first episode than you would on any feature, and then to carry this consistent advertising through enough of the earlier episodes to be sure that you have hundred per cent interest.

It's mighty hard to get a man started to reading the middle of a book. He wants to know what has already happened. And with good books it is almost impossible to make him quit in the middle. If you have a live newspaper in your city that runs chaptered fiction note the way that it advertises this in advance. Many of the papers give over portions of the first page because they realize the importance of getting the initial interest, and because they know that the advertising they do then lasts for the full run of the story. The same thing applies to your theatre, but with added emphasis.

THEATRES that have no competitors showing this picture and the first run houses should not hesitate to go to this strong in their newspaper advertising. The fact that some one is to show the picture later, and may get some benefit from your publicity should not interfere with your plans. Figure on trying to get all this business yourself for the first showing and then go to it for all you are worth.

If there are a number of theatres in your community showing the serial the sensible thing is to get together on co-operative advertising, sharing the expense, putting the main stress on the thrills and tense interest and then naming the theatres, with the dates of showing below.

Newspaper advertising should start a couple of weeks in advance of the first episode, at least with the announcement in the Sunday issues that it is going to be shown at your house. A week in advance you should have another large announcement, and then smaller advertising each day of the week. There is a large amount of ready prepared advertising for this, picturing many of the thrilling stunts, and this is the very point to play hard in your announcements. Then make the big smash the Sunday before the opening or on the day you show your first episode.

PUT red blood into these displays; you are appealing to the lovers of action. You should take full advantage of the striking title and, of course, the name of Ruth Clifford should be emphasized. Striking cuts of her can be employed to great advantage, for she is really a beautiful woman, and we would not fail to call attention to the fact that she is a successful serial star. The average fan wants assurance that the player will deliver the goods, and you can promise this by mentioning the five serials in which she has appeared: "Who Pays?" "The Red Circle," "The Neglected Wife," "Price of Folly" and "Hands Up!" George Larkin, the hero, should also be featured.

Arthur B. Reeve, one of the authors, is responsible for many successful chaptered stories," including "The Perils of Elaine," the first serial in which Pearl White appeared, "Exploits of Elaine" and "The House of Hate." Every reader of fiction knows the wonderful "Craig Kennedy" stories that he wrote. Gilson Willets, who wrote the scenario, prepared that for "The Adventure of Kathlyn," the first serial.

Pathe has been responsible for so many serial successes that we would be sure to use the name of this company in all the advertising.

At the left is the maid who plays such an important part in the plot against Belle Boyd; in the center, Grim Gordon shows Belle the Tiger Idol, which has the power of locating radium, and which is sought by the Hindus, and at the right, Belle in the grasp of Tiger Face, whose identity is not revealed until the final episode

Make Serial Widen Scope of Your Theatre's Appeal

OPINIONS differ among exhibitors as to whether it is good policy to publish the story of the various chapters in advance of their showing, and that is a matter that will have to be decided by the individual, but certainly the mystery element ought to be kept dominant in all of your advance publicity. And certainly you yourself should carefully study the story of each episode, so that you can get the punches out of them in your announcements.

As soon as you book this picture you should begin talking about it in your program. You will be supplied with ample press material to cover the various phases of the story and about the players, and this should be used very liberally. You must remember that your greatest effort is to get the public to attend the first episode, because the chances are that they will follow the story through. But we would not advise confining the exploitation to the initial one ,but continuing it strong through the first three.

Now "The Tiger's Trail" centers around Hindu tiger worshippers and a bunch of unscrupulous adventurers and criminal cowboys, and the efforts to prevent Belle Boyd (Ruth Roland) from getting a fortune that belongs to her as the result of a compact made between her father and two other men, the agreement having been torn in three pieces and divided, for the possession of valuable mines. There also figures the Tiger Idol with glowing eyes that locates radium and Tiger Face, a mysterious character whose identity is not revealed until the final episode.

THE picture of Miss Roland should be featured on the cover of your program at least a couple of weeks before the showing of the first episode, and then you can follow with one of George Larkin a week later. See that interesting stories of these players are carried inside.

Here is a case where the mailing list idea is an excellent one. Here is a suggestion fopr a personal letter:

"Some one remarked to us the other day that things seemed tame now that peace had come and there were no more thrills of the war. But that man had not seen the first episode of 'The Tiger's Trail,' the fifteen episode Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland. We think a lot of our theatre, but we are willing to turn it over to any one who fails to get a series of full-sized thrills here.

"It is a story of a daring heroine who is beset on all sides, with her one friend a daring hero. Hindu worshippers of the tiger seize her and throw her into the beast's cage, from which she is saved in the nick of time. Tiger Face pursues her; her supposed friend steals her fortune; even her maid is her bitter enemy. There isn't a moment when there is not something doing.

"If you ever enjoyed a good story of adventure you will delight in this picture. We don't want you to miss the first episode, which will be shown at the Empire theatre Friday."

DON'T quit here. Have a copy of your mailing list and carefully check off those who saw the first episode and those who failed to come. Then send to those who missed it another letter stressing the fact that you noted their absence, and that they ctant in with the second and get the thread of the story. You will pick up a lot ofpeople with this. Too many exhibitors are content to drop the serial after the opening.

Then to each one of those who attended send a postcard on which you call attention to some of the thrills that will appear in that episode. That may seem duplication, but it is worth while, for it doubles your assurance of steady patrons through the life of the story. A strong serial is booked as a tonic for your theatre; certainly you do not take one dose of medicine and quit.

Where a theatre is located in a small community and you have a considerable outlying population that you have never tried seriously to interest in your house you have a good opportunity here. You should remember that the more intelligent people in the country are probably the greatest readers, especially on continued stories, and if you get them for the first episode you are not only likely to get them for the fourteen other chapters, but to make permanent patrons of your theatre.

Make an especially strong appeal to those who own autos, and, if possible, arrange the showing for a day when it is convenient for them to do their marketing. You ought to be able to get the co-operation of the leading merchants of your town, because they will profit by every one that you bring in. If possible get out a special folder which will also include the bargain announcements of the merchants for that week. If that is not possible print the name of the serial and the opening dates on wrapping paper and bags for them to use—this in addition to your regular mailing matter which should go to all of them.

THERE is an especially striking 24-sheet on this serial which bears a huge picture of a tiger about to leap on Ruth Roland. Pathe is posting this in larger cities, and you should do it in the smaller communities. You can get a great deal of the circus effect by putting these up through your territory. There is different paper available on each of the episodes, but we would advise your hitting it a big smash by confining your attention so far as the outlying territory and the open air is concerned to the big material.

It has been a habit of some exhibitors to give away tickets to the first episode of a serial in order to get the business, but we believe that it is far better to spend the money that this would cost you in the exploitation of the picture. There is something about free admission that gives the feeling of cheapness, and to get the full value out of "The Tiger's Trail" our policy would be to play it as a picture more than worth the money.

Tiger Idea Furnishes Chance For Striking Display

WE have already suggested that newspaper advertising should start well in advance of the first showing of "The Tiger's Trail" and that is true of every other element in the exploitation. At the risk of duplication make sure that everyone in your territory knows that this is coming to your house.

There is a film trailer which is especially valuable for this sort of work, for it includes only some of the most exciting episodes. It makes it clear that this is a western picture, with the locale in California and shows the sort of stunts that Ruth Roland and George Larkin are called upon to perform repeatedly.

Announcement should be made in the lobby in plenty of time. At first we would advise using one of the striking pictures of the star and then follow this up with some of the scene pictures on the first episode.

Then just before the opening and on the first day of the showing we would urge you to make a big flash in the lobby. Use the circus style here, and it is all the better if you have been conservative in your displays on the straight features.

AT very slight expense you can fit your lobby up like a jungle. Now this picture is not a story of Africa or anything of the sort, but it won't hurt to do this and it is likely to get more attention. From the 24-sheet you can get a splendid cut-out of the springing tiger and we would use one of these on either side of the lobby. Employ the heavy grass effects that you can get from any large store to give the jungle effect and you might include a bunch of palms to further carry out the idea. The figures of the tigers should be to a slight extent hidden in the grass.

You can get a splendid effect here by building a rocky appearing shelf in one corner of the lobby with the tiger in the position of about to make the leap. Lighting for the lobby should be in red to carry out the mystery idea and if possible the bulbs should be hidden from view and the greatest flood of light possible obtained.

Now one of the chief points of the serial is that the eyes of the Tiger Idol gleam when radium is bear and you can have a striking effect by substituting very strong white lights in the place of the eyes and these should be arranged by any electrician to give the flashing effect. This same idea can be carried out by placing figures of the tiger above and across the sidewalk and employ the same flash plan.

Another lobby idea is to fit it up like a cave with a cage at one side holding the tiger.

AFTER the first episode is shown you should mark the appearance of each new chapter in your lobby. Some exhibitors have found it wise to repeat the decoration, but whether this is done or not the figures of the tiger can be used again and again and with different effects according to the positions in which they are placed.

At least the day before the showing of each feature you should display the scene pictures from the coming instalment.

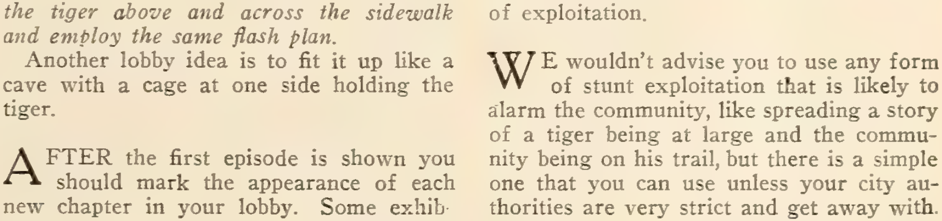
Place these in a position where they will be seen by every one coming OUT of the theatre. After your exploitation is well under way you want these to serve more as a reminder that a new chapter of the serial is coming tomorrow rather than attempt to draw new business with it.

One of the most successful exhibitors has made it a point to use a special striking display with each episode on some thrilling event that is shown. He merely uses compo board and a brush and is able to depict the most startling scenes. In fact he studies carefully each episode and picks the biggest punch from it. That is a mighty good policy in your whole scheme of exploitation.

WE wouldn't advise you to use any form of stunt exploitation that is likely to alarm the community, like spreading a story of a tiger being at large and the community being on his trail, but there is a simple one that you can use unless your city authorities are very strict and get away with.

Get a die cut out to represent the bottom of a tiger's foot and then get some vermillion and mix it with water, so that it can easily be removed, and paint these tiger tracks on the principal sidewalks. Do not have an endless series of these, but let them run along for a half a block or so and lead up to a mysterious sign merely bearing the title. Or, if there is space you can add one of the cut-outs of the animal.

This will attract attention without alarming anyone, and if you use water color, and not regular paint, the tracks can be easily removed by anyone that complains. As a matter of fact the first rain will take them all away.



Here is a striking cut-out made from the twenty-four-sheet which should be used liberally in all of your displays

Further proof of the elaborateness of Nazimova's "The Red Lantern" and its completeness of detail. Metro declares the production to be the star's best

"Red Lantern" Pronounced Best

Nazimova's Latest Production Released for First Runs Throughout World and Bookings Run Strong, Says Metro

FOLLOWING the announcement by Richard A. Rowland that Nazimova's newest superfeature, "The Red Lantern," was to be released in April, motion picture exhibitors, it is said, not only throughout the United States, but from all parts of the world, have flooded the mails and burned up telegraph and cable lines with bids for first-run rights to this special production.

Mr. Rowland made this announcement regarding the April release of "The Red Lantern" about a fortnight ago, prior to his departure from New York for Hollywood, Cal., whither he made a special cross-continent trip to view a private projection of the finished print at the Nazimova studios. Since then, it is said, his mail to the offices of the Metro Corporation, has piled high, and his secretaries are kept busy opening, sorting and filing telegrams from exhibitors anxious to get aboard the hand-wagon to reap the big profits from "The Red Lantern."

The prestige of the brilliant Russian star, the high literary quality of the story and the fact, it is said, that Messrs. Rowland and Karger spent a quarter of a million dollars, and every artistic effort to insure a pageant drama for the screen of splendor and magnificence, have combined to stimulate unbounded interest in the forthcoming release.

With each picture Nazimova's fame as an artist has increased, and now exhibitors have Mr. Rowland's word for it and the word of Mr. Karger, that the Russian actress's latest screen effort gives clear promise of being her greatest.

It was directed by Albert Capellani, who also made "Eye for Eye" and "Out of the Fog." In the great battle scenes depicting the historical Boxer uprising in Pekin in 1900, twelve hundred persons took part.

Great interest is shown in the booking of this picture, it is claimed, not only in the United States, but also in South and Central America, Mexico, Europe, India, Australia, Japan and China.

Interest runs high in India, as well as in China, where the advance advertising has imparted the information that the story of "The Red Lantern" deals with the exciting days of the Boxer revolt.

So carefully was "The Red Lantern" produced that every setting and costume bears the stamp of absolute fidelity, it is stated, and the production will challenge the critical inspection and analysis of the people whose country and characteristics it aims to set forth, while it has a love story of interest and intensity.

Universal Cites Industrial Success

Universal's industrial department claims to have set a record for endeavor and results during the week ending April 12 and Manager Harry Levey declares the activity of his department has never before been approached by any organization.

"Heads Win," a five-reel photoplay, prepared by Mr. Levey for the International Correspondence Schools and constructed along regular feature film lines was released on Monday and shown at the Strand Theatre, Scranton, Penn. Thursday of the same week another five-reel industrial feature entitled "Hope of the Hills" was released and given its premier showing at Cleveland for the remainder of the week. At the same time "That Well Dressed Look," a two-reel fashion film made for the Wooltex studios was being shown at the Alhambra, Cleveland, following a week run at the Broadway Theatre, New York City.

New Lila Lee Film

"A Daughter of the Wolf," Lila Lee's new Paramount picture, is being made at Truckee, up in the northern part of California, whither the company journeyed to stay for approximately a month. It is declared this will be a new type of play for Miss Lee.

Houdini Goes to Coast for Famous Players

HARRY HOUDINI, handcuff artist of the vaudeville stage who recently was converted to pictures via "The Master Mystery," a serial, was scheduled by Famous Players-Lasky, with whom he has a contract, to leave New York April 16 for the West Coast studios of the organization, where it is intended to start work on his first picture for this company in accordance with his new contract.

A Famous Players-Lasky announcement said: "The initial Houdini film will present a story especially written for him and just finished by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. Messrs. Reeve and Grey are both well known writers in the magazine and motion picture fields. Among Mr. Reeve's successes are 'The Adventures of Craig Kennedy,' 'The Silent Bullett,' 'The Dream Doctor' and 'Black Menace.' Mr. Grey has been associated with the motion picture industry for several years as Advertising and Publicity Manager for various large companies. He has collaborated with Mr. Reeve on a number of recent motion picture stories.

"The story which Messrs. Reeve and Grey have already finished for Houdini, is expected to prove their greatest combined accomplishment for the screen. It affords the famous theatrical and motion picture star his greatest opportunity to present his best offerings in one show and at the same time unravels a dramatic story of logical construction."

Marguerite Clark Goes to West Coast

Marguerite Clark, who has finished the final scenes of her new Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," has gone to California, where she will begin work at the Morosco studio at Hollywood, on Clyde Fitch's well-known comedy, "Girls," under the direction of Walter Edwards, it was announced this week.

It is several years since Miss Clark has been in California, her recent work having been confined to the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Her last picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," is now being cut and assembled preparatory to the release of the film, which is tentatively scheduled for May.

It is claimed for this picture that it has one of the best casts seen in a Paramount feature in some time. The cast includes Eugene O'Brien, Frederick Esmelton, Craufurd Kent, Bradley Barker, Albert M. Hackett, George Stevens, Frances Kaye, May Kitson, Augusta Anderson, Rita Spear, Frances Grant, and her young son, George Washington.

De Linsky Completes Detail on "New Moon"

Victor De Linsky, known throughout the trade as a technical expert, make-up artist and actor of many parts, has just completed some highly important detail work on the new Norma Talmadge picture, "The New Moon." The scene of the story is Russia, and Mr. De Linsky was called in to provide the realistic backgrounds and the proper atmosphere that the story demanded. Some of his work in this picture is said to be truly startling.

Mr. De Linsky has been very much in demand ever since he came to this country shortly after the close of the Russo-Japanese war in which he fought. As a lieutenant in the Russian army he was severely wounded and, after being decorated, received honorable discharge.

The present plans of Mr. De Linsky's are not to be made public as yet, but as far as can be learned he will shortly come forth as head of a producing company. He did some work on the new Gerrard picture which the Warner Brothers are producing, and which William Nigh is directing, and it is thought that this new opportunity came to him while at the Warner studio.

Washington Gets "Virtuous Men" Feature

TOM MOORE, President of the Moore Features Corporation and owner of the new million dollar Rialto theatre in Washington, announced this week that he had made arrangements with Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin for the initial presentation to the public of "Virtuous Men." This production, which stars E. K. Lincoln and was personally directed by Ralph Ince, is a Ralph Ince Film Attraction and said to be one of the biggest spectacular features made in recent years. Moore, whose reputation for judging productions of merit is unquestioned, is also a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and a franchise holder in that organization for his territory. Following the showing of "Virtuous Men" at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6, Mr. Moore immediately wired a request to give "Virtuous Men" its inaugural public presentation. He has arranged for a run of the S-L Picture in his new million dollar Rialto theatre commencing Sunday, April 20.

An extraordinary lobby display will be arranged comprising among other things the original oil paintings of E. K. Lincoln and scenes from the play by Clarence F. Underwood, R. G. Morgan, Gustav Michelson and others. It is planned to have several notables of Washington public life at the premiere of "Virtuous Men" at the Rialto theatre on April 20 and Mr. Moore believes a record-breaking attendance will follow the presentation.

"Virtuous Men" will have the honor of being an independent production to have its inaugural presentation in the United States at the million dollar theatre at Washington and Mr. Moore's selection of this production indicates its calibre and production.

Universal Names Mae Murray Production

WHAT is said to be one of the most delightfully humorous light comedy dramas ever made at Universal City is scheduled for release by Universal shortly under the title "The Delicious Little Devil." Mae Murray, most recently seen in "What Am I Bid?" is the star of the production, and previewers are of the opinions that Miss Murray was never better cast.

"The Delicious Little Devil" was adapted from an original story by John B. Clymer and Harvey Thew, entitled "Kitty, Mind Your Feet." Robert Z. Leonard produced the film play from the scenario by Mr. Thew, and the production is said to be not only very cleverly developed but very artistically handled.

Miss Murray is seen as Kitty, a young girl just as pretty and as witty as young Irish girls with such names usually are, and the Kitty of "The Delicious Little Devil" had the faculty of taking full advantage of her opportunities and of presenting the right idea at the psychological moment. When the picture opens, Kitty is custodian of the coat and hat rack at a downtown hotel, and when it closes she is about to become the wife of a handsome young heir to his wealthy father's estate. The series of intensely interesting events that take place between the opening and the climax are extraordinary, to say the least, but very possible and probable, which makes them the more enjoyable.

Roberto de Valentina is seen opposite Miss Murray, while William V. Mong is seen as the press agent. The film is in six reels.

Big Activity in Universal Comedy Production

AN abundance of good clean comedy of the varied character is said to be on the Universal schedule for release within the next six weeks.

During that period the efforts of no less than seven different companies will be released and no two comedies will have any semblance of one another, it is asserted.

"Green Eyed Johnny," featuring Jack Dillon, a Nestor, "Looney Lions," "Monkey Business," a Century and "Skidding Thrones," a Lyons-Moran are on the schedule for the second week of April. "Let Fido Do It," an L-Ko, "Scared Stiff," a Lyons-Moran and a Nestor without a permanent title are to follow. "Good Night Turk" and "A Plumber's Busted Romance" are other L-Ko's to be released in the near future while Lyons Moran have managed to keep several weeks ahead of their schedule and have six comedies ready for marketing shortly. Titles for these are: "The Expert Elopers," "Harmony in 'A' Flat," "The Bolshevists," "Taking Things Easy," and "Wise Wives."

During the past month several new comedians and comediennes have been added to the Universal forces, among the most recent being Vera Steadman, former Keystone comedienne, Rube Miller and Josephine Hill.

Norman Dawn has recently completed a special two reel comedy, "Sinbad the Sailor," which is one of the most elaborate ever made at Universal City. The cast is made up entirely of children, over a hundred of them having participated in the action of the play. A second animal comedy has been completed by W. S. Campbell for Universal, bearing the title "And the Elephant Still Pursued Her," featuring Neal Burns, Dora Rogers and Rube Miller. Joe Martin, the monk, Charlie, the elephant and a number of lions also participate in the action.

Vin Moore, of the L-Ko has also completed a second animal comedy to be released shortly as a Century. Jack Dillon, Craig Hutchinson, Lyons and Moran, Al Santell and Ben Wilson are busily engaged in making new comedies and it is expected that another comedy company will be working shortly.

World Stars Greeley

Evelyn Greeley, after having shared starring honors with others, is now to be starred in her own right by World Pictures. Her initial venture will be "Relations." It will be in five reels. Oscar Apfel will direct the production. Miss Greeley's leading man is Hugh Dillham, who, it will be remembered, married Marjorie Rambeau recently.

Foster and Weil Active in Cincinnati

Lewis Foster and Albert Weil, who operate the Fine Arts Film Exchange of Cincinnati, have secured the state rights on the film, "Wives of Men," for distribution in the Cincinnati territory.

"Brass Buttons" Puts Russell on Broadway

In speaking of "Brass Buttons," the William Russell feature which played at the Rivoli Theatre in New York the week of April 6—Marx S. Nathan, New York representative for the American Film Co., Inc., stated that this feature won instant praise and would establish Russell as a new satelite to shine forth from the electric signs between Times Square and 50th Street.

In "Brass Buttons" Russell portrays the role of a wealthy clubman who falls in love with a pretty young thing, and thinking the girl a servant, he borrows the uniform of the policeman on the beat. He wins the girl and also the job of Chief of Police of Sawtooth, Ariz.

Methodists Seek Advice from Griffith

A Famous Players-Lasky current announcement carries the information that members of the Methodist Episcopal Church crossed the continent to ask David Wark Griffith to become their advisor in introducing motion pictures into every church of that denomination in the country. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, executive chairman of the Methodist Minute Men and prominent members of the Centenary Committee, acted as the spokesman for the church in the conference with the Artcraft producer.

"When the plans of the church mature," said the statement, "it will become one of the most important film distributing concerns in the world, having more churches in America where screens will be maintained, than there are motion picture theatres at the present time. A producing organization will be controlled by the church."

Completes "Oh, Boy!"

Pathe this week announced that work has been completed on the filming of "Oh, Boy!" from the musical comedy production. The film version is the first of the series of Creighton Hale and June Caprice features to be produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., for release through Pathe. The cutting and titling of the production, which is the first so-called Filmusical comedy to be made, are said to be rapidly nearing completion.

Visits Universal

A. R. McNichol, manager of the Lyceum Theatre of Winnipeg, Man., was a visitor at the Universal offices in New York the past week. Mr. McNichol came East for the purpose of seeing photoplays to be released during late spring and early summer and was shown "Borrowed Clothes," "When a Girl Loves," "Home," "Forbidden," "Destiny" and "The Fire Flingers," all of which he later booked for one week runs.

Vitagraph Presents Corinne Griffith in "The Unknown Quantity," by O. Henry

Bookings Indicate Rise of Bessie Love

A Vitagraph announcement this week states that the advance bookings being written on the next Bessie Love release, "A Yankee Princess," indicate that Bessie Love is riding on a fast growing wave of popularity.

"A Yankee Princess" will be the fourth Bessie Love release made by Vitagraph and all of them have been directed by David Smith. First came "The Dawn of Understanding," then "The Enchanted Barn," then "The Wishing-Ring Man" and now "A Yankee Princess."

Vitagraph reports that its books show on these features that ideal conditions of each succeeding release playing to bigger business than its predecessor and it demonstrates again Vitagraph's almost uncanny ability in picking winners.

Pathe Gets New Quarters in Albany

"That Albany is recognized by motion picture distributors as an ideal location for exchanges," says an Albany newspaper, "is shown by the fact that the Pathe Exchange, Inc., now located at 398 Broadway, has taken the building at 35-37 Orange Street, on a long-term lease, and it will be remodelled into one of the most modern exchanges in the country. The deal was made through A. Page Smith, agent for property. B. M. Moran, manager of the Pathe Exchnge, expects to be located in the new building by May 1.

Swan's Dance Filmed

One of Paul Swan's dance interpretations, which he gave at the Selwin theatre on Thursday afternoon, April 10, will be incorporated in a feature photoplay on which the Post Pictures Corporation is about to start work.

The interest shown by the exhibitors at the matinee tends to make Mr. Swan very popular in the film game.

Five Famous Plays and Books Filmed by Fox

THE commanding position which the films are assuming in utilization of famous stories for plays is strikingly demonstrated in the announcement made this week by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation that no fewer than five well-known plays or novels are now in work as William Fox productions.

Richard Stanton is nearing completion of "Checkers," which he is making from the famous play of that name. Checkers was written by the late Henry M. Blossom, Jr., and played by Thomas W. Ross for several years.

Another noted play now in work is being staged by Charles J. Brabin. This production which bears the title "A Case of Identity," was adapted from "La Belle Russe," one of David Belasco's successful plays. This play also had a long run because of the unusual situations developed in it and has been held up to students of stagecraft as a model of play construction. It is said to be the first play ever written by David Belasco to be put on the screen.

"Cowardice Court," one of the best known novels written by George Barr McCutcheon is being filmed in California with Peggy Hyland as the star. Mr. McCutcheon like Mr. Belasco, makes his bow in this picture as an author for the screen.

Another popular novel which is being made into a Fox photoplay is "The Lone Star Ranger," widely regarded as the best of Zane Grey's books. William Farnum is the star in this production, and it is expected that it will duplicate the success scored by "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," two other Zane Grey stories in which Farnum starred.

"My Little Sister," one of the most widely read novels of Elizabeth Robins, is being filmed at Ft. Lee with Evelyn Nesbit as the star. This picture is said to furnish Miss Nesbit one of the strongest roles she has enacted as a Fox star and the picture is said to be given unusually elaborate production.

Famous Players-Lasky Cites a Coincidence

THE publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky this week called attention in an announcement to what it terms a "striking coincidence" through which an article on motion pictures appeared in the same issue of the Saturday Evening Post that carried a page advertisement for the Famous Players-Lasky organization. "The advertisement," said the announcement, "conveys the underlying thought in the article, which was written by Gerald Stanley Lee."

The article, as all of the magazine articles are nowadays which are written for the public, fan or "layman," is a tribute to the motion picture.

The Famous Players-Lasky announcement said further: "The article so impressed Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that he gave telegraphic expression to his appreciation."

Among other things, Mr. Lasky said: "We have tried faithfully in our own organization to draw the curtain from life, and in doing so we have been aware of our responsibility. We have realized that we must not create discord by ridicule; that we must avoid error in the statement of implied facts; that we must not mislead moral questions; that we must always inculcate a regard for the highest ideals of life, though in doing so we may make use of odious comparisons. In short, we have long realized that the curtain of life—so aptly and appropriately pictured in the advertisement mentioned—must never be drawn if we are not to show behind it the truth, whatever the form may assume."

"Passing the Buck"

In the wake of the trail of loud laughter caused by the Larry Semon-Vitagraph comedy, "Well I'll Be —!" comes the announcement from Vitagraph that the title of the next Larry Semon comedy is "Passing the Buck." The comedy was written by Semon and is said to be filled with rapid fire fun and new business that should make the exhibitor happy, as well as the fans.

"It's a Goldwyn Picture." In fact, here are three Goldwyn pictures. Pauline Frederick in "One Week of Life" seems in trouble as pictured on the left, while Geraldine Farrar appears to be having the time of her life in "The Stronger Vow," shown on the right. The demure person in the center panel is none other than Mabel Normand. Her current Goldwyn feature is "The Pest"

Tom J. Geraghty Prepares Many Westerns

TOM J. GERAGHTY, who a fortnight ago came East with a number of scenarios for some of the leading stars in the motion picture firmament, is returning with commissions to write several others, among the number being one for Clifford Bruce, whose work in leading roles for Metro, Fox and other companies has long been popular with the motion picture public.

While no announcement has yet been made, it is said that a new group of Western capitalists have nearly completed plans to enter the motion picture field to produce a series of elaborate specials portraying the development of the Great West. It is also said that the Chambers of Commerce in two of the larger Western cities are also interested in the project.

Until Mr. Geraghty's arrival no definite arrangement had been made with Mr. Bruce, as it was understood that he was under contract to a Canadian company, who held an option on his services. This difficulty was readily adusted for Mr. Geraghty before leaving wired his principals that he would be ready to begin work at once on the script immediately on his arrival on the Coast.

"Concerning the proposed series, I can only say," said Mr. Geraghty, "that while each picture will be entirely Western in its ensemble, many novelties and thrills will be introduced which will be distinctly new.

"The success of Wm. S. Hart and Wm. Farnum is the best evidence that the 'Western' type of drama is still in its prime, provided, of course, it is adequately produced. There is also a dearth of actors capable of bringing to leading parts the so-called 'husky-heroic' and romantic qualities in which the screen public delights. This is, perhaps, the reason why the 'Western' for a time seemed to be falling off in popularity."

Clifford Bruce, who has commissioned Tom J. Geraghty to select a story and write a script for him

Kerrigan Gets Strong Role in "The Best Man"

In "The Best Man," the new Jesse D. Hampton Production to be released May 4 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, J. Warren Kerrigan is said to have one of the strongest roles he has ever played. He takes the part of Cyril Gordon, a Government Secret Service agent, and although the Cyril part of his name might indicate that Kerrigan ought to sport a cane and a monocle, the only things he sports in that line are a young gatling and a heavyweight wallop.

Kerrigan is supported by Lois Wilson.

Marion Davies Buys Aeroplane

Marion Davies, film star, has bought an aeroplane for practical use, and intends to begin taking lessons in flying at Staten Island next week under the instruction of Katherine Stinson. The plane, it has been announced, was purchased from George D. Grundy, owner of the Lexington Theatre in New York.

Louis Sherwin Joins Coast Coast Colony

Goldwyn announces that Louis Sherwin, formerly a Los Angeles newspaper man, and recently a special press representative for Goldwyn publicity in New York and dramatic critic on the New York Globe for eight years, has arrived at Culver City, Cal., to join the Goldwyn scenario staff.

Some time ago, Mr. Sherwin's work attracted the attention of Samuel Goldwyn, who induced him to abandon newspaper work and bring to motion pictures the same acute critical faculties that characterized his reviews.

Mr. Sherwin undertakes his new assignment not only as a man experienced in the drama, but armed with an extensive knowledge of the newer art of the motion picture in all its angles, distribution as well as creation, gained in his contract with the executive offices in New York.

Talmadge Film Named

The new Russian picture, the story of which is by H. H. Van Loan, which Norma Talmadge is now completing, is scheduled for release some time in May, under the title of "The New Moon." This was at first selected just as a working title, but Select has decided to make it definite.

In the cast with Miss Talmadge are Pedro de Cordoba, Charles Gerard, Stewart Holmes, Marc McDermott, Ethel Kaye, Marguerite Clayton and Harry Sothern. Chester Withey is the director, and David Abel the photographer.

It has been announced by Famous Players-Lasky that a photograph of Lillian Gish, of the Griffith players appearing in Artcraft pictures, won first prize in the annual exhibition of photography in the Royal Salon in London. The work was a study of Miss Gish in her character of "The Girl" in Griffith's "Hearts of the World." Hendrik Sardov of the Hoover Studios in Hollywood, California, is the artist.

Desmond never interpreted a stronger character. The vividness of his portrayal will stand out as the greatest work of his career.

It is a picture that will grip every audience with its tenseness, its high-strung drama and its smashing story of a mad hunt for gold that is black and soft and flat like coins from the mints of hell.

DESMOND

in The Mints of Hell

A stirring drama of the Yukon and those trackless regions of dead white and frozen silences where so many adventurers have gone mad, eaten snow and died.

The famous dog-team that won the Alaska sweepstakes is used in this production, and there is a fight between William Desmond and Jack Richardson that would stir the blood of a mummy.

Griffith Holds New Subject as Special

After a two-night tryout in a small Southern California city, it has been decided the recently completed subject filmed by D. W. Griffith will not be released on the Artcraft Program, but will go out to exhibitors as a special subject. No decision has been made with respect to the title, the film having been shown on the tryout nights under the caption of "White Blossom and the Chink." The story for this photoplay was suggested to Mr. Griffith by one of the stories in the collection of short stories published under the name of "Lime House Nights" by Thomas Burke. Mr. Griffith is now at work on his sixth Artcraft subject, and, when this is completed, his contract production for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be finished. Mr. Griffith has a large set in one of the valleys some twenty miles from Los Angeles where he is making most of the scenes for his final Artcraft release.

"Common Clay" Sets Steady Pace

A current announcement from Pathe Exchange, Inc., declares that "Common Clay," starring Fannie Ward and released as a Pathe special, continues to break records in all sections of the country, the New York Rialto run being repeated in Boston, Cleveland, Kansas City, Syracuse, Chicago, Cincinnati and other centers. Many of the houses, as has been shown, are making special lobby displays, the most notable at Poli's Theatre, New Haven, which displayed a model by Fred G. Valles of a woman in clay 8 feet high. The idea appealed to Leon Kelmer, manager of Keith's Greenpoint Theatre, New York, but he went a step forward in literally arranging his display, not in a lobby but upon the stage.

"Let's Elope" Released

Famous Players-Lasky insists that Marguerite Clark fans will find her in a most congenial environment when they see her latest Paramount photoplay, "Let's Elope," which was released April 13. The picture is an adaptation by Katherine Reed of Fred Jackson's play, "The Naughty Wife," which was produced at the Harris Theatre, New York, in November, 1917.

Chicago Manager Exploits Film

"The Eternal Magdalene" Gets Extensive Advertising in Unique Manner by Bandbox Theatre in Windy City

"The Pest" is the name of Mabel Normand's newest picture for Goldwyn

REPORTS come from the Goldwyn offices that all precedents in advance motion picture publicity will have been smashed when the Goldwyn special, "The Eternal Magdalene," opens at the Bandbox Theatre, where it has been booked in advance for a run of four weeks by manager James Keane.

Mr. Keane has planned a campaign of publicity that is aimed to reach every home in Chicago and penetrate into the territory that looks to Chicago as its metropolitan centre. Not only will every publicity medium be enlisted, it is said, but a special publicity representative has already been appointed to push this important special and to see that no possible opportunity is wasted to draw the attention of the public to it.

Robert H. McLaughlin, a Cleveland newspaper man, is the author of "The Eternal Magdalene," which is said to present one of the most fascinating and gripping stories the stage has had, in a number of years.

After its first production by a Cleveland stock company, New York producers competed strongly for a chance to produce it. The play had a long run in New York, where, it was considered one of the successes of the year.

The treatment, handling and action given the story in the Goldwyn production, is said to be, in every respect, a fine bit of creative work. Touching on a subject that lies deep at the foundation of family life in America, the Goldwyn direction has exercised the utmost delicacy and discretion in developing the theme.

"The Eternal Magdalene" is said to reach out into the hearts of audiences powerfully and movingly, yet without any sacrifiec of the refinement which has always been associated with the Goldwyn name.

It was Chicago initiative that arranged for the first view of this big feature.

Wm. Desmond Gets New Type of Character

EVER since William Desmond, the Jesse D. Hampton star, has appeared in Robertson-Cole features released through Exhibitors Mutual, he has played in the lighter type of photoplay in which he has always proved highly successful. "Life's a Funny Proposition," "The Prodigal Liar" and "Whitwashed Walls," all from the Hampton studios, have gone over with a big smash. As a matter of fact, motion picture enthusiasts have come to regard Desmond purely as a comedian because he has been associated so long with the farcial side of motion pictures.

Desmond is going to prove the fallacy of this belief, however, when his next picture, "The Mints of Hell," which has just been completed, is released, it is asserted.

"The Mints of Hell" will be totally unlike anything Desmond has ever before attempted. It is a drama of the Yukon with snow "stuff" which it would be difficult to surpass. From all accounts reaching New York from Califoria, this picture has every element to make it a high class selling production. The atmosphere is exceptional, and so far as can be discovered, this is the only successful snow picture that has been filmed in California the past Winter. Several companies tried to get snow productions, but they had bad luck, and returned to Los Angeles to film the scene's in the studios.

Jesse D. Hampton, who produced "The Mints of Hell," built an entire town at Truckee, which is high up in the Sierras, near the Nevada line, and waited for the snow to come.

Pathe Gets Thanks

Samuel B. Rose, naval gunner for Uncle Sam, whose management of motion picture entertainment aboard the "Presidential transport" George Washington has earned him the commendation of high authority and small, has written a letter to Pathe Exchange, Inc., expressing his appreciation of the promptness of the Pathe service and the exceptionally high quality of the pictures, which, he says, were "a source of great enjoyment to President Wilson, Mrs. Wilson and the various members of the Presidenial parties."

Mack in Lincoln Film

Coming Program Offerings

Releases Deliver Fun From Famous-Players

According to an announcement from Famous Players-Lasky naming releases scheduled for the immediate future, exhibitors may expect some excellent comedy and comedy-drama.

Charles Ray is slated to flicker across the white sheet beginning April 20 in "Greased Lightning," a Thomas H. Ince picture, which gives the star his usual opportunity to inhale the small-town atmosphere. The character is said by the publicity department to be one of the best he has ever appeared in.

"The new Charles Ray production," said an announcement, "gets its title from the hero's mechanical contrivance, a racing auto, capable of reaching a speed of eight miles an hour at the most."

Julian Josephson, author of "String Beans," wrote the story, and the picture was directed by Jerome Storm, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Wanda Hawley is leading woman, and others in the cast are Robert McKim, Otto Hoffman, John P. Lockney and Willis Marks.

The Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy for April 13 was "The Foolish Age," featuring Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Phyllis Haver.

An announcement said: "There are numerous bits of business introduced which help to make laughs faster than a German can invent alibis. A white bulldog does a shadow chasing stunt, which would move even old Fuller Gloom to tears of laughter."

"The Tiger's Trail" Reaches Screen April 20

Launched with a publicity campaign which Pathe Exchange contends will take advantage of every means of bringing the picture to the attention of exhibitors and public alike, "The Tiger's Trail," new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland, was scheduled for release on April 20.

Pathe is of the opinion that the popularity of Miss Roland, gained in previous Pathe serials, has created widespread interest in the new episode-film.

The cast with Miss Roland in "The Tiger's Trail" is composed in part of George Larkin, as the hero; Mark Strong as the villain, Harry G. Moody, George Field, Frederick L. Kohler and Easter Walters.

"The Tiger's Trail" was written by Arthur B. Reeve, creator of "Craig Kennedy," detective stories, and Charles A. Logue. The scenario was prepared by Gilson Willets, who wrote "Hands Up!" and a number of other Pathe serials.

Pathe declares that the demand from exhibitors for another Pathe serial with Ruth Roland, following her success in "Hands Up!" has been strongly backed up by an avalanche of bookings, and all indications are that "The Tiger's Trail" will be one of the most widely shown serials ever issued by Pathe.

How Coal Is Mined

In the April 13 release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "the magazine of the screen," E. Dean Parmelee, of Bray Studios, Inc., shows by means of animated technical drawings the story of how coal is mined. One sees how the shafts are sunk to the coal bed, how the levels are cut and the chambers excavated. Then at the surface again the lumps of coal are seen passing through the breakers, graded, cleaned and stored ready for transportation.

Moore Books New Joyce Picture

For the week of April 13, Vitagraph reports, Tom Moore booked the Alice Joyce picture, "The Cambric Mask," into his new million dollar Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C.

"The Cambric Mask" is a picturization of a Robert W. Chambers story and was directed by Tom Terriss. It is rated as one of the best of Vitagraph's string of Alice Joyce releases.

Louis De Hoff has also booked "The Cambric Mask" into the New Theatre at Baltimore, and judging from the previous notices sent out by Vitagraph, houses of that type of the Rialto in Washington and the New Theatre in Baltimore have been quick to book this new Alice Joyce release.

Salisbury's Latest Plays Broadway

Monroe Salisbury's most recently finished Universal Special Attraction, "The Blinding Trail," was given a pre-release showing at the Broadway theatre, New York, the week of April 8, and is reported to be a first-class attraction, both from the viewpoint of the entertainment and box-office value.

New York critics express their opinion that the feature was not only the best Mr. Salisbury has done in recent months, but also one of the very best Special Attractions seen in some time.

Manager Maurice Kashin presented the film with a special musical score arranged by James C. Bradford. A Chaplin comedy and news reel completed the program.

World Distributes It

World Pictures has taken over for distribution "The Unbeliever." Marguerite Courtot plays the lead. Over one thousand marines who fought at Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry were employed in making a number of the important scenes of this photoplay, World announces.

"City of Comrades" to Be Released in Fall

"The City of Comrades," a striking story of double life, with Tom Moore in the leading role, will be released by Goldwyn early in the fall. Basil King is the author.

The story is that of a young man, Francis Worsley Melbury, son of a wealthy man, who has taken to drink and because of this has been told never to show his face to his family again.

He goes to New York, where he decides to rob the house of an architect to whom he has a letter of introduction. There he meets the heroine, who afterwards falls in love with him, although she does not know at the time he is the robber who entered her house.

When he confesses, and is apparently rejected, he almost decides to commit suicide.

The rest of the story will be unfolded on the screen, essentially as it appeared as a serial story in the Saturday Evening Post in the early part of this year.

Says Walcamp Scores in "The Red Glove"

The Universal serial starring Marie Walcamp, "The Red Glove," will have as a title for its ninth episode, "A Leap for Life." This episode is described as being filled with a lot of action, the majority of which transpires between The Blue Chip, the mountain inn which Billie has known as a home, and the city where a fortune and home awaits her with the rich Halsteads, administrators to her estate. In this episode, Miss Walcamp will be seen doing some reckless, daredevil work.

The tenth episode of "The Red Glove" bears the title "Out of Death's Shadow." Several new characters will be introduced into the serial, the action taking place in the city, where Billy accepts the home with the Halsteads and obtains part of her fortune.

The last part of the seventeenth episode is now in the course of production at Universal City.

First National Names New Films

Half Dozen Special Attractions Said to Aggregate More Than a Million Dollars for Negatives Alone

DURING the next eight weeks, First National Exhibitors Circuit announces that six special feature attractions will be released, and that the entire negative cost to them for these productions will total more than a million dollars.

The schedule includes the first special produced by Mary Pickford at the head of her own company; the third of the series of eight Chaplin Comedies, the third Anita Stewart First National feature on eight-reel special, a sensational production said to have been shown in the larger cities at $10 a seat, and a five-reel human interest story that has just been completed in England.

No specific dates have been set for any one of the six productions, because of the differences between territories in first-run play dates.

The current release of the six is the Macauley Productions feature, "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." This is an adaptation in eight reels of the famous novel by Charles R. Macauley. In its cast are twenty-three principals, including Jack Mulhall, Pauline Starke and Kathryn Adams, and it is declared that eight thousand players appear in the series of spectacles and big ensemble scenes. The producers claim that sixty-three interior sets and thirteen exterior structures, in addition to an entire village, were built for staging the story, which has for its background the application of the principles advocated by the League of Nations.

Another release will be "Daddy Long Legs," the initial Mary Pickford special attraction to be distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit. This is the screen adaptation of Jean Webster's famous story and the play that has scored a tremendous success for several seasons. It was produced by Miss Pickford's own company. Marshall Neilan directed it.

The next Anita Stewart's special will be an adaptation of Leroy Scott's eight-edition book, "Mary Regan." This will be the third of her attractions made under the management of Louis B. Mayer to be released by First National.

After "Mary Regan," the Circuit will release what is described as a sensational special feature attraction of a type entirely different from anything that has ever been made available to exhibitors. This is the picture which has been shown to selected audiences in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago, it is said, at a standard admission charge of $10 a seat. The announcement of its releasing title has not yet been made.

The third of the Chaplin productions made under his contract with the Circuit will be the fifth subject on the six-release schedule. The title of it is "Sunnyside," a story of rural town life. Mr. Chaplin's new "heavy" character, Thomas B. Wood, who weighs more than a quarter of a ton, will make his screen debut in this comedy.

The sixth of the spring releases will be a five-reel feature called "When a Woman's Forty." This is an adaptation of the novel by Earnest Hendrie and Metcalfe Wood, which was published under the title of "The Elder Miss Blossom."

Goldwyn Secures "Lord and Lady Algy"

The latest of the popular hits which Goldwyn has purchased for the screen is "Lord and Lady Algy," said to be the most notable of William Faversham's recent Broadway successes.

Work on the play has been started at Culver City, and the release of the finished product, it is said, will interest every exhibitor in the country.

Tom Moore will play the leading role, that of Lord Algernon Chetland, the younger son of the Duke of Droneborough, who is out of favor with his father because of his sporting proclivities. Moore's personal sportsmanlike bearing fits him well for the thoroughbred personality of the lord.

The other characters in the feature will be played by a capable cast.

World Distributes "The Unchastened Woman"

WORLD PICTURES announces that arrangements have been effected between George Kleine and the World Film Corporation whereby the World will distribute through its exchanges "The Unchastened Woman," a feature picture made from Louis Anspacher's famous play which had a season's run at the 39th Street Theatre, New York City. In the picture version Grace Valentine plays the title role and is given stellar honors.

Another picture which will be distributed by the World by arrangement with Mr. Kleine is "The Unbeliever." Marguerite Courtout is the star. In this picture the 78th, 79th, 80th and 96th Companies of Marines, about 1,000 men, were employed. These are the same Marines who won undying fame at Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry. Among the cast supporting Miss Courtout in this picture was Sergeant Moss Gill, who plays the sharpshooter, who reads his Bible in the trenches between pot shots at the enemy. From official Government records, the following excerpt is taken in reference to Sergeant Gill:

"He was severely wounded in action; took command of his platoon after his chief was shot. With great courage led his men into action and handled them with skill until wounded three times by enemy machine gun fire."

Another member of the cast was Captain James F. Rorke of the 5th Regiment of Marines. Captain Rorke is the "O'Shaughnessy" in "The Unbeliever." He was also cited in the official Government records.

Major Halcomb, another member of the cast appears in charge of a detachment of Marines in "The Unbeliever." From official records he was recommended for conspicuous bravery in the face of the enemy.

The third picture which the World will distribute by an arrangement with Mr. Kleine is "Conquered Hearts." This is a five-reel Rialto De Luxe production in which Margaret Marsh is the star and is supported by an all star cast. The picture was directed by Francis J. Grandon.

Louis Bennison Completes Another Production

"The Road Called Straight," the latest Betzwood production, starring Louis Bennison has just been completed. The picture is said to be a fast moving, full-of-action, drama of the plains.

Mr. Bennison, famous on the stage and screen for his delightful and true to life portrayals of Western cowboy roles plays the part of a true son of the West.

In the cast are Ormi Hawley, Henry Mortimer, Burton Churchill, Jane Adler and John Daly Murphy.

The feature will be released by Goldwyn May 11.

Ford Builds Studio on Coast

It was announced from the West Coast this week that Francis Ford has started work on a new studio at Sunset Boulevard and Gower street, Los Angeles, which is expected to be ready for use about the first of May.

In the meantime Director Ford is shooting on the first episode of a new serial. Principals in the company with Francis Ford are Rosemary Theby, Elsie Van Name, Doris Dare, Pete Gerald, Nigel De Bullier, Mark Fenton, Phil Ford, Jack Lawton, V. Olivo, Jerry Ash and Johnny Thwaites, camera man.

Prepares Special Campaign for Buyer

Arrow Film Corporation is preparing a special advertising campaign through its director of advertising and publicity, P. B. Dana, for E. K. Fox, of Washington, on the special feature, "The Law of Nature." W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, recently concluded a deal whereby Fox takes over the state rights for twelve states: Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi.

"The Law of Nature" will be sent on the road by Fox, with advance men and special advertising campaigns. In all, ten prints will be used.

David G. Fischer produced "The Law of Nature" in collaboration with Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson. It is a seven reel super-production and the first of a series of eight special features that will be produced by Mr. Fischer this year.

Says Vitagraph-Morey Feature Goes Big

The New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Boston branch offices of the Vitagraph have already reported from forty-five to sixty days of solid bookings on Harry T. Morey's recent release, "Fighting Destiny."

Vitagraph declares that this group of eastern exchanges is but the forerunner of what will be the biggest write-up ever scored on a Morey picture and that dates are now being refused all over the circuit for immediate runs and later dates are being covered with remarkable snap on the part of theatre managers.

"Fighting Destiny" was directed by Paul Scardon and was adapted from the sensational story, "Jungleheart," by Stanley Shaw.

Record Number of Houses Book Houdini

It is declared that what film distributors concede to be the largest number of bookings ever obtained for any serial in the Borough of Manhattan has been obtained by Cary Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, for Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery."

Mr. Wilson, in his report to Octagon Films, states that the Houdini serial has been booked in one hundred and twenty-five houses in Manhattan alone.

Announces Speedy Drama

"Speedy" was the term used by Famous Players-Lasky in announcing for release on April 13, "The Roaring Road," a Paramount picture in which Wallace Reid has the leading role. The star has the part of Toodles Waldon, an auto salesman who aspires to be a speed king. He also wants to marry the daughter of his employer. Exhibitors will probably be able to guess the rest.

In the cast of "The Roaring Road" are Ann Little, Theodore Roberts, Guy Oliver and C. H. Geldart.

Dorothy Dalton in "The Homewrecker"

COMING just at the time when there is so much discussion as to whether the women who went to work to win the war should continue to hold men's places or whether they should retire to feminine pursuits, here is a point that all who book Dorothy Dalton in "The Homewrecker" should feature.

In all of the exploitation it should be brought out that this is neither a problem drama or a sex play. Although there is an interesting plot, you should tell your patrons that the sort of comedy that brings smiles without inviting boisterous laughter predominates and this can easily be brought out by using bright and breezy selling talks.

Dorothy Dalton herself is your biggest selling argument and her name should be played in large type, her picture should be displayed prominently and her personality sold to the patron. At the same time we would be sure to see that everyone understands that this is distinctly a different sort of a picture than most of those in which she has appeared. Don't be content to say that it is "different." Just omit that and tell why it is.

Your appeal here is equally strong to the working women and to society folk, for both of these elements enter. But do not turn the exploitation too strong toward the suffragette end, for though Miss Dalton plays the role of a traveling saleswoman who has the men all second in the merchandise running, she is purely a woman at heart as the picture early develops.

THE story: We are introduced to Mary Marbury, travelling salesman for Abbott & Son at the station of a typical tank town and through the presence of a bunch of male "drummers" we get a close-up of her character when one of them says that she is the sort of a woman you can take the chance of writing to your wife about and another observes that it is "durned near a pleasure to lose a sale to her."

Right here we are introduced to a man and woman crook who are being escorted out of the town and on the train the man attempts to make love to an innocent little country girl, only to be protected by Mary. Just a little incident to show the true nature of the woman and to get the pair of crooks fixed firmly in our minds.

It is generally understood in mercantile circles that Mary is to become the wife of the junior member of the firm, but when she returns from her trip Abbott, Sr., points out that the son is devoting all his time to frivolity. "The only letters he can find time to open are invitations to foolish parties and dinners at the country club." The motherless daughter is also equally devoted to the lighter side of life. "Home is too quiet and father too slow," is their idea, as expressed in one of the titles.

Here the crooks enter the story again, this time as Fernando Poyntier and his sister, posing as noble people, the man seeking to marry Lois Abbott and the woman to win the son. Mary understands humanity, and as she observes, she has gotten her relaxation watching staid business men trying to prove to hotel waitresses that they are single.

SO she uses her knowledge of people and her salesmanship methods in effecting a cure. She finally convinces Abbott, Sr., to embark on a life of frivolity and to give his children an overdose of frivolity. "How did you make a success in business?" she asks him. And then answers: "By giving them what they want. You never tried to sell them cotton when they asked for silk."

He proceeds to turn his home into the headquarters of the gay set with Mary as his constant companion. He becomes a dance fiend in public, and a very tired old man when none are looking. At first the young folks enjoy it, but they soon become disgusted and suspicious, though they continue their foibles, even to the point of Lois preparing to elope with the supposed Spaniard, only to be foiled by Mary. Then with their plans frustrated they carry out their plan for robbery and hide the loot on Abbott's new yacht. Here again Mary outdoes them and in the end young Abbott comes to see the real worth of the best saleswoman and all ends happily.

A LITTLE TRICK

An Old Song Helps Put the Punch in This One

HERE we have a staid old business man pretending to be converted to the fast society life and there is a point in the story where there is introduced a grandmother who acts like a young girl. The introduction comes shortly before we have a scene in which a phonograph record is put on the machine.

If you have a phonograph and the stunt has not been done too much you can get a good laugh by playing a few bars of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." It is one of the plaintive melodies, but the effect on your audience will be just the opposite. If you do not want to use the phonograph record, by all means have your orchestra render the selection.

Charm of Star's Role Here Point to Be Featured

RIGHT at the top of all of your advertising we would advise the use of an attractive cut of Dorothy Dalton, either a half tone or a line, according to the kind of printing you get in your newspaper. Practically all of the action centers around her and you have the advantage of a beautiful woman to get attention to your display.

Naturally you will then follow with the title which gives some suggestion that this might be one of the vampire types of pictures, especially since this star has appeared so often in this sort of production. Therefore the selling arguments should disabuse that idea and at the same time get the happy element into the exploitation.

You can interest every woman who is engaged in business in any way in this, and most managers are content to get the female attraction because they feel sure that the fair ones will draw the men along with them. But here just a few quotations from the picture will show the men that the love and comedy elements are strong and that there is something here other than a discussion of woman's rights and things of that sort.

You might use this line:

"You've seen Dorothy Dalton lots of times as a vampire. Here we have her as an antidote for vampires—both the male and female varieties."

THAT line can be played in twelve or fourteen point type directly under the title of the picture, but we would take the space to go a little further. The additional matter can be set in smaller type, but there should be plenty of white space left at either side so that it will stand out. Here are a few of the arguments that you can give your people:

"Mary Marbury didn't have a bit of trouble in selling goods on the road. In fact, her male rivals were almost glad when they lost a customer to her. But when she got back home after her most successful trip she found that she was about to lose the son of her employer, who had been distinctly 'sold' in the fast set. And she found that his sister was about to become the victim of society crooks.

SAVE THEM!

Where Your Filing Cabinet Comes In Handy

THIS picture gives the exhibitor, who has preserved his pictures of Dorothy Dalton a chance to make a display that will be worth while. Successful showmen are now making it a habit of preserving all their stills of stars so that they are able to make cut outs on later pictures, showing roles that she has played before and the difference in the current picture.

Cost of the filing cabinet is mighty little in comparison with the dollars that it will bring you in the long run. If you are one of those that cannot do the little stunt suggested on the next page, make a resolution that in the future you will keep the material and be prepared.

"Mary didn't use cheap heroics or appeals to the heart when she went out to sell goods and she didn't use them now. But she knew men and women and she knew how to disgust the son and daughter with their outlook on life—and she used their own father as the means. Heavens, and how the pair of them put the vampires to rout.

"'She's the sort of a girl that any drummer could take a chance in writing to his wife about,' was the way one of the traveling men described Mary Marbury, who had them all beat in selling goods. And that's the sort of a girl she was.

"And so the son of her employer, the young man she loved couldn't understand it at all when he saw her carrying on at a great rate with his own father. Gee, but he was sore—so sore that he became disgusted with the fast life that he was leading—and that was just the big idea that the best saleswoman in New York was trying to sell him."

"Everybody supposed that Raymond Abbott was going to marry his father's crack saleswoman who had it on all the traveling men when it came to getting customers. But when she got back home she found that Raymond was mighty fond of the white lights. He hadn't exactly forgotten about her, but he was neglecting business for the gay life and his sister, too, was slipping near the edge of the abyss.

"Mary Marbury was too good a saleswoman to try to sell a customer cotton when he wanted silk. So she decided what the young Abbotts needed was an overdose of what they thought she wanted. And they got it when they saw their aged father and Mary doing the latest dances together and entertaining the high livers. The old man trusted Mary because he knew that she could 'deliver the goods.' And she did—and you'll want to see how."

THERE is a striking scene picture showing Miss Dalton as the saleswoman with a grip in her hand. A cut out can be made from this and if you are preparing your own advertising you can get some mighty good results with it.

Then here are some of the shorter lines that may be used:

"Mary Marbury, crack saleswoman, had only to show her samples and she sold the goods. When she felt her fiancee slipping away from her she simply sold him an overdose of the things he thought he wanted, and the cure was complete. And there are a lot of laughs with the medicine."

"Out on the road, selling more goods than any of her men rivals, Mary Marybury had to meet all sorts of emergencies. She believed in action, and when she saw her fiancee and his sister slipping into the clutches of the fast set she ACTED—with their aged father as her foil. Something did it? Was it her business training or her woman's wiles?"

"Business trained Abbott's crack saleswoman to be ready when it came time to act. Abbott Sr. was faced with a problem that he couldn't solve and his son and daughter were at stake. And when Mary told him what to do he did it. He didn't care if it did look like he was making a fool out of himself. He knew that MARY KNEW—see how well she did."

At left, the " best salesman" is hailed at the station by her friendly rivals, and at the right the grandmother, who insists on being a girl and associating with the gay set, and in the center, Mary and the son in the final love scene

Strong Appeal Can Be Made to All Business Women

IF you are located in a theatre where there are many women who are engaged in business or who have come to look on that side of life as the result of war activities you can get added interest in this picture. But don't make any of your exploitation in the slightest offensive. There are a lot of women who do not like to be referred to as "working people," and this can be just as well done without introducing the personal element.

It will be worth your while to get a list of the women employed in your community. If you will point out to the employers that this is a picture that shows how much business knowledge added to one woman's happiness and the respect that it gives for women who make their own way in the world they will be more than likely to give you a list of their people with their addresses.

We would then prepare a special letter to these, omitting any reference to the fact that the one addressed is in business and carrying out something of the same argument we have given in the advertising suggestions. It shouldn't be long. Here's the idea:

"Mary Marbury outsold all the traveling men, visited her territory, and she did it so well that they gloried in her success, for Mary was the sort of a girl who put the sunshine into everything that she did. She made her womanhood fit her for business and then her training fitted her all the more for winning the man she loved.

"When she found that her fiancee, and the son of her employer, was being lured into the gay life and that his sister was about to become the victim of an adventurer, she simply used her business sense—she told the youth an overdose of what he thought he wanted and he was mighty glad to get her in the end.

"Does business make woman better fitted to win the man she loves The answer is given by Dorothy Dalton in 'The Homebreaker," at the Empire theatre next week, when she discloses a sure cure for vampires."

HOW THEY START

Just a Little Teaser for the Would Be Actresses

OF course there are a lot of girls in your section that want to be "movie stars." Many of them think that they could jump right in and outshine Dorothy Dalton and Marguerite Clark at the start. So for a newspaper story of them for your program here is a little stunt that will attract attention.

There is a little incident where the crook tries to kiss a little country girl on the train. Tell your patrons that this shows how actresses get their start in pictures—to be seen only for a few seconds in a big production. Then you might add a line:

"But who knows that this little girl who is just getting her first chance on a few feet of film will be a great star some of these days?"

It is very likely to cause talk, especially among the girls to whom the business woman angle of the picture might not appeal.

WE would confine the lobby display on this one largely to Dorothy Dalton herself. If you try to get too much jazz stuff into it you are likely to leave the impression that this is a dance hall or vampire sort of production and so lose the appeal.

However there is a three sheet that can be used as a cut out without any danger of this sort: It shows the full figure of Miss Dalton dancing with her aged employer, whose make-up is such as to suggest comedy right away. Another appealing cut out can be made from a one sheet that shows the head and bust of the star.

If you can dig up any of the stilld on old productions that shows Miss Dalton as a vampire, you can get a mighty contrasty effect and one that will cause talk by using a couple of the scenes at the top and then ring these with arrows pointing to the name of the star. Then add the words: "You all know what a wonderful success Dorothy Dalton was as a vampire. Now you see her as an antidote for them—male and female. If you don't see her in 'The Homebreaker' you'll miss her at her most charming best." Then follow this with scenes from this picture.

WE would keep the entire bill with this this picture light and you will get the best results. The humor of the picture is mainly of the subtle sort and there is such a spirit of evident happiness from the start that it should be helped along by light and airy music.

There is a song that can be well used as a prelude to the picture, "Mary is a Grand Old Name." It was one of the hits of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" some fifteen years ago. This can be carried into the picture on the orchestra or organ because Mary is introduced almost immediately.

There are quite a few dance scenes in the picture where dance music should be played and there is one point where Mary shows her dance card to the son, filled with the name of her father. Here you will make a hit by playing "He's Had No Loving in a Long, Long Time."

At the scene where the crook attempts to make love to the little country girl on the train you can get a good effect by playing "Comin' Thro' the Rye" with something of a burlesque effect. When Mary interferes and takes charge of her the orchestra should shift to some such selection as "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Sweet Genevieve" or "Pal of Mine" so as to get the dreamy sort of friendship music into the picture.

Comedies used on this bill should be of the farcical sort with a lot of lively music and this will also be a good place to employ a scenic since most of the action of the feature uses interiors.

Garrett Buys Thomas Features

Gets World Rights Except United States and Canada—First is "As a Man Thinks"—Hodkinson Releases Them

SIDNEY GARRETT, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., film exporters, has closed a contract for world's rights, except the United States and Canada, for the entire series of six Augustus Thomas feature photoplays, the first of which, "As a Man Thinks," is soon to be released by Producer Harry Raver of Four Star Pictures, under the new Raver plan of production involving co-operative equality between producer, author, star and director.

This important series of productions will be distributed throughout America by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe system of offices. "As a Man Thinks" will be the first production to go out under the new Hodkinson sales policy of unrestricted open booking.

In discussing this contract Mr. Garrett declared his conviction that the public has come to regard the value of a photoplay with a great author's name attached to it, as infinitely superior to that which carries the name of a star only.

"I have seen Mr. Thomas' first play of the new series, 'As a Man Thinks,' said Mr. Garrett. I may say that there is not a single defect in the production. It is a splendid drama splendidly visualized.

"The connection between Mr. Thomas and Mr. Harry Raver, producer of Four Star pictures, came at the psychological moment to take full advantage of the undoubted revulsion of public sentiment against the over-touted star. It is not saying too much, I think, to prophesy that Mr. Raver's lead in playing up the author will be followed by many big concerns within the next twelve months.

"The Augustus Thomas series was launched with the idea of creating new picture audiences. This it will undoubtedly do. I wonder how many people realize the enormous public of this great author.

"The mere statistics concerning Thomas are startling. He has thirty-three live plays on the speaking stage, and his name may be said to be an almost household word. Few Americans exist who are not familiar with some of his works.

"More than half the people of this country are not regular patrons of the motion pictures. They prefer to stay at home and read. Why is that? Simply because the mental pabulum of the average picture offering is not up to the requirements of certain elements in the amusement-loving public.

"So long as stars are stars it will be necessary to play up to the star, but a combination such as this Raver-Thomas-Baird-Irving organization in the sequence of producer, author, star and director, promises bigger and better pictures than we have ever had, because this idea is going to take hold with a great grip. It is just what had to come. A change was vitally necessary to the well-being of the industry, both as an industry and as an art.

"The real solution of getting new picture audiences has been hit upon in this Raver-Thomas combination. It consists in adequate production of the works of a front rank author. It must be the highest class of production. The books of the big writers must be brought to life. Nothing less than that will do. Emphasis must be placed on faithful picturization of the story. Directors must not take too many liberties with the story.

Wheeler Dryden, star of Gray Seal Comedies

Two Directors for Wheeler Dryden

President George Julian Houtain, of Gray Seal Productions, announces that the production of the first Wheeler Dryden comedy is now in progress at the Estee Studio, New York City.

Supporting Wheeler Dryden is Grace Harte. Others in the cast include Eddie Boulden, who played the lounge lizard in "The Venus Model" with Mabel Normand, Jessie Stevens and Yale Benner.

The co-directors are "Doc" Charles Ranson, creator of Plastic Comedies, and for six months comedy director for the old Biograph and other companies, while the other director is Charles Morgan Seay. In charge of the Camera is O. George Brautigan. The comedy is being produced under the supervision of John McCutcheon, production manager.

Photoplay Supplement New, Says Hammons

THAT the issues of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement are not made up from cuttings from various feature films and that the line-up of six or seven stars in a single reel is not secured in this way. Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation wants it to be known that every foot of "The Supplement" is new, original and exclusive, and that none of the material has ever appeared before in any form and that exhibitors who use "The Supplement" are assured of the same sort of novel and interesting material that has made "Photoplay" and other fan publications popular with the public.

Continuing, Mr. Hammons says: "Rather than a mere assembly of cuttings, the production of the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" is a task that requires considerable ingenuity. Two crews, each consisting of a director and cemeraman, are aat work securing negative—one in the East and the other on the Pacific Coast. When it is considered that more than seventy-five of the better-known stars will appear in the twelve issues of 'The Supplement,' some idea of the details involved become evident.

"To secure the material desired—close-ups of the stars in their leisure hours—requires much time, patience, and a sure knowledge of just what the public wants. No scene can be carelessly 'shot,' and the care and thought that has been devoted to the planning of the material is very clearly demonstrated in the quality of the first four releases."

Winthrop Kelley Goes to West Indies

Winthrop Kelley, it is announced from Los Angeles, left for several months' sojourn in the West Indies, where he will direct three seven-reel special features for Williamson Brothers. Mr. Kelley made "The Submarine Eye" for the Williamsons about two years ago.

"The Scarlet Trail"

The Modern Feature Photo Plays, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, through Charles H. Streimer, has purchased from the G & L Features the rights to exhibit "The Scarlet Trail" in New York City and New York State.

"The Scarlet Trail," which is based on the book "Don't Take a Chance," by Charles Larned Robinson, has been endorsed by the Social Hygiene Department of the American Defense Society. The principal roles in this six-reeler are acted by Beth Ivins and Vincent Coleman. The direction was by John S. Lawrence.

Netter Buys One

Leon D. Netter, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, of Cleveland, Ohio, while enroute from that city to San Francisco, recently closed a deal with James Keane for the distribution of "The Spreading Evil" in Ohio. It is announced the picture has been passed by the Ohio censorship board without a cut.

Sylvia Breamer is presented in Frank G. Hall's Special release, "A House Divided," a J. Stuart Blackton production

Pioneer States Rights "The Boomerang"

"The Boomerang," from the novel of the same name by William Hamilton Osborne, which the Pioneer Film Corporation will release on the State rights basis, has a cast that might very properly be termed "all-star," according to Pioneer.

In addition to Henry B. Walthall, who played the leaading role, the players who enact this drama of love and intrigue, capital and labor are, Helen Jerome Eddy, Melbourne McDowell, Nina Byron, Gordon Sackville, Richard Morris, Beulah Booker and Maryland Morne. All of these people have made names for themselves, especially Miss Eddy, who will be well remembered for her work in many of the Paramount Pictures, and Miss Bryon who has appeared as leading lady with William S. Hart in several pictures. Mr. McDowell is one of the best known "heavies" on the screen and does some of his greatest work as the Capitalist in "The Boomerang."

The Boomerang is in seven reels. The scenario was done by Franklyn Hall.

Gale Henry Print

R. C. Cropper, general manager of the Bee Hive Exchanges in Indianapolis, Milwaukee, and Chicago, has received an advance print of the first Gale Henry release which he is distributing in the Central States. The title is "A Wild Woman," and the Chicago office is showing it to exhibitors daily. Thus far not a single exhibitor who has seen it has failed to book it, an announcement states.

"Power" in Canada

One of the very few Canadian-made features was given a presentation at the Family theatre, Ottawa, during the first half of the week of April 7. This was a picture entitled "Power," the star of which is Holbrook Blinn. This feature was made by the Canadian National Features, Limited, now defunct, at the moving picture studio at Trenton, Ontario, about two years ago. Two features were made by this company, and they have been shown rather extensively throughout Eastern Canada.

Christie Comedies Finding Demand Abroad

AFTER a conference held in Los Angeles between C. H. Christie, of the Christie Film Co., and Reginald Ward, foreign distributor, it was announced that new contracts had been closed for the foreign rights to Christie Comedies. One of the important deals was the selection of Cinematograph Harry of Paris to handle the rights in France, and to succeed the Gaumont Company in that territory, although that company will still handle the rights for Great Britain.

Mr. Warde also announced that a new contract had been closed covering the sale of all Christie comedies for the Caribbean territory for the coming year through the Caribbean Film Corporation, including the territory of Cuba, Porto Rico, Central American States, Venezuela and other republics. Another contract has just been renewed for Australia and New Zealand and another with the Albion Cinema for India, which now has four big cities where American films are becoming very popular.

"The remarkable thing," said Mr. Warde in discussing the foreign market, "is the fact that foreign buyers have many times been offered 75 per cent of the product for a year, and in every case have come back for the remainder. Out of one hundred pictures, not one has been turned down by the foreign buyers. This, I think, is a great tribute to the producing genius of Al E. Christie, and demonstrates the uniform good quality of the subjects offered.

"Every country in the world of any consequence, with the exception of Russia and the Central Powers, are booking these films. This means that the comedies are shown everywhere and that American films are used from Great Britain to the Dutch East Indies and from Scandinavia to South Africa and the Balkan States.

Sherry Values Film Above the Newspaper

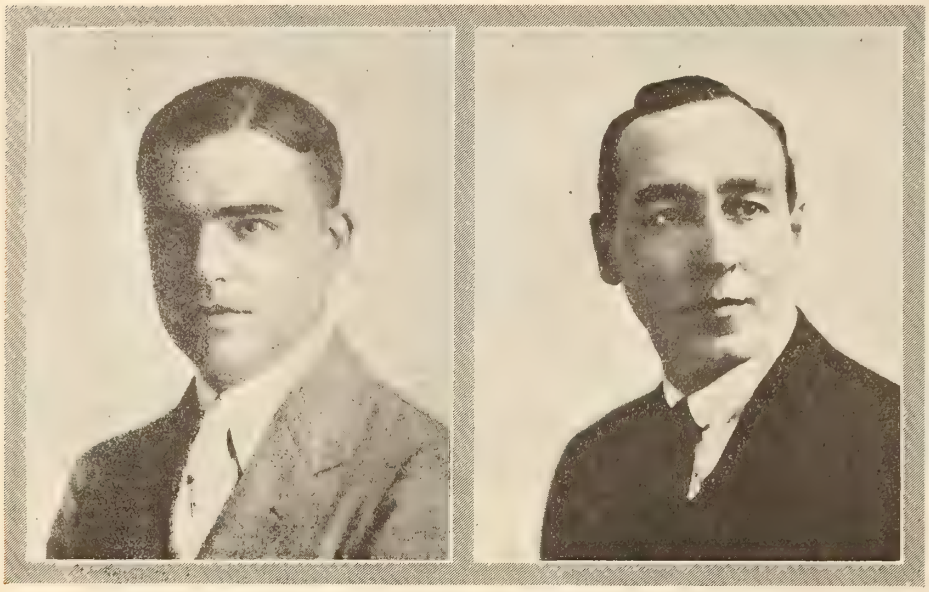
WILLIAM L. SHERRY, head of the Sherry Service, in a letter to Richard W. Austin, president of the American Recreation League, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., in reply to questions issued by the league as to the value of the motion picture in fighting popular misunderstanding of government policies connected with the readjustment period following the war, writes in part:

"There is no doubt in my mind that an Idea can be rammed home via the screen with far more certainty where the great mass of people is concerned than by any other process. An astonishing number of men and women who read the daily papers more or less regularly do not read them understandingly. I am willing to wager that you might pick up a hundred ordinary folk at random after they have read the newspapers coming downtown in the subways or elevated roads and discover, on questioning them, that their ideas of public questions discussed in the news and editorials of the papers they have glanced over are just as casual as the glances they gave each subject.

"Pictures give a greater number of people a more compreshensive idea of any subject now before the public than any amount of controversial writing. Subjects dealt with on the screen if properly captioned with a view to making them intelligible create a distinct impression on the mind. If the United States authorities have not thoroughly digested the lesson taught by screen propaganda during the war, they have been asleep at the switch. One good motion picture film teaching lessons in finance, industry, sociology or patriotism will reach the eyes of millions of Americans in a day if properly distributed, whereas lecturers as individuals can appeal only to small audiences here and there."

Mix Reissues Ready

Exclusive Features, Inc., of 126 West 46th street, New York, announced this week that it is ready to reissue a series of fourteen single reel Western comedies featuring Tom Mix. These were selected, the announcement states, from a large number of single reel Mix negatives



C. E. Shurtleff and J. Frank Brockliss, who will produce from stories by Jack London

C. E. Shurtleff Joins J. F. Brockliss

Intention Is to Produce Jack London Stories as Feature Productions—Scenarios Being Prepared for Early Start

ONE of the developments of the past week in motion picture circles was the combination between C. E. Shurtleff and J. Frank Brockliss, for the purpose of producing the Jack London stories.

Mr. Shurtleff was until this spring, general sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

He resigned from this organization in order to concentrate his time on tying up the Jack London material. To this he made a trip to California about thirty days ago, visiting Mrs. London personally and spending considerable time on the famous London ranch in the Valley of the Moon.

Mr. Shurtleff stated in his initial announcement, after securing the Jack London stories, that it was his purpose to make only big pictures as he was convinced that the market of the present and future was in need of this sort of picture material.

Mr. Brockliss' own statement which is given in part as follows, is of interest. "I was very much attracted to Mr. Shurtleff's idea of turning the story material of one of the biggest American authors into pictures. The bigness of Mr. Shurtleff's plans and the undoubted quality of the material he has secured, were most encouraging and I have deeply rooted feelings that this undertaking is going to be one of the biggest that I have ever embarked upon.

"I didn't come to a decision upon the matter without considerable thought and I am very well satisfied with the entire situation as it stands today.

"Until Mr. Shurtleff returns from a trip which he is making to the coast, temporary headquarters will be at my offices at 729 7th Avenue. But not later than May first will we open our own offices, and commence production."

Mr. Shurtleff stated to a representative of the NEWS that the new corporation will be called "C. E. Shurtleff, Inc."

While it is not definitely decided which of the stories will be selected for the first production, scenarios and continuities are being prepared, and a committee will decide which will be picturized first.

One portion of Mr. Shurtleff's statement is as follows: "While I have extensive knowledge and experience in distribution matters, I realize that producing is more or less a new book to me and for this reason, as well as to procure the best pictures possible, we are going to obtain the best director possible. I am convinced from my experiences in the field that big director, casts and settings must be added to big stories to make them really super-productions.

"Then again the Jack London material must be made properly to redeem my promise to Mrs. London, as it is her desire to have these pictures a more or less permanent memorial to her late husband."

Prosperous Year Predicted by P. E. Meyer

Accoring to Independent Sales Corporation, P. E. Meyer, manager of the New York branch and one of the youngest men in the trade to hold an executive's seat in a New York exchange, reports that during the time intervening since the signing of the armistice, business recorded at the New York office has increased at the rate of four per cent, leaving the total gain in bookings since the second week in November last, more than triple that of the last month of hostilities.

Mr. Meyer said that everything points to the most prosperous year ever experienced in the industry. "I am basing my opinion on the bookings," said Mr. Meyer. "If the bookings from any one branch show an increase, they all profit. The exhibitor is the indicating hand that registers the temperature of the industry."

Educationals Register in Cleveland Theatres

According to a communication received by the Argus Motion Picture Company, Cleveland representatives of the Educational Films Corporation, Manager Fred Desberg, of the Alhambra and Mall theatres of that city, states that the recent special Educational release, "The Storm," was an unusual picture, and that he could not help extending his congratulations.

"The Storm" is one of the most wonderful single-reel subjects ever photographed, and is just what the title indicates—the first truly descriptive picture of a terrific storm. The opportunities for effects and music are easily apparent, declared Mr. Desberg.

Christie's Two-Reelers Claim Special Casts

Director Al E. Christie announces that in his second two-reeler he will have a special cast including Fay Tincher, Patricia Palmer, Harry Depp, Eddie Barry, Marjorie Payne and others. This is in line with the policy started in the first of these productions.

"Sally's Blighted Career," which is being released April 20, has Fay Tincher, Molly Malone, Harry Depp and Patricia Palmer in the cast.

In the second release, Fay Tincher will portray the part of a rough western cowgirl in the atmosphere of a fashionable girls' boarding school.

Buys Four Subjects

Advices from the Coast announce that Sam Whitehead, special representative of the M and R Feature Film Exchange, of San Francisco, has returned to that city after a long stay in Los Angeles, where he secured state rights to four subjects.

The pictures bought for California, Arizona and Nevada, are "The Lady of the Dugout," "Mother, I Need You," "Superstrategy" and "What Every Mother Knows."

Gale Henry, Laugh-Getter in Bulls Eye Pictures

Miller Not Directing Norma Talmadge

While Charles Miller has directed Norma Talmadge in the past, and was responsible for "The Ghosts of Yesterday, conceded by many to be one of her finest productions, he is not directing Miss Talmadge at present.

This corrects any impression gained from the caption published under Mr. Miller's cut appearing in the last issue of Motion Picture News. This caption would cause some readers to believe that Mr. Miller was directing Miss Talmadge at the present time.

Charles Miller has joined Frank Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, and will produce a series of special productions under the corporate name, Charles Miller Productions, Inc. He not only has directed Norma Talmadge, but has also directed Bessie Love, in "The Sawdust Ring"; Dorothy Dalton, in "The Flame of the Yukon," and many other successes.

"Maciste" Campaign Takes on Form

The Bee Hive Exchage, of Chicago, announced this week that publicity for Maciste in "The Liberator" is fast forming itself into a campaign. The first trade ads appeared during the week of April 12.

The Italian papers of Chicago have already had the announcements, and every newspaper in the states of Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin has been furnished with press stuff, and offered the entire story in serial form together with free mats and rights for publishing.

Newspaper campaigns will be carried as well as the usual line of lithos, cuts, banners, and incidental novelties such as pluggers and throw-aways. Trade papers are also carrying ads.

Philipp Forms Company

It was announced this week by Paul Philipp that Adolf Philipp has organized the Apollo Amusement Company, Inc., with offices at 1482 Broadway, New York, to film productions from the pen of Adolf Philipp. The latter, who is well known as an author and composer, will also appear in the productions of the company, which is headed by Paul Philipp as president and business representative.

The organization expects to use a New York studio, and plans to begin actual production work about May 15.

Blackton Engages Gordon

In his next feature, the title and theme of which are a bit of a mystery yet. J. Stuart Blackton, of Blackton Productions, Inc., will bring together again the team of players. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, whose work in Mr. Blackton's production of "Missing" will be recalled as a distinct feature of that Paramount Picture.

This means that Mr. Blackton has again signed Robert Gordon, who will also be remembered for his "Huck" with Jack Pickford in the "Huck and Tom" pictures and in other Paramount features.

Claims Fascinating and Varied Background

HILLER AND WILK, representatives of Maurice Tourneur Productions, Inc., of the Longacre Building, New York, disclosed in an announcement this week that the title of Maurice Tourneur's newest production, "The White Heather," which they expect will shortly have a showing at a New York theatre, has aroused widespread interest.

"The White Heather," as has been chronicled in Motion Picture News, is adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama. Indirectly, it has been cited, the title comes from the good luck flower of the Scotch highlands, the white heather. Yet Scotland, it should be explained, is the background for but a part—and a minor part—of the melodrama. The action centers around the recovery of a marriage record from the hulk of a destroyed yacht, called "The White Heather." The big scenes of the melodrama take place at the bottom of the sea, where the hero and the villain, in the weird costumes of deep sea divers, fight to the death on the ocean floor.

Thus the thrilling portion of "The White Heather" has the bottom of the sea for its background. For those scenes Mr. Tourneur employed the newest inventions of the Williamson Brothers, whose sub-sea photography devices made possible the under water scenes of "The Submarine Eye" and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Much of the story centers in London, revolving between the financial district and the slums. In the scenes "on change" Mr. Tourneur employed thousands of players.

"The White Heather" has a cast including H. E. Herbert, little Ben Alexander, the child who scored in "The Turn of the Road" and "Hearts of the World," Ralph Graves, Mabel Ballin, Jack Gilbert and Spottiswood Aitken.

The releasing arrangements for "The White Heather" have not been announced.

Says "The Storm" Wins Much Special Praise

THE Alhambra and Mall Theatres, of Cleveland, Ohio, had an unusual experience with the recent Educational special release, "The Storm," and Manager Fred Desberg writes to the Argus Motion Picture Co., who are the Cleveland representatives of the Educational Films Corporation, and says "that he cannot help extending his congratulations for the consistent quality of the recent scenic releases, and on "The Storm" in particular.

He writes, "We showed this subject at the Alhambra three days, using electrical effects and special music, and it went over so big that people called us on the 'phone for several days asking where they could see it. In consequence of this, we repeated this picture at our Mall Theatre, this being a strictly first-run house, too, by the way." "The Storm" is one of the most wonderful single-reel subjects ever photographed, and is just what the title indicates—the first truly descriptive picture of a terrific storm. The opportunities for effects and music are easily apparent.

In concluding his letter, Manager Desberg says, "Another picture which was particularly good was the recent Robert C. Bruce subject, "The Wanderer and the Whozitt." Few exhibitors appreciate scenic pictures and the efforts now being made to make them artistically beautiful.

Arrow Reports Business Rushing

"When the Desert Smiles" and Other Pictures Sold for Kansas and Missouri—Territory on "Today" Sold

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, reports unusual activity in the state right market. During the past week the Arrow company has sold much territory for a number of their features.

Among the sales reported for the week are:

"When the Desert Smiled," starring Neal Hart, and "The Web of Intrigue," "Human Shuttles," "The Fire of Hope" and "The Shadow of Fear," the Harold Lockwood-May Allison re-issues, sold for Kansas and Missouri to Richards and Flynn of the First National Film Co., Kansas City, Mo.

Also unsold territory on "To-day" featuring Florence Reed, and "The Mad Lover" featuring Robert Warwick, for the state of Missouri to the Strand Film Company, Empress Theatre Building, St. Louis, Mo.

To the Supreme System, Inc., 606 Film Building, Minneapolis, Minn., for the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota and North Wisconsin.

Also the following sales to the Southeastern Pictures Corp., A. C. Bromberg, general manager, 61 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.: A series of twelve two reel Mustang drama re-issues. "The Mysterious Mr. Browning," a H. N. Nelson production starring Walter Miller, Paul Panzer and Edna Maison. "When the Desert Smiled" starring Neal Hart. Six Monopol Film Company re-issues, namely, "The Burning Silence," "Dim Faces of the Underworld," "Sinners Three," "The Greyhounds," "The Barrier Between" and "The Road of Tears."

The S. & S. Film & Supply Co., Inc., 414 Penn Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., purchased "The Mysterious Mr. Browning" and "When the Desert Smiled."

William Politzer, Queen Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, purchased the re-issued serial "The Demon's Shadow" for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Southern Ohio, "The Finger of Justice" to the C. C. Hite Attractions, 109 West 5th St., Cincinnati, Ohio. The Revised six reel edition "The Million Dollar Mystery" for the state of Ohio.

From All Sections

Pictures from opposite ends of the world were features of Universal Current Events No. 14, released by International through Universal exchanges the week of April 6. The reel carries several interesting views of Gen. Pershing and the king of the Belgians.

"The Thunder Bolt" Nears Completion

Now that all scenes have been taken for the first release of the Kathrine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, "The Thunder Bolt," it is expected the film world will shortly be given a glimpse at this initial release of this newly formed company of which Sam E. Rork and Charles E. Evans are the guiding geniuses. No announcement is to be made by the company as to how the subject will be released until after it has been given a showing in New York, and as soon as the editing is completed Mr. Rork will go east with the film. Up to this time the new film producing company has received a number of bona fide offers, but they have adhered strictly to the policy of showing the exhibiting organizations what they have before contracting a sale. The initial release is a drama of the south which has been very expensive to produce, owing to the massive settings required and the number of big parts in the photoplay that required players of exceptional ability.

Sells Two States

Jesse J. Goldberg, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, notified the New York office that Richards and Flynn, of Kansas City, Mo., have signed a contract for their six part super production, "Once to Every Man" for the States of Kansas and Missouri.

Get Better Screen Results

USE the Westinghouse Mazda Lamp for Motion Picture Projection and note the great improvement in the clearness, color tone and steadiness of your pictures.

It requires but one adjustment. You can forget all about "craters."

No carbon dust—lessened fire risks—and one-half the current consumption of arc-light projection of equal brilliance and throw.

The Westinghouse Mazda Lamp can be used in all Mazda lamphouses and adapters now on the market for standard motion picture machines.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Design, Location and Equipment of the Modern Projection Room

By A. D. Hotaling, Deland, Fla.—First Prize Class

DESIGN

IN the design of the projection room the first thing to be considered is the size. There should be ample room for all the appliances used, with no crowding, and so that the operator will have sufficient room to operate the various machines, steropticons, etc., without being cramped on account of insufficient room.

The next important subject is an abundance of fresh air at all times. An operating room at its best is far from a healthy place, due to the gaseous fumes cast off by the arc lamp. A vent flue with a suction fan therein should be located in the ceiling over the projectors. This flue should be preferably round, and although the size will vary with the size of the room, one might state that if this flue is 14 inches in circumference, it will answer the purpose very well.

As to the room itself there should be a port or look-out hole for each machine, and of course there must be an aperture for the actual projection of pictures. Some operators prefer round ports and others square. Personally, I prefer the square port for viewing the picture, and round ones for the lens opening. I think this makes a very neat appearance from the auditorium side. If these ports are covered with a good quality plate glass the room will be practically noiseless to the audience. Of course these port holes must be equipped with automatic shutters that will really close in case of fire. While it is pleasant to have a couple of windows in the room, if windows are installed there should be good heavy shades to cover these during the day performances, thus eliminating as much light as possible. The darker the projection room, the better the operator can view the picture, picking out the small defects and remedying them.

SWAAB'S SUPERLITE SCREEN

Is a perfect Silver Screen and will not oxidize; remains bright and Silvery and can be cleaned easily and quickly. Swaab's Superlite Silver Screen now in use in the Stanley and other large representative theatres in this and other cities. Price is 75¢ per square foot. An additional charge is made for the Special Stretcher Frame, according to size, the average extra cost is $30.00. You are not obliged to buy the frame.

NEW SPEER CARBONS

now ready and far superior in quality and screen results to any carbons thus far produced.

SWAAB'S MOTORS

for Power 6A and 6B are pleasing their users—not a single one has fallen down or been returned. They are sold for $37.50 and $40.00 respectively and are complete absolutely. Dealers do not recommend our Motor Equipments because they cannot make anything on them. We have priced them so that the Exhibitor gets the best price regardless of the Dealer. WE ARE EXCLUSIVE DISTRIBUTORS OF THE SIMPLEX MACHINE. We repair all makes of machines and sell all supplies. Your old machines taken in trade for SIMPLEX.

LEWIS M. SWAAB

1327 Vine Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The room must be constructed of fireproof material. The concrete room is ideal in this respect, and it also answers a double purpose in keeping all the noise from the audience, viz.: a motor-generator set in action. There should be at least six feet in length for each machine, and we'll say four feet for each additional projector, spot-light, etc. An eight-foot ceiling should be sufficient.

The rewinding room should be located at one end of the projection room proper, connecting by a suitable door. Also off of the rewinding room could be located a small lavoratory.

LOCATION

It is a known fact that a great many architects in submitting plans for a theatre wholly overlook the most important part of the building, the operating room, and its location. Only too many times it is stuck up in some out of the way corner that could not be used for anything else. At other times it is located at the extreme rear of the balcony, or, worse, a gallery. Perfect results cannot be obtained from locations such as this. If the room is out of line with the screen, either too far to one side or too high above it, there will be caused an effect called frame distortion in the projected image. This distortion will vary more or less, according to the number of feet the booth is out of line. While nearly all operators have had experience in respect to this, I will attempt to briefly explain it. If a machine is sitting, for instance, in a balcony, there must be a perceptible drop in the throw to the screen. This drop causes the light to hit the top of the screen before it does the bottom. Therefore the picture will be larger at the bottom. While this effect can be remedied to a certain extent by special aperture plates, etc., really good results cannot be obtained. It is absolutely impossible to focus the entire field under such a condition, at least this is the way I have found it. In closing I will say that I think the ideal location is about one hundred feet from lens to screen, and not much above it, if any.

EQUIPMENT

The equipment is another very important subject. Theatre managers should bear in mind in equipping their booths that the best is none too good. This may cost a little more at first, but it most emphatically pays in the long run. The room should be equipped with at least two projectors of the latest type made, a double dissolving stereopticon for the artistic handling of slides, and in the event it is a combinaton house, runnng both pictures and vaudeville or road shows, a spot-light should also be included. For the projectors would recommend direct current always, whereas alternating will be entirely satisfactory for the stereopticon and spot-lights. Many power houses are unable to furnish direct current to the theatre. But we are not hindered in this respect, as there are many meritorious devices on the market today which will change A. C. to D. C. Among these can recommend as the best the Hertner Transverter. This is made up especially for motion picture projection and is meritorious in every particular. Other excellent devices are the G. E. and Westinghouse rectifiers, also the Ft. Wayne motor-generator set.

There must of course be a rewinder. A hand-driven one will answer the purpose if handled correctly, but if handled the opposite is the source of great damage to the films. Its greatest evil is what is known to the "profesh" as "pulling down." This is done for the reason that the film may not wrap snugly on the rewinding element, and to accomplish this a few, or should I say great many, operators will hold the reel the film is being unwound from stationary and revolve the other at more or less speed. Thus is there be oil on the film and carbon dust flying around this makes a gritty paste that grinds into the delicate emulsion on the film and scratches it causing what is commonly known as "rain." A good motor-driven rewinder with correct tension as to brake will wind the film tight with practically no scratching due to the steady tension.

While the operating room should be entirely dark during the projection of pictures, there must be a way to instantly flood the room with light in case of trouble. While it is not probable, there is the possibility of a small screw being dropped, and while the operator hunts for it an impatient audience waits, perhaps in the dark. All conduit should be hidden. This makes a much neater appearance, and the operator will not be compelled to stumble over it every time he moves. A switchboard controlling the main auditorium lights should be in easy reach of the operating position.

In closing will say that with an operating room of correct design, location and equipment no projectionist should have any trouble in delivering the goods.

Slide Making

THE many letters received by the Projection Department on the subject of Lantern Slides indicate that an increasing number of projectionists are becoming interested in this work. To all such readers we would suggest writing to the Eastman Kodak Company for a copy of their little handbook on "Lantern Slides, How to Make and Color them." This publication which is being distributed without charge, is complete enough to enable any beginner to have entire success in slide making, yet at the same time, the treatise is written in simple language so that all may understand it.

Some of the subjects in the handbook are: Contact Printing, Printing by Projection, Trial Exposures, Choice of Plates, Developing and the Developer, Over and Under Exposure, Intensification and Reduction, Varnishing, Masking, Binding, Hand Coloring, Tinting, Dye Toning and the Making of Advertising Slides.

The handbook will be a valuable addition to the library of every projectionist who is now, or will be in the future, a maker of lantern slides.

Blank Form for Operator's Report

K. H. MONROE, chief projectionist at the Tucson Opera House, Tucson, Arizona, has adopted a co-operative measure which is not only beneficial to him and his employer, but also to the film exchanges from which subjects are rented. A printed form is supplied the projectionist which is filled out and given to the manager to be sent to the exchange when the film is returned. In several instances where inspection has been slighted at the exchange, Mr. Monroe has discovered defects before the film was run that prevented possible charges being made against his employer. The blank used by Projectionist Monroe is shown herewith:

The use of such a form as the one made up by Mr. Monroe is an excellent accompaniment to N. A. M. L. labels because it carries the good work one step further.

Other projectionists, we know, are using schemes to accomplish the same purpose, and if they would only describe them for the benefit of the readers of the Projection Department, the exchanges would begin to "sit up and take notice."

The projectionists must start things going. But once started, and when the exchanges see that projectionists are trying faithfully to improve the condition of the film by thorough inspection and repair, they will commence to carry out their own part, which in turn will make it easier for the projectionist.

Projection Rooms Need More Measuring Instruments

MANY times a week the Projection Department receives questions from readers which because of insufficient data cannot be answered with any amount of completeness. In a great many of these questions the lacking information consists of figures showing the voltage and current as measured at certain points in the electrical system. There are a huge number of projectionists today who do not realize how much simpler the adjustment and operation of their machines would be if they only had complete "dope" on their current and voltage.

Sometimes we get a letter from a projectionist with whom we sympathize. He writes:

"All I have here is one machine and a home-made rewind table. My boss says I don't need anything more because all he is after is a picture that can be seen pretty well from the back of the house. Some weeks I get a much better picture than others but I don't know whether it is because I am using more current at my arc or if it is due to the new lot of carbons which I have just received. Above all other things I think I could make the best use of a small ammeter and voltmeter."

A few years ago there were very few instruments to be seen on the cowl boards of automobiles. But today practically all cars are equipped with a complete set of instruments for one use or another. Instead of being there merely for ornament they serve a real purpose. They make it possible for the driver of the car to duplicate a previous performance whenever he so desires, for by adjusting the various mechanisms he can bring each instrument to register the same figure as before, thus eliminating all guesswork.

Instruments in the booth accomplish the same purpose exactly. Some morning when the projectionist has time he can adjust his machines to give the very best effects and by noting down the readings of the meters as taken at various places he has the basis on which to work when his machine balks up some time in the future.

It isn't necessary, either that the meters be accurate and hence expensive. There are many instruments on the market today which will give a reading within one half of an ampere or volt consistently. Such instruments will be as satisfactory to the projection machine operator as one which is guaranteed 99.9% accurate.

The small meters illustrated here give very accurate readings on direct current circuits with voltages ranging from 10-150 and amperes from 10-150. They are but slightly over 2" in diameter and are arranged for mounting on a switchboard panel.

For the projection booth we would suggest that if a pair of instruments similar to these are purchased that they be mounted on a small board or on one face of a box. Mounted in this manner, a pair of short lead wires connected to each instrument makes it possible to carry them to any part of the theatre to make tests. With this arrangement, of course, care must be taken that the instruments are not laid away under a bench or a pile of debris where moisture and rust would soon set in. But it seems to us that if a man had a pair of accurate instruments he would realize what they meant to him in the way of getting a better picture with the result that he would take exceptional care of them.

Let's have more measuring instruments in the projection room. We'll show better pictures. There will be fewer delays. And (tell this to your manager) there will be less money paid out for repairs because you will find the trouble long before it gets serious enough to burn out some costly piece of equipment.

From Lansing, Mich.

THIS is the kind of letter we like to get. It makes no difference to us if it is written with pencil, charcoal or raised letters, as long as we can read it.

A. W. Elkins of the Plaza theatre, Lansing, Mich., writes:

"I am about out of labels. Will you send me some more? I was just reading what Robert Smith has to say about conditions of film. I am having about the same trouble with the Select Pictures Corp. I have written the manager and he has promised better film but they are worse if anything.

"I am going to give you a little idea of what the operators of Lansing have to do. When I came here I had two 6A Powers machines pretty well worn out. The manager soon bought two new 6B Powers but my rheostats were only 40 amps., and I had a throw of 135 feet with a picture 13 by 18, so you can see what I was up against. I tried to get him to buy me some new ones of 75 amps., but he said the other operators had got good light and he guessed I could use them.

"But I was not satisfied with the picture so I took an old coil-rheostat which I had and cut it in half. I then connected half on each machine in multiple with the old ones, getting 70 amperes. I tell you it makes some difference in the picture.

"The manager even now won't buy any 75 amp. rheostat, but you wait until I leave and take my old coils with me, then see what he will do. He will tell the new man he is no good because he doesn't get as good a picture as I got.

"I worked in another house in this town for two years. The manager there would not get me any repair parts either.

"We have a Local here but the picture houses are not signed up. They are all doing a good business but do not want to pay anything. I am the best paid man in town. I work 9 hours a day, 7 days a week, for $28. We have another house paying $25 for 8 hour days. These two houses are hiring Union operators. There are three other houses, one of which is paying $20. The operator there has to put up all the bill-board paper and carry films to the express office. The other two are owned by one man and are hiring girl operators and paying them $10.80 per week.

"We have a new wage scale of $32.50 taking effect May 1. with this new scale is included 'two hours off for supper.'

"Hope this letter will be good enough to print."

P. S.—I want to say a few words also on change-over signals. I am going to send you the signs which I used a few days ago on a film "Married in Haste." I know the idea is not new but perhaps if some of those punch experts see these signs they will give up using their favorite tool.

Reply:

Your labels have been sent you by parcel post.

We are glad to get your picture of conditions as they are to be found in Lansing. Sometime managers will realize how much money they would have lost from poor pictures if it had not been for the ingenuity of their projectionists. If the man in the booth showed no interest in the projection outside of seeing that the film ran from one magazine to the other what horrible examples of projection would be seen in every city in this country. It is fortunate for the motion picture industry that the average operator thinks enough of his own work to get to the booth an hour early to inspect and repair the film, as well as to make other minor repairs about the machine.

An Old Friend Again

R. G. of Virginia asks:

"I have several tables of figures showing what size lens to use to obtain a certain size of picture at a given throw, but I would like to know further how these figures are obtained."

Reply:

Although this question has been answered many times in the past we are glad to publish the formula again. Merely substitute your own particular figures in the equation below:

$$\text{E. F. of lens} = \frac{A\,T}{S + A}$$

where A = width of machine aperture; T = length of throw; S = width of picture desired. All of these measurements must be in inches and fractions of inches.

Supposing you have a throw of 125 feet and you want a 16-foot picture. Your machine aperture is 1 inch. You would then have

$$\text{E. F.} = \frac{1 \times 1500}{192 + 1} = 7.8 \text{ inches.}$$

The U. S. Government selected the Universal Motion Picture camera for the exclusive use of the military operators during the war. No other motion picture camera was accorded such distinction, as the Universal is the only camera embodying the special features of compactness, strength and mechanical excellence needed for the trying work of recording military operations under war conditions.

Under the most trying tests to which a motion picture camera has ever been put the Universal performed creditably every time.

The Universal is the ideal, in fact, it is the only motion picture camera for the explorer, traveller and those making educational pictures where compactness is such a prime consideration. Martin Johnson's famous Cannibal Isle pictures were made with a Universal.

It is light in weight: there are no bulky protruding parts. It is easy to operate, quick to load and set up. One master gear operates all moving parts in perfect unity.

Who Are The Music Cues For?

NOW, H. B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., is unquestionably an exhibitor of reputable standing, a man who through progressive methods and a dignified system of exhibiting films has won a place for himself among the foremost exhibitors in the country. The film manufacturing industries owe men of Mr. Franklin's caliber a great deal, for such men are the main factors in helping to establish the motion picture theatre as an amusement center of highest quality and artistic and refined entertainment.

In an article recently published in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Franklin stated that music cue sheets at present are carelessly prepared and "seem to have been inspired by some music publishing house." With all due respect to Mr. Franklin's judgment in such matters, the editor of these columns does not agree with him in this instance.

A music cue sheet of to-day is not designed for such institutions as Shea's Hippodrome or any theatre whose destinies are guided by progressive and constructive managers. The music cue sheet of to-day is nothing but a musical continuity, dividing the film into musical characters. It is not and cannot be a positive solution of the musical problem. It is intended for the daily changing house; in fact, for the majority of exhibitors who are receiving their films one hour or less before the opening performance. I admit most of these music cues create an impression of being inspired by music publishing houses, but only with people who are not acquainted with the real facts.

It is absolutely essential for the benefit of the majority using music cues who are not fortunate enough to be located near a music-buying center, or cannot afford to buy too much music, to use a limited amount of musical selections. In fact, I have made it my business to use the same compositions on as many cues as possible, providing the film permits it. I have selected three hundred musical numbers, each one representing a certain character most likely to appear in the film, and have consistently used them for the past two years in order to induce everybody to get acquainted with their character. For example, I have continuously used a composition entitled, "Bleeding Hearts" for pathetic situations, thereby forcing musicians to buy it and get acquainted with its character and melody. The man receiving a cue sheet with "Bleeding Hearts" as a certain cue knows what to do. He has played the composition, is thoroughly familiar with its character, and therefore knows what to substitute in its place. The main point of the above statement is based on the fact that by using new and unknown compositions on every cue sheet, this method would render the cue sheets worthless to the musician who does not possess the numbers mentioned and cannot substitute them for lack of familiarity with their character.

The cue sheet as suggested by Mr. Franklin "created by a body of musicians" would to quote Mr. Franklin's words "Do away with the invariable touch of the same hand," but would certainly be a great advertisement for music publishers in general, because musicians could not in such case employ their own libraries to substitute numbers mentioned on the cue sheets and would be forced to continuously buy new music. Of what service can a music cue sheet be if the musician who studies it does not understand its musical character, and if it consists of nothing else but a list of unknown titles, he never heard of?

Mr. Franklin also quotes that "the printed music score can better solve the problem of perfect musical interpretation of the film." I also beg to differ in this instance. A music score is a positive suggestion which hardly permits any changes and it is in my estimation very impractical. Every theatre orchestra, organist or pianist is playing music which is within the boundaries of his musical abilities. In fact every music library reflects the musical knowledge of the musician who owns it. A music score is a positive suggestion. It represents the grade and quality of music selected and decided by the man who compiled the score, and I don't believe there ever was a man living or will live whose ideas or decision in reference to grades and quality of selected music can suit and satisfy everybody.

We cannot make music cues or scores for Shea's Hippodrome or any such organization. They can better accomplish it themselves. They have musical directors, guided and supervised by men of ability and in every instance, sufficient time to produce something which is much better than the average music cue, and much better adapted for the local situation and understanding of their patrons. We are making music cues today for the small exhibitor (the majority) who are changing their programs daily, and are not equipped with facilities found in the larger theatres. I never heard of S. L. Rothapfel or Hugo Riesenfeld using the music cue sheets or music score issued by the film companies. They have always proven that they can do it better, and so I believe, has Mr. H. B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.—THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"My Cairo Love," Fox trot, by J. S. Zamecnik. An Egyptian Serenade. Also published as a concert number. An exquisite Oriental melody, originally conceived for concert use and now published as a Fox Trot, and as such it has won immediate popularity. As a concert number for hotel, theatre and dramatic use "My Cairo Love" has already become a general favorite. (Sam Fox Pub. Co., Cleveland, Ohio.)

3—"Gitana," Fox Trot or Tango. A Spanish dance novelty. (Artmusic.)

4—"Goulash," Fox trot. It puts "pep" into the dancing. (Artmusic.)

5—"Somtime It Will Be Lovetime." A beautiful high-class ballad number that is effectively orchestrated and is being featured by New York leaders. (Henry Burr Music Co., 1604 B'way, N. Y.)

6—"The Kiss That Made Me Cry." Another new "cry"—song—the happy successor to "Sorry I Made You Cry." One step, by Archie Cottler. (Leo Feist, 237 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

7—"Ruspana." A great one step, by the composer of "Beautiful Ohio" (Mary Earl). (Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., B'way and 47th St., N. Y.)

8—"Sweet Siamese." A Great Fox trot, by the composer of "Beautiful Ohio." (Shapiro, Bernstein & Co.)

10—"Witches." Waltz Hit from "The Midnight Whirl," one of the present musical comedy successes on Broadway. (McCarty & Fischer, 224 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

11—"Mandarin Dance," by Kempsinski. An eccentric Chinese novelette of concert value and admirably suited for the modern jazz craze. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

12—"Oriental Suite." Portraying the seductive and luxurious Harem, veiled from prying eyes, the approach of the Sultan, causing excitement amongst the inhabitants of the Harem, followed by the amusing love scene and romance in Oriental flavor, closing with a characteristic Oriental dance. (Belwin, Inc.)

13—"Garden Suite." The composer of this delightful suite was inspired by the sunshine and flowers, the love and romance always to be found in a beautiful garden; admirable sequels to Grieg's sparkling "To Spring" and his melancholic "Last Spring" (Belwin, Inc.)

14—"Angelus," by Henry Hadley. An inspired symphonic movement by one of the foremost of living American composers. Melodious, descriptive and very impressive throughout. The arrangement is based entirely upon the original score and has been prepared with such skill as to condense grouping and cueing of instruments as to make it equally serviceable for either small or large instrumental combinations. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., N. Y.)

"The Rescuing Angel"

(Paramount—Directed by Walter Edwards)

CLARE KUMMER'S plays are lending themselves well to screen adaptation if the two subjects already visualized are any criterion. Indeed there is a gossamer quality about them — a fine spirit of make-believe which emphasizes the fact that the camera is not necessarily a blunt instrument and that it can record something else than elemental emotions. The substance of "The Rescuing Angel" is exceedingly light and airy—and sparkling and fragrant, so much so that these qualities are sufficient to tide it over as good pictorial fare.

True, it is that like the rest of the playwright's pieces it is entirely dependent upon crisp dialogue and naive situations and the first element is difficult to transfer upon the screen. Which leads the sponsors to find a substitute for it in the shape of fast moving action. Still, in "The Rescuing Angel" a bit of this humorous and sharp dialogue is incorporated in the sub-titles to bring out the spirit of the play.

It is remarkable that it maintains its substance as a picture considering the short career it had upon the stage with Billie Burke in the title role. But thanks to Director Edwards' gift of comedy, his flair for humorous complications, and his artistic eye—the piece is made an entertaining offering. And Shirley Mason attends to the rest—quite as capably as Billie Burke. Her whimsical personality and unique mannerisms fit the "angel" to the life. Others who lend good comedy proportions to the picture are James Neill, John Steppling, Edythe Chapman, Arthur Carewe and Forrest Stanley.

The story presents much ado about nothing, it being a volume of humorous complications which involve a newly-married couple. The bride leads her relatives and various suitors to believe she is single. A pretty fix indeed! And so it goes. The fast and sparkling action, the rich decorations, the adroit humor conveyed by the star and players—these amply carry it by and suffice to lift it from plot shortcomings. The picture should capture any audience—particularly when it is surfeited with thrillers.—Laurence Reid.

"THE JUNGLE TRAIL"—FOX

William Farnum Traverses the Jungle Wilds

WILLIAM FARNUM here appears in one of those sympathetic roles in which he is double-crossed by the villain, who sends him on a perilous hunting expedition into the wilds of Africa. The villain's motive is to have his rival killed by the guides and then marry the girl, and, of course, he is frustrated, but not until after a varied panorama of action has passed before the eye.

There is a certain obviousness to the story of "The Jungle Trail" that prevents the element of real suspense. Events are so carefully planted at the start that the outlines of the plot can be gambled on as a pretty safe bet.

However, what "The Jungle Trail" does offer in the way of appeal is the varied scenery and action referred to above. Scenes in the jungle, in a hidden city of savages and in conventional civilization lend a flavor distinctly individual to the five reels.

The star is at his best in his scenes of repose or repressed emotion. His occasional outbursts of frenzied expression are rather too pointed to gain realistic effects in the present instances. Anna Luther, Anna Lehr and Lyster Chambers furnish competent support.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 1.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

William Farnum will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Fox picture entitled "The Jungle Trail." This is a story of love, hate and revenge, in which the star carries the role of Robert Morgan, who heads a hunting expedition into the heart of the African wilds. When the expedition has passed far beyond civilization's most remote outposts, Morgan is savagely attacked by his guides. He manages to escape them, however, and also eludes the hunters, who have been excited to a murderous frenzy by the guides. His adventures then are many and of a most unusual sort. He finds a hidden city of savages in the heart of the wilderness and is ordered put to death as an infidel. His superhuman strength saves him and he is then taken as a god. His escape and his return to America, where he discovers that he has been reported dead, are events which rapidly follow. And then the revenge on the man who caused his troubles!

It is a most dramatic photoplay, this "The Jungle Trail," and is filled with situations of a distinctly unusual character. The story was written expressly for the star by George V. Hobart, the popular playwright of the spoken stage; the continuity was prepared by Adrian Johnson, while the direction was in charge of Richard Stanton. Mr. Farnum's strength and decisive expressions are offset to advantage by the requirements of the stellar role, while Anna Luther, Anna Lehr, Lyster Chambers and Edward Roseman are among the more prominent members of the supporting cast. "The Jungle Trail" combines a novel setting with a story of unusualness and strength—a combination that none of Mr. Farnum's admirers can afford to miss.

Robert Morgan loves Mary Lamar but is prevented from marrying her by her mother, who seeks the wealthy Philip Garson as her son-in-law. Morgan himself is comfortably well off, but Mrs. Lamar has her heart set on the Garson millions. Seeing that their hopes will never materialize with Morgan so close to Mary, Garson makes him an offer to finance a big game expedition in Africa if he (Morgan) will head it. This appeals to Morgan strongly as he loves hunting, and particularly as the success of the expedition will bring him money sufficient to gratify the foolish whim of Mrs. Lamar's. Little does he know that Morgan's guides have been told to kill their new leader when far into the jungle.

But these hirelings go about their duty in a clumsy manner. Not only does Morgan succeed in saving his life, but he eludes the frenzied natives set upon him by one of the guides and plunges into the trackless jungle. Joe, one of the guides, returns to Garson with the news that his victim is dead. This comes as a severe shock to Mary but its effect on Morgan's mother is fatal. Her heart is unable to withstand the shock of it and she dies. After encountering a mysterious tribe in the heart of Africa, being taken for a god and finally escaping through the assistance of Wanada, a girl of the tribe, Morgan finally arrives home. And of course his homecoming is tragic. Garson, however, has not been successful in his suit for Mary's hand.

Morgan sets himself up as a mystic and when Mary comes to him, tells her that the man she loves is not dead. When Garson comes, he reveals himself and a fight ensues, but ends when Wanada persuades Morgan to let his victim go. Conscience has caused him sufficient suffering and repentance. And when Mary comes again Morgan reveals himself to her.

CATCH LINES

The Jungle Trail led to a Hidden City—a City of Cannibals who worshipped Strange Gods—they planned to suffocate Robert Morgan to death after their customs! But his superhuman strength convinced them that he was a god! See William Farnum in "The Jungle Trail," the strangest of all his pictures.

He was besieged on one side by a horde of yelling blacks—jungle hunters who had been stirred to revolt by some sinister force—and on the other side were the animals of the jungle themselves! Which way should he turn? How could he possibly escape? See "The Jungle Trail."

He returned to find his mother dead through the treachery of another man—and the girl he loved was in this man's arms. Revenge loomed sweet to Robert Morgan — see "The Jungle Trail."

See the magnificent city of palaces and jewels in the heart of the African jungle.

The story of a man who put his trust in a false friend!

Wearied with the day's hunting, Robert Morgan was ready to throw himself on his cot when a warning hiss chilled him to the bone! One thrust from the long, sinuous reptile that lay coiled in his bed would kill him! See "The Jungle Trail."

PROGRAM READER

Lost in the jungle wilds! Besieged on the one hand by the false hunters excited to a murderous frenzy by the guides; on the other hand by the beasts of the jungle! This was Robert Morgan's predicament. But what did this mutiny among his men mean? Dangerous though his position was, and though the conundrum of how to save himself flashed constantly through his mind, he was able to think on the peculiar situation. Certainly he had done nothing to stir his men so, certainly no act of his had warranted the veritable storm of darts and arrows that whizzed by the tree behind which he had taken refuge! What did it all mean? Was there villainy afoot? Could it mean—could it possibly mean that this was Philip Garson's work? Garson, the man he had trusted; the man who had financed this expedition that he (Morgan) might return and claim the hand of the girl he loved! But it was no time for thought of such things; beasts of men on the one side and beasts of the jungle on the other! How to carry out the law of self-preservation crowded every other thought from his mind. You'll admit that Robert Morgan's predicament was unusual—but you'll admit more than this when you see "The Jungle Trail," the latest Fix picture in which William Farnum is starred. You'll admit it has more thrills to the linear foot than any picture you have seen recently. Don't miss it. It is one of the big attractions coming to this theatre shortly.

SUGGESTIONS

It seems that the exhibitor's greatest duty in presenting this feature to his public is to bring out the jungle atmosphere as implied in the title. While it is not by any means a wild animal story (this kind is not very successful these days) many of its scenes are laid in the jungle lands and there is a distinct atmosphere of the primitive throughout it all. Therefore it is only right that this jungle atmosphere should be suggested in all newspaper and lobby advertising. Get up your displays as attractively as possible with a wild animal or two in view and thick underbrush to suggest the desired locale. A good design for a newspaper advertisement or a lobby drawing would be a picturization of that situation which is suggested in the Program Reader on this picture. With an appropriate caption beneath you have both the elements of novelty and suspense if that is carried out.

"BLACKIE'S REDEMPTION"—METRO

Melodrama of Power and Pathos, with Bert Lytell

HERE is Boston Blackie again (what a fine screen figure he makes) placed against a background distinguished for its realities. He is a human fellow, is Blackie, but that is because his creator, Jack Boyle, looks at life with truthful observations. A crook character is usually painted with exaggeration to fit a dramatic pattern, but the designer of Boston Blackie is drawn with remarkable lifelikeness, with the result that the spectator forgets his own personality in that of Blackie's. In fact, he becomes Blackie.

This is excellent testimony to the skill of Jack Boyle, who writes vividly and truthfully—to the art of Bert Lytell, who makes the character a genuine human being and, therefore, natural—and to the intelligence of John Ince, the director, who brings out the dramatic and pictorial qualities with fine proportions.

"Blackie's Redemption" precludes any suspensive value as far as the idea is concerned. But the execution of it! Well, that is something else entirely. We follow Blackie with ever-increasing interest from the time he is railroaded to prison 'till he escapes and exacts retribution. His redemption is the major note and it is sounded emphatically throughout. The picture is consistently and convincingly told and withal, exciting and picturesque. Dust off your S. R. O. sign; it will come in handy here.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 14.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"Blackie's Redemption," a Metro Photoplay with Bert Lytell as the star, will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is one of the Boston Blackie stories by Jack Boyle which have been appearing in the Red Book Magazine, and it affords the star a splendid chance to get in some of the best work he has ever done. The Blackie subjects are proving rich material for picturization since they are incorporated with genuine dramatic values. The elements of deep human feeling, pathos, mystery and romance are indicated surely, easily and vividly. And Metro by giving Mr. Lytell a particularly good example has maintained the calibre of the star's recent pictures. As Boston Blackie, the star appears as a reformed crook who is railroaded to prison for a crime he didn't commit, but his record is so black and the evidence against him so overwhelming that he receives a sentence of twenty years. And this on the eve of his marriage to Mary, the girl responsible for his reformation!

How he keeps up his good resolutions though deprived of his freedom, how he proves his resourcefulness after a year's confinement in his ability to escape, how he is captured in his flight through a failure to cover his tracks, but permitted his liberty by a big-hearted warden, and how he metes out revenge upon the crook who sent him to prison are events which are interestingly and excitingly depicted. The whole framework is fraught with incident and intense crises and it appears lifelike, too. Mr. Lytell is thoroughly at home in the characterization and seemingly lives his part. And the spectator forgets his environment and lives it with him. He is so natural, so human, that he makes the play seem like a chapter of every day life.

Mr. Lytell receives excellent assistance from such well-known players as Henry Kolker, Alice Lake, Bernard Durning, Jack Duffy, William Musgrave, and Joseph Kilgour. The picture is adapted by Finis Fox, one of Metro's skilled scenarists, and it is produced by John Ince. It is entirely atmospheric, the background of settings and scenes being harmonious and appropriate.

SUGGESTIONS

There are any number of fine advertising features in this newest Lytell picture that can be capitalized in your exploitation. First of all is the name of the author, Jack Boyle, who has demonstrated his ability as a talented fictionist in works of the underworld. His stories, the Boston Blackie series, have been appearing in the Red Book Magazine and upon the screen of late. Picture producers have not been slow to recognize dramatic material in them, and the film public has responded enthusiastically. Dwell upon the fact that no better pictures are being made than these Jack Boyle adaptations. Other producing companies have put them on with great success. So feature the story and the author of it. In your newspaper copy you might use a page of the number, dwelling upon one o fthe climaxes or the general theme—a crook's reformation.

If you played Bert Lytell in "The Spender," "Faith," and "Blind Man's Eyes" you should clean up with "Blackie's Redemption." He is always to be depended upon and his popularity is increasing with every picture. Feature him along with the author. To our way of thinking he is the most natural actor on the screen. Link up the name of the director who has had many picture successes. Why not concentrate upon this triumvirate—author, star and director? Boyle, Lytell and Ince—surely their names must mean something to you and your patrons!

THE STORY

Little did Boston Blackie dream on the eve of his marriage to Mary that his resolution to go straight would be punctured so quickly. He was through with the old life. There was no mistake about that! The evening in question might have proved a turning point in his life had he not been desirous of bidding his pals goodby. In joining them, Fate in the guise of the law stepped up and sentenced him to prison for twenty years. And on the eve of his honeymoon, too. No wonder Fred the Count seemed terrorized with Blackie's vow of revenge, since it was he who had planted stolen property upon the reformed crook and so caused his conviction. And Blackie went to prison—went for twenty long years, while Mary looked on helplessly, though with a decision to abide her time 'till Blackie's return.

Twelve months passed and the prison pallor told on Blackie's face. He had schemed himself into the hospital to find a way of escape. His plot called for a sustenance upon bread crusts alone so that his weakened condition would permit his stay indefinitely. His opportunity came for a get-away during a terrific storm. But as keen as he thought himself to be, the warden was just a little keener, for Blackie did not cover his tracks. The inner portions of bread gave him away and led to his capture. Yet the warden showed his sympathetic nature by declaring that Blackie was not the man he was after—that the Blackie before him was not a criminal, but a gentleman of honor.

With his freedom gained at last, the reformed and scholarly crook had only one mission to accomplish before taking up his belated honeymoon—the punishment of Fred the Count. He framed this framer in the identical manner that caused his own prison confinement. Together with his pal, Sober, they anticipated the robbery of a lumbercamp by the vicious crook and put the crime on him. And Blackie and Mary sailed for Honolulu. Prisons and evil friendships were over.

PROGRAM READER

One of the delightful Boston Blackie stories—which are so adaptable to the screen—will shortly be seen on the ——— program in the shape of "Blackie's Redemption" with Bert Lytell as the star. Nearly everyone is acquainted with the character which Jack Boyle has so ably delineated in the Red Book Magazine, either in a fictional form or in a dramatization upon the screen, and when he greets you in the near future, he will doubtlessly cast a spell over you as he has done ever since he was created.

It is remarkably human, is this Metro subject, for it is a peculiar trick of nature to respond to a thief in his evasion of the law. Sympathy goes out to him in his helplessness inside the prison walls, and his attempt at escape is followed with the keenest interest. The story, as its title indicates, presents the regeneration of a thief. But before this resolution can be realized with complete freedom, the hero is subjected to the tortures which ever loom up in the life of a thief—prison and hard labor.

Mr. Lytell has few superiors on the screen today, particularly when it comes to sensing

"A MAN OF HONOR"—SCREEN CLASSICS

Harold Lockwood in Characteristic Role—A Colorful Picture

HENRY KITCHELL WEBSTER'S name on a story is generally a guarantee of originality, of novel situations and surprises and we have come to look for these characteristics in perusing him. But in " A Man of Honor," a film translation of his " A King in Khaki," it happens that the technical sparks mentioned above occasionally miss fire. Which leads us to state that what may often prove interesting as fiction does not always measure so emphatically upon the screen. In other words " A Man of Honor " does not quite reach the apex of perfect entertainment.

It may be that Mr. Webster is at fault himself since the idea behind the story, while serving its moral value, is not burdened with any genuine thought. The dramatic attitudes, however, have been struck off with appreciation by the director and Mr. Lockwood.

The picture serves its purpose admirably in emphasizing the reason why the late and lamented star was considered one of the best interpreters of virile manhood on the screen. His touch was sure, his manner wholesome, and he always maintained his balance. The subject brings out these virtues and it is made a likeable offering as a result—likeable in the sense that Lockwood far eclipses the story.

It is one of the " island " variety. Adventure—tropical storms—high finance and, of course, fancy and romance are its ingredients. There are no castaways, praise be! A lot of dash and color and picturesque backgrounds. These coupled with the personality of the star will carry it by.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

The combination of Henry Kitchell Webster and Harold Lockwood is something to be reckoned with upon the screen. The former, a noted author, and the latter, a favorite personality, make " A Man of Honor " an artistic achievement, and a subject which by no means should be missed when it comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Mr. Webster, an imaginative writer, has contributed several stories to the screen, and as they are rich in situation and climax the silent drama has gained excellent material. The story of " A Man of Honor " is principally a character study—its leading figure being created to teach those at cross-purpose with him that " honesty is the best policy." To carry out this object, the author has exposed the nefarious business of certain real estate operators who are familiar these days in their get-rich methods. An island in the West Indies provides the background for the action, and naturally plenty of adventure and romance form the body of it.

Mr. Webster has furnished a fine clash of characters in the studies of David Smith, the honorable young man who is determined to protect the small investors and make the property valuable for them—and Christopher Beaumont, the principal factor in the swindling operation. A pretty romance is developed between the latter's daughter and Smith, and the conflict is well brought out before the affair culminates in marriage. It is quite superfluous to state that the author has handled his subject with the utmost skill.

Harold Lockwood plays the part of David Smith with a vigor and depth of feeling that has always characterized his work. His last contribution—he makes it stand out vividly. Bessie Eyton as Christabel Beaumont contributes a performance marked for its quality of charm. Stanton Heck's Beaumont is thoroughly in character. The picture was adapted and directed by Fred J. Balshofer.

PROGRAM READER

What does a tropical island suggest to you? Doesn't it bring to mind a dash of color, a bit of adventure, and a flash of the primitive world? Well, your picture is correct, for these things are in their accustomed places in " A Man of Honor," which will shortly be shown at the ——— theatre. The story is by Henry Kitchell Webster, one of the leading fictionists of the day, and was formerly known as " A King in Khaki," which doubtless many of our patrons have read.

The author has invested it with his customary color and vividness, and translated for the screen it makes unusually good entertainment. Being a tale of the tropics and high finance, it is finely balanced in contrasts and conflicts, and through it all runs a vein of sparkling romance. Just the right sort of subject for Harold Lockwood, don't you think?

Before his sad and untimely end the star held a conspicuous place in the estimation of the screen public. So as a tribute to his memory we have saved what we believe to be his best picture for the final presentation in the Lockwood series of productions. As the young superintendent of a tropical island, and whose watchword may well have been " Honor above all things "—he gives a typical portrayal of what he stood for in life. An exceptional cast surrounds him. The picture was adapted and produced by Fred J. Balshofer.

David Smith, lately appointed superintendent of the Tropical Products Company, whose property is on Horse Island, has decided that it is time to call a halt to the nefarious scheme of his employers. They are a body of rich promoters in New York who, in order to develop the property for their own benefit, decide to swindle the small stockholders of their money. The principal factor in the scheme is Christopher Beaumont, and when he comes to the island with his daughter, Christabel, in order to compel Smith to accept his plan or resign, it devolves upon the young superintendent to teach the financier some points of honesty.

Smith, by the way, is practically a dictator, and Beaumont finds it out much to his sorrow when he is imprisoned upon the island until he accepts the young man's suggestion—to protect the small investors. Naturally this procedure makes the Beaumont party considerably angry, and after several attempts to escape they finally succeed in reaching New York. During the sojourn on the island a terrific storm breaks out, which marks the occasion for a romance to spring up between David and Christabel. An imaginative girl, she thinks the time appropriate to talk of pirates and their treasures, and he responds accordingly.

As the storm clears away, there before the young man is a typical pirate's cave with its hidden gold. With such fine security he hastens to New York and invests it in Tropical Products stock, and proves himself such a man of honor in every way that Beaumont is considerably impressed. The financier, beaten at his swindling game, resolves to be honorable in the future. There is no other course when Smith becomes his son-in-law.

SUGGESTIONS

Well informed patrons of the screen know what to expect in a Harold Lockwood picture—that it invariably incorporates the requisite amount of adventure, color and wholesome characterization. Although the star's career is ended, still he has established his personality so thoroughly and so vividly that there should be fine response in playing this, the last of his pictures. Everyone will turn out—those who did not know him, from curiosity—those who did make his acquaintance, the screen. So play up his name above the story.

The feature is comparable to the other Lockwoods in regard to dramatic high lights, and it is further emphasized by some remarkably picturesque scenes. Bring out that a pictorial treat awaits your patrons, for it presents some exquisite marine views, a number of panoramic landscapes and a terrific tropical storm which will hold the audience spellbound for sheer vividness and beauty. Go strong on the photography. No recent picture in our estimation has surpassed it in this respect. Also feature the author and his place as a leading novelist of the day. The story, laid in a tropical island, is full of romance, adveture and pluck, and it brings into view one of those fighting Americans who is honorable without being a saint. Metro will provide you with a series of half-tones for your lobby—also paper, cuts and photos. The title has its advertising value for it is indicative of the picture—a wholesome contribution to the screen. But the big points are Lockwood and the photography. Feature them above everything else.

CATCH LINES

Some men are born knaves—some are born honorable. 'Tis well to differentiate the two classes when you have money to invest. " A Man of Honor " is a good investment. Don't miss it.

"THE CRY OF THE WEAK"—PATHE

Fannie Ward in an Absorbing Play of Crime and Punishment

"THE CRY OF THE WEAK," Fannie Ward's newest picture to hang in the Pathe gallery, is a worthy successor to "Common Clay," as it ably carries out the good impressions gained from the latter subject. It has the same amount of dramatic foundations for support—which are seen in the shape of clearly defined characterizations and a plot with a message and a thing of substantial weight. And George Fitzmaurice's familiar hall-marks are stamped all over it. Indeed, his attention to detail, his ability to provide logical situations that carry action, and his wealth of photographic display are in their accustomed places.

The picture is cut after the pattern of "Common Clay" in that it deals with crime and punishment. But it has a moral value that was absent in the latter work. The central character is the wife of the District Attorney, and a man who believes in the theory that a criminal is beyond the pale and that stern measures must be applied whenever the laws are violated. Her brother, a crook through environment, seeks her protection. The plot hinges upon her efforts to hide him and when he is eventually captured the two conspirators offer a plea for mercy. (Thus "The Cry of the Weak.")

The action takes place in the space of a few hours of an evening and is heightened with suspensive interest as well as good lighting effects. The only flaw discernible is its apparent let-down after the introductory reels. But after a brief lapse the story regains its speed and finishes with plenty of strength. It is finely spun with no little sympathy and pathos, and Miss Ward, assisted by Paul Willis, emphasize these notes with fine understanding. The star seems to have found her forte in this type of picture as it brings out her emotional capabilities. Walt Whitman and Frank Elliot round out the cast. "The Cry of the Weak." A splendid thing of its kind. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

Her husband was the District Attorney with a well established theory that criminals should be punished to the full extent of the law. His wife thought differently of the matter, and this conflict of wills brought a deal of trouble to their lives. See how the separate theories are worked out in "The Cry of the Weak."

A shot rang out in the quiet of the night—could it be that a tragedy had occurred in the Judge's home? Suddenly an excited young man confronted the District Attorney's wife and demanded protection. He was her own brother, and she must save him and reclaim him to socity. How did she act, knowing that her husband believed in stern punishment? You will find it all out in "The Cry of the Weak."

PRESS NOTICE

"The Cry of the Weak," a Pathe production starring Fannie Ward, will be the attraction at the ——— on ——— of ——— week. This is a story of crime and society, and which makes prominent the theory that one-half the sins committed at the present time are really vengeance against the harshness of man-made laws, and that criminals not inherently bad may be reclaimed if properly encouraged. The cry of the weak is a cry of mercy. If it is heard and responded to, much good can be accomplished. So "The Cry of the Weak" presents a suggested solution to this social problem which is being so widely discussed at the present time. The central character is the wife of the District Attorney, who believes that no good can come from a criminal. When her brother, a crook, seeks refuge in her home, it devolves upon her to protect him and reclaim him if possible. Of course, the boy is discovered, and the incident precipitates a powerful situation, particularly when the prosecutor learns that he is his wife's brother.

How the tangle is straightened out through an effective plea for mercy on the part of brother and sister, how the District Attorney finally realizes that his theory isn't able to stand the acid test, and that the milk of human kindness is the best nourishment for those "out of luck," are incidents that make "The Cry of the Weak" an effective photoplay. Miss Ward and her players fulfil the demands of their roles in splendid fashion. Paul Willis deserves mention for realizing the young crook to the life. The picture was written and adapted by Ouida Bergere and directed by George Fitzmaurice.

PROGRAM READER

A young man dashed into District Attorney Dexter's home with his hair dishevelled, an anxious look upon his face, and demanding in excited tones that his sister, Mary, save him. He has just assaulted Judge Creighton across the street and the police were after him. Budd, as the young man is known, realized that his sister is married to the District Attorney and that it would go hard with him if he was caught. The prosecutor didn't believe in a crook's redemption—that a crook is beyond any such virtue and should be punished to the fullest extent of the law. And there was Budd seeking protection in his home!

Compelled to hide in various places and exhausted in the attempt from his wounds, it transpires that the young criminal is eventually captured. Even Mary's resourcefulness could not save him. But her entreaties, her pleas, worked wonders in convincing her husband that Budd should not be severely punished. And Judge Creighton's theory that a criminal can be reclaimed if given the opportunity is adopted by the District Attorney.

An absorbing and exciting picture is "The Cry of the Weak," which carries the above story. It is guaranteed to hold the patrons at strict attention in every one of its compelling scenes. Fannie Ward, who appears as the star, gives a finely wrought characterization and you will respond to every mood she conveys. Come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and you will see a clever actress and a thoroughly interesting picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture that contains a vital message—that a criminal may be reclaimed to society if encouraged along the right direction. In this modern day the message is being driven home emphatically from press and pulpit. Indeed, there is a sincere movement on foot to assist criminals to regain a place in the human family. Once they were condemned as being beyond the pale and unworthy of reclamation. But the times have changed. No doubt there are prisoners' aid societies, reformers and church dignitaries who will enthusiastically aid the exhibitors in exploiting "The Cry of the Weak." Invitations to municipal officials, mayors, magistrates, lawyers and editorial writers, asking them to attend the opening performance, will aid in securing the best of all exploitation aids—word of mouth advertising. Play upon this suggestion for all that it is worth, for the picture is more than a play—it is a preachment—a preachment for the mercy that should be extended to the cdiminal weak.

There are some acute situations in the play that you can glean from the catch lines and story. Feature them and you will create considerable interest. Then you have the star, who has accomplished great things on the screen. Bring out that her performance is the best she has ever contributed and that the play is far above anything she has ever offered. If you have a fan following there is the name of Walt Whitman, who has appeared as a star in several pictures. With the theme of the story and the name of the star, there is no reason why you cannot clean up.

THE STORY

District Attorney Dexter and Judge Creighton are neighbors, and it frequently happens that over their chessboard a few heated arguments occur. The principal topic of conversation is criminology—whether the law should take its course or be tempered with a humanitarian outlook. The Judge holds the conviction that a criminal can be reclaimed if given proper encouragement in that direction, while the District Attorney believes in the theory that "once a crook always a crook." One night as Creighton goes home he is murderously assaulted and Budd, the brother of Dexter's wife, seeks refuge in her home. With no other thought than to protect him from her stern husband, she manages to hide him safely for the time being. "Why did you do it—why did you do?" is her burning question. And Budd is unable to answer.

As the boy is noticed entering Dexter's house, the latter returns to capture him. But he is safely hidden, though Dexter mistrusts something afoot owing to Mary's discomfiture. Every time that Dexter steps from the room Budd comes out of his hiding-place, and Mary is at her wits' end in making him see the danger of being captured. During an opportune moment she hides him in a closet, but as he is badly injured he falls against the door and opens it, thus exposing himself to Dexter and the police.

"VIRTUOUS MEN"—S-L PICTURES

Big Fights and Mob Scenes to Back Up Title

"VIRTUOUS MEN," the first SL picture, has plenty of fights, plenty of big mob scenes and a considerable number of fine flashes of comedy relief to back up the drawing power that lies in the two words of the title.

The plot has to do with one man's persistent and finally successful efforts to put to rout a band of "Red Radicals" bent on preventing a ship builder from keeping his contract with the government. E. K. Lincoln in this part sketches a likable characterization. Grace Darling is very attractive in the feminine lead, while Clara Joel is an alluring "vamp."

The comedy relief falls to Danny Hayes and the scenes given him are all of the most effective sort. The picture was reviewed at length on page 2519 of last week's issue.

A wonderful cast. E. K. Lincoln is the star and in his support appear Grace Darling, Clara Joel and Danny Hayes.

You like big fights, big thrills, big scenes—big scenes taken in one of the United States shipyards for instance—if you do you can't afford to miss "Virtuous Men," the big melodramatic sensation of the season.

When we say it's directed by Ralph Ince you know we speak the truth when we add it's one of the biggest melodramas ever offered on the screen.

PRESS NOTICE

One of the big melodramas of the season, "Virtuous Men," produced by the newly formed SL Pictures and starring the popular E. K. Lincoln, will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. "Virtuous Men" was written by Arthur Sawyer, the S in the SL, together with Ralph Ince, who also directed the production. It presents a virile, fighting tale of the lumber camps and shipyards, in which Bob Stokes is the principal figure. Stokes drifts into a lumber camp in the northern part of New York State and secures employment. Brummon, the boss of the camp, immediately becomes his enemy, for he sees in Stokes the "makings" of a real man. And Brummon has his reasons for not wanting any real men about the place.

It is only a short time before Stokes makes himself felt in the camp. Brummon is there for a sinister reason, and one night after passing out liquor to the men, he stirs them to rebellion, preaching to them about being underpaid and overworked. Bob takes the mob in hand and appeals to its patriotism to finish the job. The lumber is needed for ships that are being built for the Government. And he is successful in his plea.

After that the scene shifts to the shipyards, where Bob again comes in contact with Brummon's gang, known as the Red Radicals. After many fights he finally triumphs in the cause of justice.

"Virtuous Men" is filled with the most thrilling and spectacular sort of action. There are many fights, both personal and mob, while the scenes in the shipyards show masses of men at work on the construction of vessels.

Mr. Lincoln is supported by an exceptional cast headed by Grace Darling, Clara Joel, Robert Cummings, John Wade, William B. Mack and Danny Hayes.

THE STORY

To a lumber camp in northern New York State comes Bob Stokes, erstwhile wealthy clubman. Henry Willard, the owner of the camp, who has come north to investigate a variety of troubles, sees in him a possibility and puts him to work. Willard immediately incurs the enmity of Brummon, the boss of the camp, and the reason for this is shortly apparent. Brummon is leader of a dangerous band of Red Radicals who are operating against Willard because he has a large contract with the Government, first to supply it with lumber and then to build several ships. Brummon recognizes in Bob a dangerous rival, and well he might, for before the passing of many weeks Bob gets the lumbermen who have been stirred to revolt by Brummon under control and is put in charge of the camp.

Failing at the source of supply, Brummon then sets to work at the shipyards, and, with his aides, is making trouble here, when Willard sends Bob to take charge. Several times he gets the workers in hand, only to have the disturbing influence of the Red Radicals to cope with all over again. Bob meets Willard's daughter, Helen, and before long a strong attachment springs up between them. Marcia Fontaine, one of Brummon's pawns, who once jilted Bob when he lost his fortune, and who was the cause of his downfall, again sees him and attempts to change his course.

But Bob is adamant to all her advances. Desperate, Marcia finally lures him to her apartment, where it is Brummon's purpose to kill him. From her he learns of the plot to blow up the ship that is to be launched on the morrow. After a desperate fight with Brummon he makes his escape and runs to the shipyards, where he finds the bomb and throws it into the water just in time. The next day the ship is launched with all ceremony, and afterwards Bob and Helen find themselves in peace.

PROGRAM READER

"Virtuous Men." Just what constitutes a Virtuous Man in your opinion. Should he be an anti-nicotine fiend, steer clear of all hard drinks and part his hair in the middle? Should he refrain from using cuss words or fighting? Whatever your individual opinion may be, you will be interested to see the opinion set forth in the big melodrama "Virtuous Men," one of the features shortly to be shown here. This was produced by the newly formed S-L Pictures and stars the popular actor, E. K. Lincoln. Bob Stokes (Mr. Lincoln) is introduced as a down and outer. Once he had been a popular New York clubman, a man of wealth and position. A woman he loved had jilted him and he had gone down rapidly until he appeared at a northern lumber camp and solicited work. How he made good despite desperate odds both in the woods and in the shipyards forms one of the most spectacular melodramas it has ever been our pleasure to show here. Grace Darling, Clara Joel, Robert Cummings, John Wade, William B. Mack and Danny Hayes are among those who appear in support of Lincoln. But to get back to our original question. Was Bob Stokes a Virtuous Man? Some said he was, others said he wasn't. At all events the answer is revealed in a thoroughly dramatic way in this picture. It will solve the question for you.

SUGGESTIONS

A glance at the title "Virtuous Men" and you know what to feature in regard to this picture. There's a lot of pulling power to that title. A whole lot. In your advertising you can stir up interest by asking your patrons what their idea of a virtuous man is. We would suggest a teaser campaign. Begin by repeating the title several times in the daily papers. Just the title and nothing more. Follow up by adding the line "What is a virtuous man" beneath it, taking a little more space to make your addition noticed. Then when you come to the regular announcement come out with a big smash to the effect that you are showing "Virtuous Men." More lines in regard to this trait in a man may be added.

Then play up the fight stuff. There are many fights in the film, both personal encounters and mob combats. Feature these. Most crowds love good, thrilling fights. Play up the scenes of the forest fire and the shipyards. These are unusual and are well worth featuring as they are given much prominence in the film. If you think it advisable state that the picture shows a patriot fighting a band of Red Radicals and winning.

Play the picture as a big melodrama and feature the comedy relief in the story. Your audience will eat this portion of the film up even as they will the thrills.

Don't forget your star, E. K. Lincoln, and the fact that Grace Darling and Clara Joel both appear in his support. And also make mention of the fact that the picture was produced under the direction of Ralph Ince.

E. K. Lincoln, Who Plays the Fighting Hero in "Virtuous Men"

"BARE FISTS"—UNIVERSAL

Character Study of Primitive Emotion and the Art of Self-Defense

THIS Harry Carey picture does not measure up to the standards of the star's last previous releases in points of plot and action, although there are human characterizations in it which will probably suffice in making it pleasing to those patrons who are not too discriminate in their tastes. Mr. Carey is such an active person on the screen that when he remains idle for any length of time during the action something snaps and the picture falters.

So "Bare Fists," despite the fighting quality of the title, is deficient in the star's chief stock-in-trade-Action, spelled with a capital A. It drags considerably, especially in the middle, and a little nourishment in the way of dramatic meat would help it a lot. Still the picture is fairly true to life, which fact makes it sufficient after all.

The theme is based upon a son's devotion to his mother and his promise to her that he will fight with his bare fists instead of guns. Hence the title. But when his little brother is marked with a branding iron by the bad men of the story, the hero concludes that a gun is the only fit weapon with which to punish them. Before this scene transpires he is imprisoned for murder, though entirely innocent of the crime. A last minute confession by an eye-witness, his sweetheart, incidentally, guarantees his freedom. There you have it.

A picture of simple love and devotion. Pathos? Yes. Action? Not as much as you might expect. An average program offering and likely to please.—Length, 5,500 feet.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

The story of a man who promised his mother he'd never shoot. Did he keep his word? See "Bare Fists"—we promise you a rare treat.

In which a man routs his enemies with his own bare fists, though he is forced to use a gun when they refuse to stay routed.

Harry Carey, the popular actor of Western roles, in a smashing, dashing picture—a picture of pathos and punch.

His enemies were expert cattle rustlers and they also knew how to frame a man for murder. Cheyenne Harry was defenseless except for his knowledge of the manly art. Did he apply it in winning his freedom and overpowering his enemies? "Bare Fists" tells you all about it.

PRESS NOTICE

Harry Carey can always be counted upon to offer a thrilling western photoplay, and his latest effort, "Bare Fists," which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, is one of the best of this sort that he has yet appeared in. "Bare Fists" has an original twist in the fact that the usual guns of Cheyenne Harry are missing! A cowboy in the West without guns! True enough. It all develops after Harry's father has been killed in a fight with the marshal of the town. His mother then makes him promise never to carry a gun again and to use his bare fists instead whenever he is called upon to defend himself.

This is rather a long order for a man brought up in a town where the average man uses a gun on the slightest provocation. And the consequences can well be imagined when Harry's enemies, knowing his promise to his mother, purposely aggravate him. Suspense runs rife throughout the film, and culminates in a climax when Harry finally flings his promise to the winds and takes up his shooting irons again to avenge the treatment his enemies have meted out to his little brother.

Carey makes a likable figure of the cowboy hero, and receives support of a high order from Betty Schade, Joe Harris, Vester Pegg, Molly McConnell, Anna May Walthall and Howard Ensteadt. The picture was written by Bernard McConville, done into scenario form by Eugene B. Lewis and produced under the direction of Jack Ford.

PROGRAM READER

Harry Carey, Universal's cowboy star, famed for his hard riding and straight shooting, comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture, "Bare Fists." The star appears in the role of Cheyenne Harry again—a role which has earned him a wide popularity throughout the country. He is a typical Westerner, is Harry, a fellow who wins through sheer personality. The plot of the story is based upon a man's promise to his mother that he will never use a gun again. Such a promise is a difficult one to keep in a cattle country, and Cheyenne Harry is often sorely tempted to break his word. The solution of the tale will not be given here, for it is carried through with such suspense and surprise that it wouldn't do to spoil the picture in the telling.

"Bare Fists" is unusually fortified with picturesque photography—a number of long views of cattle are shown placed against a background of rugged mountains. But you will also recognize some typical Carey scenery. The star gives an unusually good performance as the cowboy who breaks his word to avenge his brother. The role calls for a goodly amount of dexterous riding as well as a display of the manly art. Others in the cast are Betty Schade, Joe Harris, Vester Pegg, Molly McConnell, Anna May Walthall and Howard Ensteadt. "Bare Fists" was produced under the direction of Jack Ford from a story by Bernard McConville.

SUGGESTIONS

You can dope out some good "suspense" copy by relating the predicament in which the hero finds himself in "Bare Fists," i. e., he has promised his mother not to use pistols, and his enemies, knowing this, purposely goad him. This is the unusual thing about the picture and it is a situation that well warrants featuring. Word your announcement something like this: "He had promised his mother not to use pistols. She had exacted this promise from him over the Bible after his father had been killed in a gun fight. And he agreed to abide by her wishes despite the fact that he lived in the lawless West. Time and again he endured insult from his enemies who were aware of his promise. Then one day something happened that caused him to violate his oath. It was something that even the memory of his promise to his mother could not soothe. What was this thing that made him take up his guns again? You'll find out in the wonderful Western drama, "Bare Fists."

This sort of copy should make them sit up and take notice. It is effective and, accompanied by some good illustrations, should draw a lot of attention. The same argument might be used in lobby display or special paintings. Play up the name of the star, too, and mention some of the previous hits he has had.

Cheyenne Harry had killed the assassins of his father, the marshal, and though his mother keenly felt the tragedy she made him promise to give up his guns and depend upon his bare fists whenever he became involved in a fight. But the West is the West and bad men carry weapons of death to accomplish their evil designs. Lopez and Boone Travis, two vicious cattle rustlers, are hot on the trail of Harry's herd, and succeed in branding some of the stock before they are caught. As Harry kept his promise to go unarmed, the villains have no trouble in carrying out their stealthy business. But an occasion arises when the cowboy punishes them with his fists, which enlisted their hatred to a greater extent. Conchita, a Spanish girl, aroused their enmity also, since she responded to Harry.

Unable to beat him even when they are armed, the villains hatch a scheme to make him out a murderer, and they succeed. Harry is tried before a frontier jury and sentenced to be hanged and things look dismal to him indeed. In order to bid his mother farewell he persuades the sheriff to grant him this privilege. While returning to jail he finds his brother a victim of the rustlers—with a branding mark upon his chest. Escaping from the sheriff and armed with the latter's gun he disposes of his enemies. He breaks his promise for blood runs deep. Eventually he is given his freedom and in no time is married to Conchita.

"LITTLE COMRADE"—PARAMOUNT

Pleases Without Showing Anything Sensational

THE Vivian Martin pictures strike a standard that seldom varies. All her pictures are light in general makeup and "Little Comrade" runs true to type. And this type also is the type that pleases—pleases without providing anything sensational or thrilling.

"Little Comrade" is a romance of war time, although the overworked trench scene never gets a chance in its five reels. The heroine is a farmerette, the hero a soldier and the romance is developed with only an occasional suggestion of the background of world strife.

The star makes a most entrancing appearance in silk overalls, the gala attire in which she first essays the farming job. Niles Welch is seen opposite Miss Martin and gives a likable performance. Others who appear are Gertrude Claire, Richard Cummings and L. W. Steers. The picture was produced under the direction of Chester Withey, one of the leading directors of the day, whose creative skill gives evidence of itself throughout the picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 30.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

It was a great thing for idle girls when war was declared. Many of them joined the Red Cross, the Motor Corps or engaged in canteen work. Some of them became farmerettes, as did Genevieve Rutherford Hale, the petted and pampered daughter of a rich family. To tell the truth, Genevieve became a farmerette chiefly because she saw a most delightful pair of silk overalls. She bought them and then she just had to put them to some use. So, in company with other girls, she set out for the Hubbard farm. But one day on its scorching acres and Genevieve discovered that neither silk overalls nor soft hands went very well with a hoe and a rake and a dirty potato patch. She had to work and with each succeeding hour she found out that work was hard. And that night she went out to the nasty potatoes and cried, and perhaps it was her tears or the moon or the potatoes or the potato bugs, but at any rate a nice little romance started and didn't end until the war was over. We feel sure you will be amused and entertained by the trials of Genevieve and the man she loved, Bobbie Hubbard. Vivian Martin is the girl and Niles Welch the boy, and between the two of them they make "Little Comrade," the Paramount picture which comes to the ——— theatre next ———, one of the most enjoyable little pictures in which Miss Martin has starred.

PRESS NOTICE

Vivian Martin, the dainty Paramount favorite, will be seen in her latest picture for that company entitled "Little Comrade," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Like all of Miss Martin's pictures this one is a light and pretty offering containing a story of considerable charm. The star takes the role of a farmerette whose fervor during war times leads her to enlist and go to work in earnest on a farm near her city home. She finds, however, that farming isn't all it's cracked up to be. Her silk overalls aren't very handy and she really has to work.

The potato patch affords a nice secluded spot for the little miss to shed her tears, and out of this potato patch springs, strange as it may seem, romance! How the story is evolved from the moment of the meeting of the girl and the man is particularly delightful and affords entertainment that everyone will enjoy.

Niles Welch is seen as Miss Martin's leading man and he makes the most of his role. Gertrude Claire, long known as one of the leading character actresses in the west coast studios, is also seen in the cast, while others are Richard Cummings, L. W. Steers, Eleanor Hancock, Nancy Chase and Pearl Lovci.

The picture was produced under the direction of Chester Withey, one of the most skilled of all directors. He worked on a story written by Juliet Tomkins and scenarioized by Alice Eyton.

SUGGESTIONS

When you flash Vivian Martin's name you immediately designate the type of entertainment you have to offer; light, amusing, pretty. You have told the character of "Little Comrade" then as soon as you have mentioned the star.

As regards the story lay stress on its comedy angle. Tell of the farmerette who thought that silk overalls would do and who found out that farming really meant work. This seems to be the most likely angle on which to play. It's an angle that opens up a number of decorative schemes for your advertising and lobby displays, and one which will probably appeal to the popular mind.

Make mention of the leading man, Niles Welch, and don't forget that Chester Withey directed the picture. His work is well known.

Genevieve Hale, the youngest daughter of a large family, and, consequently, pampered all her life, decides to become a farmerette and help the country in food production. In spite of the jeers of her family, she enlists and goes to the Hubbard farm with a group of other girls. A few unpleasant jobs soon make her ready to go home, but she manages to stick.

Bob Hubbard, the youngest son of the owners of the farm, is drafted, and he hates the training camp as much as Genevieve does the farm—like her, he has been pampered all his life, and is unusued to rough work of any sort. The life at the camp almost drives him mad, and one night he decides to run away, just to have a look at his old home, thinking that the sight may give him courage to stick it out. While crawling through the fields near the house he meets Genevieve, who is lying in a potato patch, crying. They tell each other their troubles, and the meeting so inspires them that each is ready to go back to work with a new heart.

A prying neighbor spies them together in the field, and scenting a scandal, reports to Mr. Hubbard. He warns the girls that if anything of the sort happens again the offender will be sent home. Although he does not know it was Genevieve who was seen with the unknown soldier, the girls suspect her and determine to have her sent away, lest she give them a bad name. Mr. Hubbard finds a letter addressed to Genevieve in his son's handwriting and determines to send her away. He also writes his son a scathing letter. But when Bob receives this he secures a leave of absence and hurries home. He explains to them that Genevieve has made a man of him, and his father is willing to admit the change in him. The girl is cleared in the eyes of the family and the farmerettes, and Bob returns to camp with a new spirit, determined to marry Genevieve as soon as war is over.

CATCH LINES

It wasn't planted there but she found love in a potato patch! See "Little Comrade," Vivian Martin's latest Paramount picture.

The business of being patriotic struck them both as being glorious until they found they couldn't be patriotic together! Then it was a little harder—but see how they made out in "Little Comrade."

She was down in the dumps herself but she made a man of him—and then he turned right around and made a woman of her! See "Little Comrade."

"THE COURAGEOUS COWARD"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Story of Great Interest; Japanese Lovers United

SESSUE HAYAKAWA follows up his exceedingly good record, made in "A Heart in Pawn" and "Bonds of Honor," by still another fine portrayal in "The Courageous Coward." While the picture itself cannot be classed with these two previous subjects in the way of dramatic intensity, there is no denying the interest of the story and the strength of the various situations in which the Japanese lovers find themselves.

The producers have happily departed from the time-honored practice of having the lead fall in love with a white girl, to make the supreme sacrifice for her in the end. They vary this theme with the Japanese romance laid before an Occidental background, and the contrast thus created provides material for situations of a refreshing and original character.

Hayakawa appears as Suki, a young Japanese lawyer, while Tsuri Aoki takes the appealing role of Rei, the girl from Japan who cannot understand American ways and who nearly loses Suki's love through this misunderstanding.—Released through Exhibitors-Mutual.—Length, 5 reels.

CATCH LINES

Should honor be sacrificed for love? See "The Courageous Coward."

This Japanese girl thought she could become Americanized by smoking cigarettes and drinking cocktails! See how she got this idea and how she endeavored to carry it out in "The Courageous Coward."

In which a hero is branded a coward!

See San Francisco's Chinatown at its liveliest in "The Courageous Coward."

He was warned to stop prosecuting, but everyone knew that the warnings were merely an attempt at intimidation from the friends of the defendent! And everyone was pleased when Suki, the young Japanese attorney, ignored these letters. And then one day Suki announced his intention of discontinuing the case, he believed that the man was innocent after all! The people called him a coward, and turned from him. But they didn't know. See why Suki, in reality a hero, was branded a coward by the city of San Francisco in "The Courageous Coward."

PRESS NOTICE

Sessue Hayakawa, who made such a brilliant record in his two previous pictures, "A Heart in Pawn" and "Bonds of Honor," scores again in his latest Robertson-Cole production entitled "The Courageous Coward," which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This picture tells the story of Suki, a young Japanese-American, a brilliant lawyer who is one of the prosecuting attorneys in a western city. He is called upon to take up the state's case against Slick Davis, accused of murdering his gambling partner, Mike Evans. The trial goes well for the young attorney at the start and it appears as if Slick must surely pay the penalty.

It is known throughout the city and to those intimately connected with the trial that Suki has received several threatening letters, warning him to discontinue prosecution of the case. These, however, are regarded as mere blackmail from the bad element of the city who seek to have their pal go free. At first Suki disregards these letters, and then suddenly he announces his intention of refusing to finish the case, claiming that he believes Slick not guilty!

Suki is branded as a coward and receives condemnation both in print and from the men who previously called themselves his friends. How he finally shows that instead of playing the coward's role he was acting the hero's part, makes entertainment of an engrossing sort. Hayakawa appears to distinct advantage in the stellar role. Tsuri Aoki, his wife, appears as the girl he loves, while others are Toyo Fujita, George Hernandez and Francis J. McDonald.

THE STORY

Suki, an American born Japanese, is educated by Tangi, his guardian. He is a bright young man and gives promise of developing into a fine lawyer. Tangi brings his niece, Rei, to America from Japan. She and Suki fall in love, and when the latter departs for an eastern university to complete his studies it is fond memories of the girl he loves that he takes with him. Suki makes a record at college, not only in his law studies, but in athletics as well. Rei sees a picture of him on the tennis courts with an American girl as partner, and believing that he appreciates this type of woman, Rei sets about to Americanize herself as to clothes and habits.

The trouble is that she puts herself in poor hands to get the Americanization. Tom Kirby, son of the boss of Chinatown, consorts with the bad element of the place, and it is he who teaches Rei to dance, to smoke and imbibe cocktails. They are out celebrating the Chinese new year when Suki returns and sees her. He is displeased and the innocent little Rei cannot understand. Thereafter Suki is cool toward her, believing that she loves Tom.

Big Bill, Tom's father, appoints Suki an assistant attorney, believing that he will be able to straighten out the Chinatown politics and feuds. His first job is to try Slick, a gambler, for killing Mike, his partner. In the midst of the trial Suki announces that he will not carry it through. He is then branded as a coward and a traitor to the cause of justice. But finally Tom confesses the murder (it had come about from a quarrel over money) and Suki's silence is interpreted in a finer light. Rei confesses to Suki that she never really loved Tom, and so the easterners settle down to lead a happy exsitence in the land of the west.

PROGRAM READER

It was a question of his own honor or his love. If he held to the former he would see the girl of his heart in disgrace, he thought. And he knew if he held to the latter he would be branded a coward by an entire city! What was he to do? To let his honor or his love have first place? The question might not mean as much to an ordinary man but it meant a whole lot to Suki, the brilliant young Japanese-American attorney who was pleading the State's cause in his first case—a case that the whole city was watching. If he continued prosecution Rei, the girl he loved, would be disgraced. If he refused to continue he himself would be disgraced. It was a big decision to make but he finally decided and stated in the crowded court room that evidence, which he could not, at the moment, divulge, had been introduced which would find the defendent not guilty! And all San Francisco called him a coward, said that he was afraid to continue because of the threatening letters he had received! But the truth—the whole truth—that will be revealed in "The Courageous Coward," one of the particularly fine features shortly to be shown at this theatre. The star is Sessue Hayakawa, the author is Thomas Geraghty, the director William Worthington. As a result of the work of these three "The Courageous Coward" stands as one of the dramatic triumphs of recent weeks.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have had success with the previous Hayakawa productions there is no reason why you should not cash in on this one too, as it is a worthy successor to the previous hits he has had under the Robertson-Cole management. Feature the star and play up the Japanese atmosphere. Fix your ad copy up with Japanese trimmings, always, however, making sure to mention the fact that an American drama is presented. Follow the same plan in lobby display and lobby decorations and if you are one of those who dress the interior of the theatre to carry out the picture's atmosphere, adopt the plan here too.

The musical program and incidental numbers should all reflect Japanese character also.

You have lots of good arguments around which to write your direct advertising of the drama itself. The situation refered to in the Program Reader is a good one and should be used. It will be found in reduced form among the Catch Lines. This situation has a lot of force and can not help but awaken the reader's curiosity and interest. Also state that much of the story is laid in San Francisco's Chinatown. This will appear interesting to those who have never been there as that city has the most famous Chinese quarter in the country.

"THE JUNGLE TRAIL"

If you advertise this picture according to the above suggestions you should pull the crowds. When the circus springs up throughout the country you have a subtle suggestion that the people want to see the animals. There is, then, no reason why "The Jungle Trail" should not prove a good card if you dress your advertisements and your lobby after the manner mentioned.

Of course, give Farnum a good play and say that he has another fighting role. And make mention of Anna Luther and Anna Lehr, both popular leading women wherever pictures are well known and closely followed.

"THE QUICKENING FLAME"—WORLD

Vivid Story of Marital Unhappiness with Montagu Love and June Elvidge

"THE QUICKENING FLAME" points several lessons for its redeeming value aside from the very capable studies of the stars, Montagu Love and June Elvidge—one of which is that a man who is matrimonially bent should watch his step lest he might trip and come up with the wrong spouse. The picture hinges upon a domestic mix-up, for as soon as the husband repents of his hasty marriage and attempts to forget, along comes a genuine girl and the marital bonds are tied again. Which is reasonable, since a report reaches him that wife number (1) has died ad interim.

From this point the picture develops a brace of melodramatic situations that are quite absorbing if somewhat theatrical. The first wife eventually turns up very much alive and demands alimony from a blackmailing standpoint. And she gets it, aided and abetted by a vicious affinity who in reality is her lawful husband. The title of the picture is indicated in the maternal love aroused in the adventuress when she sees the child of her victim. A lurid melodrama in every sense of the word with scarcely a glimpse of "sweetness and light."

" Travers Vale might have developed it more deftly. Mr. Love, always a sincere actor, gives a thoroughly convincing performance, as the husband, while Miss Elvidge plays with fine understanding the thankless role of the adventuress. Albert Hart, appearing throughout in a wheel-chair, is the vicious blackmailer to the life.—Released April 21.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Feid.

PRESS NOTICE

Montagu Love and June Elvidge will be seen together at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in their latest World photoplay, "The Quickening Flame." Their appearance together as a starring combination should interest the screen-going public, inasmuch as they have established themselves as prime favorites in their separate pictures. The character of "The Quickening Flame" is so rich in dramatic soundings that it could only be interpreted by such clever players as Mr. Love and Miss Elvidge. Hence the reason for their partnership in this feature. The stars enact their roles with authority, sincerity and charm, and they are afforded excellent support from a well-balanced cast that includes such favorites as Mabel Ballin, Albert Hart and Jack Drumier.

The story by Elizabeth R. Carpenter—scenario by Giles R. Warren, presents a theme based upon domestic flurries with its attendant happiness and misery. We see a husband whose infatuation for his actress-bride leads him into all sorts of troublesome channels before he emerges in the end with his honor vindicated. We see him suffer the pangs of disillusionment when he learns of his wife's inconstancy, and our sympathy is extended when he takes up the romantic threads again with a new love, upon hearing the news that his first spouse is dead. We see the adventuress come back into his life to torture him with a blackmailing scheme, urged on by a vicious affinity. Things look black indeed, since the blackmailers make him out a bigamist. But the first wife's maternal spark is aroused through his little boy, and she gives up her nefarious practise. And finally we see her honor vindicated, too.

As "The Quickening Flame" carries the elements of love, disillusionment, hate, pathos and deep-dyed villainy put up in the accepted form, it must be said in its favor that it is a vivid and vigorous melodrama. The picture has been produced by Travers Vale, a director responsible for many World productions in the past.

PROGRAM READER

Montagu Love and June Elvidge, appearing together in "The Quickening Flame," will come to the ——— theatre at an early date. Mr. Love, let it be said, has risen to the top of his profession as much by force of personality as by his strong endowment of histrionic talent. It cannot be denied that he has established himself as a favorite through the sheer delight he takes in his work, which is always marked by an earnestness of endeavor and a thoroughness of method. These attributes are clearly focussed in "The Quickening Flame" and will doubtless enlarge his following everywhere.

Miss Elvidge needs no introduction to our patrons. She has appeared on the program regularly, the management booking her pictures for their entertainment values and the varied emotional capabilities which characterize her work. Her personality is always ingratiating. Miss Elvidge has opportunity to show what a versatile actress she is in "The Quickening Flame," as she is called upon to play an adventuress who finds redemption in the end through the maternal instinct. Surely a different part for her! Mr. Love appears as a wronged husband who entertains a spirit of forgiveness for the woman who brought him only unhappiness. The stars are surrounded by a competent cast that includes such well-known players as Mabel Ballin, Albert Hart and Jack Drumier. When you see "The Quickening Flame" you will be entertained with a strong and highly sustaining melodrama. Watch for the date.

THE STORY

John Steele, an American lawyer traveling in England, becomes infatuated with Maizie Bell, a burlesque actress, and marries her. A man of affluence, he acquires a rich estate near London in order to give his bride a wonderful home. But Maizie, who has lived in a gayer world than her husband, is unable to appreciate his kindness and generosity, and during his absence one night she gives a costly party for some of her frivolous friends. Disillusioned, John leaves her and returns to America, though it is extremely difficult for him to forget his sorrowful experience.

A few months pass and John Steele has apparently forgotten his wretched affair in England in the romance he has developed with Hester Blaine, the niece of Judge Mason, his law partner. When news reaches him that his forsaken wife has been killed in a railroad accident, he loses no time in marrying Hester. Eventually a child comes to bless the union, and John is supremely happy in his new-found love, until a shadow from the past looms up to darken his life. It is Maizie and very much alive. She has a peculiar affinity with her, one Harlon, a crippled blackmailer, and together they have planted themselves in close proximity to John in order to wheedle him out of money.

However blackmailers never know when to stop, and a time comes when Steele refuses to accede to their demands. Of course Maizie's presence makes him out a bigamist and this startling fact causes Hester to become seriously ill. Things are righted for the happy couple when the burlesque actress vindicates herself. A communion with the little boy regenerates her and she atones for her sin through a confession that she is the real bigamist, having been married to Harlon all the time. The crippled blackmailer foiled, he kills Maizie, and meets a timely end by falling over a cliff. The Steeles', their worries over, are again supremely happy.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no mistake about it, you certainly have all kinds of advertising possibilities in this picture which comes from World. What about the stars—don't their names suggest something for exploitation? Surely you have gotten results in the past when they have appeared separately, and now that they are starring together here, it is reasonable to assume that you will clean up if you advertise them properly. Each star is big enough to carry a picture alone, but when they appear in a partnership you are doubly fortified in your exploitation scheme. We would surely bring out the fact that patrons have a treat in store for themselves when two such well-known stars are seen in the same picture. Why not concentrate on their personalities? The occasion doesn't arise every day when you can present two stars in one picture.

And the subject lends itself well to good suggestions in the way of advertising. As it unfolds a domestic upheaval, you can glean some ideas from the story and catch-lines to fit your newspaper copy. While there is a sensational note in the picture and it suggests a lurid display, still the better plan is to put it forward with no ostentatious flare. Simply play up that it is an exposition of the wrongs that will come to a husband if he does not go slow in affairs of the heart. Disillusionment follows in the wake of an unhappy marriage. You have a heart-interest story in the frivolous woman who

"THREE GREEN EYES"—WORLD

All Star Cast in Best World Release of Six Months

WORLD FILM offers five stars in this picture, and it offers them in a story the suspense and comedy values of which far transcend anything before offered by this company. "Three Green Eyes" is, in fact, a feature of unusual merit from every one of its angles. It is a cleverly written and cleverly handled story in the first place; it is unusual in construction and development and its characters are quite human. There's a little bit of bad in the best of them and there are no villains!

The exhibitor will readily recognize the advertising possibilities in the names of Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Johnny Hines. Each has a separate niche in World pictures and their union in this one release makes for a real pulling power, easily five times the strength of that found in the usual release of the company. All of them do good work, too. Blackwell and Love are effective in widely different roles, Miss Elvidge lets out a variety of strong emotions, Miss Greeley does her best work in a freshly dominant role, while Hines supplies a fine measure of comedy.

Wallace Clifton prepared the scenario from an old play. It centers about a love letter written by a woman to a man she loved, a letter never received until two years after the woman's happy marriage to another man. The various efforts of three of the characters to prevent it from reaching the hands of the fourth are so handled that the utmost in suspense has been derived from them. Hines with Jack Drumier and an eccentric feminine character furnish the comedy relief, but have their proper places in the plot.

"Three Green Eyes" is by all odds the best World of the last six months. A lively hour of entertainment it offers, an hour well worth taking out of the twenty-four of the day.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 28.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Followers of the World Film releases have a special treat in store for them on ——— of ——— week when "Three Green Eyes," the latest production of that company comes to the ——— theatre. "Three Green Eyes" is of special interest in that it is enacted by what is really an all-star cast. It has been the custom in the past to term any cast all-star that has no star in it at all. But all of World Film's popular stars are in this production. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, popular in five reel comedies, Montagu Love, the distinguished dramatic actor, June Elvidge of emotional fame and Johnny Hines, one of the best straight comedians on the screen, all find prominent roles in "Three Green Eyes." All-star in this instance is surely used appropriately.

And "Three Green Eyes" is notable for other than its staggering aggregation of stellar luminaries. The story is one of the cleverest that ever saw the lens-lights. Adapted by Wallace Clifton from an old play it presents the efforts of three people to gain a certain letter which would incriminate one of them if ever it saw public gaze. The letter passes into the hands of others to whom its contents mean nothing and the constant efforts of the others to regain it form the basis of a wonderful lot of suspense and unusually good comedy. Hines in particular keeps one laughing whenever he appears on the screen. The others have more serious roles and handle them with ease, whether the situation in which they appear is of a heavy or humorous nature.

"Three Green Eyes" was produced under the direction of Dell Henderson one of World's leading directors. Don't miss it under any consideration.

THE STORY

Lucille Vale loves Paul Arden and their correspondence is full of the most endearing terms. Lucille is in the habit of writing Paul notes and leaving them in the base of a little statue of Venus in her home. The necessity for secrecy is because Lucille's mother objects to their marriage. She wishes her daughter to marry the wealthy Allen Granat and eventually has her way. The last note Lucille writes Paul remains in the statuette for he sustains a severe accident and when he recovers Lucille has been married. Then a couple of years or so pass and Granat comes to Paul with the request that he draw up new plans for his home, the house that was once occupied by Lucille's mother. And that is when Paul thinks to look in the base of the statue.

During the passing of the months Lucille has grown to love her husband and Paul has grown quite bitter about it. Lucille realizes that if he gets the letter it will throw her in his power—and he does get the letter. Lucille's friend, Suzanne Russell, asks him to give it up like a gentleman. Suzanne appeals to Paul and, hiding the letter in his study, says that she may have it if she finds it. When Paul returns she gives it to him as a means by which to light his pipe. Not knowing it is the letter he drops it out the open window and the fall extinguishes the flame. It is found by Thomas Wiggan who uses it to wrap up a new species of bug he has found.

Subsequently the letter passes from one to another of the Granat household and is finally used as means of carrying another love message, this time from Johnny Wiggan to Marion Vale, Lucille's sister. Eventually, however, it comes back to Paul's hands and this time he destroys it, thus putting Lucille quite at rest about it. The other two love affairs also come to happy endings.

CATCH LINES

"Three Green Eyes" among three jealous people and not one of them was blind in the other eye! See the unusual picture of comedy and suspense with five big stars at the ——— theatre now.

Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Johnny Hines! Reads off like a grand march or something doesn't it? It's not, though. Merely a list of the players in "Three Green Eyes," one of the few pictures ever produced with an all-star cast. Don't miss it.

You like comedy, good suspense, unusual situations, cleverly produced and played? See "Three Green Eyes" then, the new World feature with a cast of five stars. One of the big treats the screen has to offer.

You've seen pictures with one star, with two, perhaps with three. Have you seen one with five? And all big stars? Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Johnny Hines are all in "Three Green Eyes." Don't miss it.

The comedy-drama you have been waiting for—one laugh, one bit of suspense—and so on through the five reels. Don't miss "Three Green Eyes."

PROGRAM READER

The management takes great pleasure in announcing that one of the features shortly to be seen here is "Three Green Eyes," a World Film picture, worthy of special notice in that five stars are to be seen in its cast. They are Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Johnny Hines, everyone a stellar luminary. "Three Green Eyes" with its cast indeed worthy of being termed all-star is something of a new departure for any producing company. And it leaves a most pleasing impression. How often have you seen a picture in which some important role was poorly taken? "Now if So-and-So could have only played that part" you say as you leave the theatre, "how much better the whole picture would have been." No such thought will enter your head after you have seen "Three Green Eyes" for each principal role is taken to perfection and could not be improved upon under any circumstances. "Three Green Eyes" is an adaptation of an old play made by Wallace Clifton and presents a story full of comedy and suspense. It is one of the best balanced features we have ever presented. We warn you not to miss it under any circumstances.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally the big selling point regarding this feature lies in the fact that five stars are in it. Certainly if you have been playing World pictures in the past this fact means a lot to you. Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Johnny Hines are all players of stellar calibre in the World constellation.

"THE ROARING ROAD"—PARAMOUNT

Fast and Exciting Picture with a Hair-Raising Climax

ACCEPTED for its story interest, Wallace Reid's latest Paramount essay, "The Roaring Road" doesn't travel far, as it is slight of plot and characterization. It is the spirit of the thing that carries the sustaining value—that is ample compensation for the mere wisp of an idea from which it is woven. Dare-deviltry plus determination in the character of a breezy personality provide the dramatic pattern and the spirit is breathed into it in the lightning pace which he establishes. Being so fragile the story sags in the middle naturally, but it packs a terrific wallop in its concluding scenes. "The Roaring Road" is well named, for Mr. Reid roars through space in a motor car to the tune of "break the record."

Turning aside from the plot, which conveys the idea that records must be smashed for business purposes and looking at the climax in its place, allow us to state that the star must beat the Limited in an open race if he wants to catch the girl and please her father, the Bear. An auto manufacturer, it is the latter's privilege to see that his car is the "speed king."

And what a race it is! Now ahead of the train—now behind it—and the scenes punctuated with flashes of headlights that are smothered at times with the gloom of night. And the travelers enjoying it as much as the spectators. James Cruze, the director, and Frank Urson, his camera-man, are responsible for this pictorial treat and to them belong the greater credit. Their suspense almost overwhelms one at times.

Theodore Roberts as the Bear carries off the acting honors. It is a semi-humorous role he has and he plays it thoroughly in character. Wallace Reid as the speed maniac fulfills the demands of the part. Ann Little provides the love interest.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 27—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

"Toodles" Waldon, an Auto Salesman,	Wallace Reid
The Cub, his Sweetheart	Ann Little
J. D. Ward	Theodore Roberts
Tom Darby	Guy Oliver

By Byron Morgan.
Scenario by Marion Fairfax.
Directed by James Cruze.
Photographed by Frank Urson.

SUGGESTIONS

As the story of "The Roaring Road" is written around an automobile race and as this is the big feature of the film, all your advertising should center around this event. Put the speed of the race in your advertising. Show a car racing a train. And have your artist fix up the copy so that the car is just beating out the engine over the tracks. If you get this element of speed into your ad copy, all of it, no matter where you use it, you will have accomplished a lot. People are attracted by this sort of stuff and when it is presented well, as it is in this picture, they are going to be satisfied with what you show them.

You might arrange a display of photographs from the picture with an automobile dealer. This would attract automobile enthusiasts. If there is an auto club in your town, invite the members to a private showing and use their opinions in your advertisements. Sporting editors might like to see it also. Play up Wallace Reid's name, as he is a big favorite with all fans. If you think it will help, mention that the story was first in the Saturday Evening Post and was written by Byron Morgan.

PRESS NOTICE

In his latest Paramount picture, "The Roaring Road," Wallace Reid, the popular star, playing the role of "Toodles Waldon," has two great ambitions or desires. The first is to win the hand of his employer's daughter, known as "The Cub," and the second, to drive the Darco car, of which "The Bear," his employer, has the agency, in an impending Grand Prize Road Race. He seeks to win the former by accomplishing the latter.

Three Darco cars, which his employer had ordered shipped to him, are smashed in a train wreck and "The Bear" has to give up the race. But Toodles sees in this his chance, and buying the wrecked cars from the express company, he rebuilds one good car from the wreckage and on the day of the race carries off the first prize. But even then the Bear refuses to give Toodles his daughter's hand. But Toodles later wins the girl in a clever and ingenious way.

There are several thrilling and exciting race scenes in the picture which will be shown at the ——— Theatre next ———. Mr. Reid drove his own car in all the scenes, attaining at times incredible speed. James Cruze directed and Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario from a series of stories by Byron Morgan. Well-known players, including Ann Little, Theodore Roberts, Guy Oliver and C. H. Geldart, support the star.

THE STORY

Toodles Waldon, a young auto salesman employed by "The Bear," has two ambitions—first, to win "The Cub," the Bear's daughter, and second, to win the impending Grand Prize four hundred mile Santa Monica Road Race, for which the Bear has ordered some Darco cars. But the Bear won't consent to let Toodles pilot the car in the race, nor will he let Toodles marry the Cub. The train bearing the racing cars is wrecked and the Bear accepts an adjustment from the express company. Toodles has trouble with the Bear and quits his job. He buys the wrecked machines from the express company and salvages one from the wreckage. Despite the Bear, he races with the rebuilt Darco and wins the race. The Bear is so pleased he gives him a job as general manager of his firm, but refuses to give up the Cub. Toodles again asks the Bear for the Cub's hand, but finds him boiling with rage, he having learned that Toodles was going to use the Darco to try to break the record set up by a rival agency, on the Los Angeles to San Francisco run. Toodles leaves angrily, vowing never to have anything more to do with the Bear or the Darco. This pleases the Bear, who upon learning that a law has been passed in California, to take effect in three days, prohibiting further racing, tries to persuade Toodles to make the run, as his drivers won't have time to arrive from the east. Toodles refuses, whereupon the Bear leaves with the Cub on the train next day for San Francisco. Toodles is in jail for speeding, but Darby, his mechanician, cuts the bars with an acetylene torch and releases him. Toodles and Darby give chase in the Darco and beat the train to the San Francisco station by one minute, breaking the record. The Bear at last gives up the Cub to Toodles.

CATCH LINES

The best auto-racing scenes ever shown on the screen. See them in "The Roaring Road," the Paramount adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story by Byron Morgan.

You can hear that cutout as he steps on it—hear the roar of the racing car, the terrible rush of the engine as he passes over the tracks just in the nick of time. Are you a real sport—do you like red-blooded thrills? See "The Roaring Road," the thoroughbred picture that you will never forget.

PROGRAM READER

Like a picture with lots of speed and thrills, a real picture in which the hero not only takes his life in his hands once but half a dozen times or so? If you like this sort of a picture, and who by the way doesn't, you're sure going to like "The Roaring Road," the picture that will be shown here on ———. The story of this picture centers around an automobile race and it is SOME race. For a good part of the way the leading car runs against an express train. The number of times the driver crosses in front of that engine and escapes just by what seems to be a hair's breadth would take your very breath away. And the driver? He's none other than Wallace Reid, the popular Paramount star. Wally sure does snap his fingers at death a few times in "The Roaring Road." But though he loses his race he wins the girl and, what's more, her father's consent to the marriage. Ann Little and Theodore Roberts are in Wally's support and no one could ask for better assistance than that provided by this pair. Don't miss "The Roaring Road." It's an automobile race full of thrills.

"THE CRY OF THE WEAK"

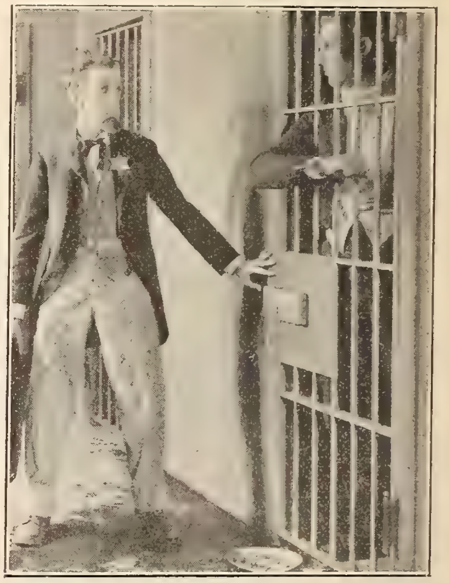
Mary, knowing her husband's theory in regard to criminals and their punishment, realizes that he cannot be moved on that ground, so she tactfully leads him up to their courtship days. He had married her knowing nothing of her antecedents or the fact that she was brought up in an atmosphere of crime. By telling him that Budd is a victim of circumstances, that his whole life has been moulded in crime by vicious associates who found in him an easy subject, and that if given a chance he could be reclaimed to society, she succeeds in impressing him with a spirit of forgiveness. Budd is sent away for a shorter term than his crime indicated, and when freedom is restored to him and he is completely reformed, Dexter concludes that the Judge and Mary are right after all.



This scene from "The Roaring Road" doesn't bring out the speed of the picture but at least it shows that the element of comedy is not forgotten

"THE FOLLIES GIRL"—TRIANGLE

Sweet and Homely Tale of the Chorus Girl

OLIVE THOMAS is the Follies Girl in the case and she is naturally well suited to carry such a role. The story presented here, however, has little to do with the white lights of Broadway, being, on the other hand, the rather sweet and homely little tale of a chorus girl who brought sunshine into the heart of a lonely old man and restored peace to his household, which was previously disturbed by divers plottings of his relatives.

The plot, by W. Carey Wonderly, has the element of suspense as well, and the ending comes as something of a total surprise to the spectator.

Miss Thomas is attractive and sincere in the title role and receives adequate assistance in interpreting the high lights of the picture from Wallace MacDonald, William V. Mong and Claire McDowell.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 27.—Peter Milne.

A chorus girl, a legacy, and a baby—all of them figure prominently in "The Follies Girl," Olive Thomas' latest Triangle picture—see what happens to them at the ——— theatre.

PRESS NOTICE

Olive Thomas, the popular Triangle star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest special release for this company entitled "The Follies Girl." This is a singularly appropriate title considering Olive's past. Not that anything aproaching a skeleton is to be found in her closet but it will be remembered by all that she was once one of the famous Ziegfeld Follies atop the New Amsterdam Theatre roof in New York City. So now she has the opportunity of playing her real self before she was lured from the footlights to the motion picture studio.

The part of Doll suits Miss Thomas to the t of her last name. She is picked from the Follies by a designing woman who desires to pass her off as the long lost granddaughter of a serious invalid. The conspirator knows full well what the appearance of this granddaughter would mean to the dying man, that is she knows something of the effect it will have on him. It wil cheer his last days, she believes. And she is right but she cheers them to such an extent that these days prove far from being the old man's last. He regains his health quickly when Doll comes to administer to him!

After his health is restored several complications enter and the happiness of Doll is cast in jeopardy several times. But at the end it is discovered that Doll is really the long lost girl and that the old man's son had married her. And so the old gentleman's happiness is complete and the wrath of the conspirators is also complete. Miss Thomas makes a radiant figure of the stellar role, while she is surrounded by a particularly competent supporting cast including Wiliam V. Mong and Wallace McDonald.

THE STORY

Edward Woodruff lay dying. Those most concerned over this fact were three distant relatives, Nina Leffingwell, her brother, Frederic, and Basil, a cousin whom she planned to marry. The trio hoped to inherit the Woodruff fortune. The old man constantly called for his granddaughter, only child of the favorite daughter who, when she lived, had became estranged from him. The scheming Nina evolved a plan whereby the family attorney, Swann, was to produce a girl who could be introduced as the granddaughter, and who would inherit the money. Then Nina planned to pay the girl handsomely for her services and thus to come into possession of the coveted wealth herself. Doll, the granddaughter, arrives. She is a beauty fresh from the Follies. Filled with pity for the invalid, she uses every effort to kindle anew his desire to live, and, urged on by her encouragement and loving service, he becomes stronger. Nina, furious at the turn events have taken, sends for Ned, Edward Woodruff's favorite grandson, disowned because of his marriage beneath his social station. Nina thinks Ned will oust Doll, but instead he falls in love with her. One night when Doll has not reteurned home by ten o'clock, Nina, with a pretense of sorrow, tells Mr. Woodruff that his granddaughter is with Ned in a lodge on the estate. The old man goes to the lodge and discovers the lovers together. The attorney's plan has at last worked out satisfactorily. Doll is Ned's wife and there is a beautiful baby boy. With his great-grandson held tightly to his heart, the grandfather is eager to forget and to forgive, and everyone is happy except the baffled Nina and her partners in intrigue, Basil and Frederic.

PROGRAM READER

Most of those who frequent Broadway entertain the idea that the girls of the Follies, or of any other musical show for that matter, have designs on the pocketbooks carried by unsuspecting males. And while this impression may have something of a foundation, it must be said that there are many exceptions to the rule. One of these exceptions is the leading character in the Triangle picture "The Follies Girl," which will shortly be shown at this theatre. How this particular lady of the footlights saved a fortune instead of spending it and restored peace to a chaotic household forms the basis of a most delightful comedy-drama in which the beautiful Olive Thomas is seen as the star. Miss Thomas well knows how to play such a role when it is considered that the early years of her professional career were spent in the self-same Follies around which the picture's action centers. Her support in this picture embraces Wallace McDonald as leading man and William V. Mong in a rare character part. The story was written by W. Carey Wonderly. Don't miss "The Follies Girl." It is full of humor and whimsy—it is delightful in every one of its scenes.

SUGGESTIONS

"The Follies Girl" is a striking title, particularly when you consider the fact that Olive Thomas, the star, was once of the Follies herself. If you tie the title up with this fact you will create additional interest over a mere announcement of title and star.

Lay particular stress on the comedy of the picture.

Advertisements should reflect the lightness of the plot and at the same time carry out the suggestion of the title. Any pictures (drawn) of a girl in typical Follies costume would be decorative and attractive for both newspaper advertisements and lobby display. Beneath a catch line to the effect that the Follies girl in the picture is revealed as a kind-hearted human being, that the tinsel and paint vanish and reveal a startling character, will do.

"THE QUICKENING FLAME"

finds redemption through the awakening of the maternal spark.

The names of the stars offer the best leads, however, as each one can be depended upon to furnish good entertainment. Play them up attractively in the local papers and in your lobby. The title of the feature is finely suggestive of advertising possibilities. It spurs the imagination. Everyone will want to know what it means. You can offer a season's pass or a contribution of some sort through the papers for the best definition of it in 200 words, say, or less. Thus you will be advertising the picture through a particularly emphatic way.

CATCH LINES

Maternal love is a wonderful thing; it transformed Maizie Bell from a parasite into a woman of "sweetnes and light." See her regeneration in "The Quickening Flame," an absorbing picture of marital misunderstanding.

Two favorite stars, Montagu Love and June Elvidge, in a play of power and human feeling—"The Quickening Flame."

John Steele marries a burlesque "queen" and becomes disillusioned immediately. He marries again only to find out that his first wife is still alive. Caught in a marital net, how does he extricate himself? You will see it all in a series of smashing climaxes in "The Quickening Flame."

"A MAN AND HIS MONEY"—GOLDWYN

Tom Moore Again Justifies Elevation to Stardom

TOM MOORE again justifies his elevation to stardom in "A Man and His Money." The story, while it contains humorous and romantic possibilities of an average sort, is made thoroughly delightful through his personality and the easy performance he renders. He is always a good-natured human being, no matter what sort of a situation he undertakes.

Frederick S. Isham's story tells of a waster who voluntarily cut himself off from a fortune for the period of a year to learn a little about the value of money. And Harry Lathrop doesn't turn out a satevepost prodigy and clean up a million or so by bucking a ring of enemies. He leads a commonplace existence looking after a flock of dogs, which incidentally is a comical existence in the bargain. And how better could he redeem himself in the eyes of the girl than by rescuing her from the savage attack of the villain?

Seena Owen, not quite so prettily lighted as she could be, is the heroine, and a fascinating one. Sydney Ainsworth is the heavy, while others are Kate Lester and Claire DuBrey.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Harry Lathrop	Tom Moore
Betty Dalrymple	Seena Owen
Walter Randall	Sydney Ainsworth
Mrs. Johnson DeLong	Kate Lester
Varda Rogers	Claire DuBrey

By Frederick S. Isham.
Directed by Harry Beaumont.

SUGGESTIONS

Tom Moore is a star that was made by the public. There was no thrusting him on it. Long years of screen appearances and sterling work opposite the Goldwyn feminine stars made him what he is today—probably the best liked actor on the screen. Featuring him, then, is a matter of plain horse sense. Let fly at them with his name in big type.

"A Man and His Money is a good title to advertise. It has a number of possibilities and you can play on it by linking it up with the old saying, "A fool and his money are soon parted."

As it is a comedy drama, the angle to accentuate should be the comedy angle. This type of entertainment is growing in popularity every day. Melodramas are good, but they are so often marred by sameness and so often just a little too far-fetched that most everyone welcomes the occasional changes to comedy that the producers afford them. Play up the comedy situations in the picture. Write your advertisements in a brisk style. Center them about the leading male character (Tom Moore) and tell the circumstances that led to his making a man of himself. See if the Catch Lines printed elsewhere on this page won't fit this style of procedure.

PRESS NOTICE

Tom Moore, the Goldwyn favorite, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest comedy, "A Man and His Money." This is a story by Frederick S. Isham and relates the experiences of a young fellow, Harry Lathrop, who had so much money that it took him by the hand and led him astray. Harry's nights are spent in buying wine for a bunch of satellites and chorus girls and his days sleeping or getting home. The only good influence in his life is Betty, the girl he has thought to make his wife, ever since childhood. And Betty isn't quite strong enough to have any influence on Harry until she finally presents him with the engagement ring he had previously presented her. And then Harry wakes up to the fact that you don't miss a good thing until you lose it.

He starts thinking a bit and decides to cut himself off from his fortune for the period of a year to see whether or not he can make good on his own. And thereupon the story starts. To tell it all here would be giving away the secret of a thoroughly amusing and enjoyable tale, exceedingly well told on the celluloid. Suffice it to say that Mr. Moore makes a delightfully human hero. All his activities are not outrageously virtuous as is the way with many a screen idol's. His Harry Lathrop has a lot of good in him and a little bit of deviltry. Therefore the character takes a much firmer hold on the spectator's sympathies than is usually the case.

Seena Owen appears opposite the star and makes a pretty and attractive Betty. The picture was produced under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

THE STORY

Harry Lathrop has about two million too much. And it runs away with him. There is no wine bill too big for him to pay—and he usually pays for about twenty others' wine beside his own. Betty Dalrymple, to whom Harry has been engaged doesn't like his mode of living at all. Finally when he comes to escort her to a dinner, slightly tipsy and still in his everyday clothes, she dismisses him along with his engagement ring. It's all off as far as she is concerned. Then Harry starts to think and decides that he will dismiss his fortune for the period of a year. So he goes to his lawyer and makes arrangements to the effect that he can't touch any of his own money until he has made good.

In a distant city Harry sets out to make good. He answers an advertisement for a handy man and finds that the job is looking after the flock of canines kept by Mrs. Johnson DeLong, Betty's aunt. And Betty happens to be visiting her aunt at that time. Her scorn for Harry doesn't diminish in the least when she sees him leading the dogs out for an airing. But even though she doesn't like Harry (or pretends not to like him), she has no use for Walter Randall, a persistent suitor, whose chauffeur boasts that "every dame falls for him."

And as time goes on and Betty doesn't "fall for him" Randall lures her to a hunting lodge and there attacks her. Happily, however, Harry had gotten wind of the trick and had hopped on behind Randall's car. He is right on the spot when it comes to the rescue stuff and staves off both Randall and his chauffeur. And then Betty decides that Harry has really reformed and they stand embracing (outdoors) not bothering about the torrents of rain that descend.

CATCH LINES

A fool and his money are soon parted, but it's a wise man that knows himself to be a fool. Harry Lathrop came out of his trance just in time to discover the truth of those old adages—how his knowledge of his foolishness made a wise man out of him is humorously told in "A Man and His Money," the latest Goldwyn picture starring Tom Moore.

He set out to make good without his fortune and got a job as nurse to a collection of dogs. It was a petty job but he got what he went after. See "A Man and His Money."

Harry Lathrop was a human being. He had a lot of virtues and a few vices thrown in just to make him interesting. That's why his adventures in "A Man and His Money" are more entertaining than those of the average hero's.

PROGRAM READER

"A fool and his money are soon parted" is an old adage. But our tale here has to do with a man and his money. This man was wise enough to know himself a fool, and therefore was something of a wise man. It all came about when Betty, his sweetheart since childhood, handed him back the engagement ring and announced in no gentle terms just what she thought of him. She told him that as long as he preferred wine and song and chorus girls to her—as long as he preferred them he could have them, but she wouldn't declare herself in too. Then and there Harry discovered himself to be a fool and set about to try to rectify the matter. His first step was to cut himself off from his fortune. Then he set out to see whether he could make money the way he spent it. He couldn't. He found that out soon enough but he didn't give up all hope. He persisted and he won. How he did is disclosed in "A Man and His Money," a Goldwyn picture shortly to be shown here. When we add that Tom Moore is the star and that the picture is a comedy drama quite worthy of ranking with his other Goldwyn pictures, we have said all in the way of praise that is necessary. Don't pass "A Man and His Money" by. You'll learn a laughing lesson from it.

"THREE GREEN EYES"

Make a big noise about their appearance together then. You can't go too strong on this. The results are gratifying too. Each player seems to do better than he or she has ever done before. That's the result of co-operation, the co-operation of ability. You might discourse on this line to drive home your point.

Play the picture as a comedy-drama and go strong on this too. It's probably the best picture World Film has released in the past half year anyway. Take additional space. Use all the stars' pictures in your ad copy. Play up the five like they used to play up the old minstrel shows—40—count 'em—40. It'll take. Don't leave one of these players out of any copy you use. Stories regarding the all-star cast could be sent out, and photoplay editors will be glad of them. Go the limit on the stars and the merit of the picture and you can't go wrong.

"THE USURPER"—VITAGRAPH

Earle Williams in Adaptation of Nat Goodwin Play

"THE USURPER" is an adaptation of a play in which Nat Goodwin appeared on the speaking stage. As pictorial entertainment it presents rather a sparse plot, the single line of action being the hero's efforts to prove the villain such in the eyes of the girl. As the hero, himself, doesn't do anything particularly heroic, it cannot be said that he attracts much admiration or sympathy. Earle Williams endows the part with good looks and a sincere interpretation of the character, but the action does little credit to him.

The spoken play was doubtless filled with clever lines, subtle comedy, as well as a share of intense moments. The blend of these qualities on the screen results in a feature of just mildly entertaining values, one which is prettily set and well played, but which fails to score very decisively.

The production was made under the direction of James Young, while Louise Lovely, late Bluebird star, is Mr. Williams' leading lady in this instance.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 28.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

"The Usurper," the Vitagraph picture with Earle Williams in the stellar role, which will be seen here shortly is the tale of an American, an Arizonan to be particular, who travelled all the way to England to accept an invitation to tea! Rather a long trip just for an afternoon cup to be sure but John Maddox (Mr. Williams) really had another motive. He didn't care an awful lot about oolong or English Breakfast. His main idea was to see the hostess, Beatrice Clive, a young lady he had rescued six years before when she was dangled perilously over the edge of a high cliff. That rescue had been the beginning, now Maddox was determined to end it and how he accomplished his end is attractively set down in the five reels of "The Usurper." "The Usurper" is a drama punctuated with plenty of comedy moments. Mr. Williams appears at his best in the stellar role. Louise Lovely, sometimes a star on her own account, appears in the opposite role while others are Bob Russell, Frank Leigh, Billy Elmer, Audrey Chapman, Bessie Eyton and Lillian Langdon. The picture was produced under the direction of James Young.

PRESS NOTICE

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week in his latest feature entitled "The Usurper," an adaptation from the play in which the late Nat Goodwin often appeared in on the speaking stage. The part of John Maddox, the American ranchman, is singularly fitted to the talents of the star and he makes a most genial and at the same time commanding figure throughout all the dramatic scenes of the picture. "The Usurper" is, on the whole, a drama, although throughout the five reels there are flashes of comedy that, subtley introduced, serve to balance the entertainment in excellent fashion.

The story tells of John Maddox, who one day rescues a girl after she had fallen over a cliff to a narrow ledge below. She proves to be Beatrice Clive, journeying through the west with her father, an Englishman. When she leaves for her home she takes John's heart along with her although she isn't aware of it. Then Maddox goes on working, with renewed energy and eventually amasses a fortune sufficiently large enough to warrant his long-awaited trip. He learns that the Clive estate in England is for lease and he takes it up with the stipulation that the Clives themselves remain there and entertain him and his sister as their guests.

The scene then shifts to England and the plot then takes on new aspects. There is another suitor for the hand of Beatrice, a suitor that, even though Beatrice does not love him, Maddox has a hard time to get rid of. Eventually however, he accomplishes the purpose of his long trip. Mr. Williams receives capable support from Louise Lovely, Bob Russell, Frank Leigh, Billy Elmer, Bessie Eyton and Lillian Langdon.

THE STORY

John Maddox, an American ranchman, has long loked forward to the day when he may go to England to seek out Beatrice Clive whom he had once rescued when she was travelling in the west. The opportunity presents itself when he sees that the Clive estate in England is up for sale. Clive, it seems, had lost his fortune in poor investments. Maddox takes the estate on the condition that the Clives remain there and receive him and his sister, Margaret, as guests. This they agree to do, much against their better judgment. But when John and Margaret arrive the situation appears in a much better light.

Beatrice is engaged to Sir George Trenery, a neighbor, purely for financial reasons. John doesn't like the looks of Sir George at the start and he soon finds out that he has been guilty of betraying the trust of Beatrice's maid. The maid, however, keeps silent, fearing that Sir George wil send her father to jail if she tells the truth. Maddox learns of this and asks the girl to confess it all to Beatrice for her (Beatrice's) sake. She promises to do this but another threat from Sir George keeps her silent. Beatrice is furious that Maddox should endeavor to besmirch Sir George's name and announces her intention of eloping with him that very night.

Maddox, however, prevents this by asking Beatrice to show him the tower room which is supposedly haunted by ghosts. By the time they have seen it the last train to London has gone on its way. The maid's father is hiding in the room and he supports Maddox's statement as to Sir George's villainy. Beatrice then feels free to marry the man she had really loved since the first meeting in the west.

SUGGESTIONS

After consideration of all the possibilities of this feature it appears that the best talking points regarding it are the fact that it is an adaptation from a stage play in which Nat Goodwin starred, and that you can get some good catch lines and arguments out of the fact that the hero goes all the way to England to accept an invitation to tea. This last line starts the story off and it will arouse interest if you use it in your copy. And with the statement that "The Usurper" is a Nat Goodwin play you have another attraction. Nat Goodwin was an actor known from coast to coast, highly publicized and recognized as one of the leaders in his profession. By all means link up the pictures with the popularity of this late star.

You have another good selling point in Louise Lovely, particularly before real picture fans. They will know her as a Bluebird star, one who appeared in many pictures in the past. Use her name as supporting Earle Williams. It will help.

These things done and you will have covered the ground pretty thoroughly with regard to the best possibilities in "The Usurper."

humanities. His work is possessed of a certain quality and tone that is rarely to be found in pictures. His ability to portray realistically roles of the sort of Boston Blackie has been one of the reasons of his rapid climb to stardom. In "Blackie's Redemption" he is supported by an excellent cast that includes such capable players as Henry Kolker, Alice Lake, Bernard Durning, Jack Duffy, and Joseph Kilgour. The picture has been given a production that is remarkable for its fidelity to the atmosphere of the story.

CATCH LINES

A wonderfully appealing story, and an exciting one, too, is "Blackie's Redemption"—taken from Jack Boyle's Boston series that are appearing in the Red Book Magazine.

His resolution to go "straight"—to appreciate the love of a wonderful girl. And to be arrested for the crime of another on the eve of his honeymoon and sent to prison for twenty years! Did Blackie lose faith in himself? See Bert Lytell in "Blackie's Redemption" and find out the answer.

A tale of a crook and his reformation. Come to the ——— theatre and follow his adventures. You are in for sixty minutes of solid excitement —for Blackie is a thief and the Law swoops down on him, though he is innocent in this particular case.

Sentenced to prison for twenty long years and just as he is about to be married to Mary! Does she remain faithful and abide the time? What happens inside the prison walls? You can find the answer to these questions in "Blackie's Redemption." Don't fail to see it.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"The Follies Girl"—Triangle Special

ALTHOUGH "The Follies Girl" is not what one might call a "stupendous" production, nor the kind that would create a "great" sensation, nevertheless it is a picture you could not afford to overlook, especially if you happen to cater to a family patronage, and your aim is to present them with entertainment of the happy sort. It is based on a light but interesting story, intelligently developed.

The ending in particular is agreeably surprising, and will undoubtedly draw many favorable comments. These comments will be considerably augmented by the clever introduction of an infant. The presence of a baby on the screen in general, especially when such baby is, as in this case, the legitimate shild of the hero and the heroine, is alone a feature strong enough to bring cheer to the heart and a broad smile to the face; but when such feature is combined with other merits, such as this attraction possesses, then it makes the picture a sure enough winner.

Miss Thomas appears to the very best advantage; her work is sincere and natural. The supporting cast is also excellent, and so is the direction—smooth and free from jolts. Released April 27. Length, 5 Reels,—P. S. Harrison.

"The Blinding Trail"—Universal Special

"THE Blinding Trail" has been produced with the usual care that marks all Universal contributions. The predominant element in it is suspense; because the ending is concealed, the interest of the spectator is stimulated by his desire to know what it is going to be.

But however well the picture has been produced, however highly dramatic the story is, there is a feature in it that many of you will consider somewhat weak—it is a little uncheery. The hero goes blind, and with the exception of a short time at the beginning, he never regains his eyesight until well towards the end. The sight of a blind person on the screen can hardly be considered as conducive to cheerfulness.

Another weak point is the fact that it deals with marriage infidelity. For a city trade, such a feature of course may not be objectionable; but to those of you who cater to family patrons, especially in small towns, it no doubt proves unwelcome, even though when, as in this case, none of the situations are vulgar or in any way offensive. Released May 19. Length, 6 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Courageous Coward"—Robertson-Cole

TO ask that every Hayakawa picture should be a "Heart in Pawn," or a "Bond of Honor," would be asking for something that is almost impossible to attain, at least not for a while; so in judging other pictures of his, one should be guided solely by their individual merits, and not by the high standard set by those two attractions. So judged, "The Courageous Coward" is an excellent production. Although it lacks the intensity of emotional appeal that marked almost every Hayakawa contribution lately, it is endowed with a by far speedier action of plot; and as it unfolds a highly interesting story, the satisfaction and pleasure this offering should afford picture goers, especially his friends, should be almost as thorough as his other offerings have afforded.

The story deals with a love affair between an American born Japanese law student, and a young Oriental beauty, just imported from Japan by her uncle, a prominent attorney.

The production end of the picture is marked by the same artistry that has characterized all of this star's former contributions. Released through Exhibitors' Mutual. Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Roaring Road"—Paramount

THE entertaining values of "The Roaring Road" are excellent. Although the plot in itself lacks unity, slowing up considerably now and then, the satisfaction it will give nevertheless will be first class, for it is loaded with situations that are thrilling as well as exciting. Some of the scenes are so realistic, that the spectator is carried away by his enthusiasm as if he were an actual participant. This is true particularly near the close of the picture, where the hero in a racer is trying to overspeed a fast passenger train.

The picture deals with automobile races, in which the hero is after two prizes, the automobile race prize as well as the boss's daughter: he wins both.

The acting, direction, photography, etc., all are up to a high standard. Released April 27. Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"Bare Fists"—Universal Special

THERE are two elements in this attraction, either one of which could constitute the basis of a first class picture: The one is love—the unbounded love the hero feels for his mother as well as for his little brother, sure to wet a tear-dry eye; the other element is suspense, of the most intense kind, created by a rather novel situation—the hero, a cowboy, goes through the picture without a weapon on his person, and although he fights armed men, he wins out. The remarkable thing about it though, is the fact that the director has handled the situations with the gunless hero so convincingly, that the spectator's imagination, or his credulity, is hardly ever imposed upon.

The reason given for the hero's unwillingness to carry a gun is a promise he had given his mother to that effect: Having lost her husband, a sheriff, who was murdered by cattle rustlers, she trembles lest the feel of a gun make her boy take risks more than is prudent; so she makes him swear upon the family bible never to carry a weapon.

The most dramatic part of the picture is where the hero, in search of the cattle rustlers who branded his little brother, overtakes them. He is in the saloon armed with a rifle he had seized from the hands of the sheriff, while one of the outlaws is hiding in the next room. The realization of the hero's extremely dangerous situation creates within the spectator a strong sense of anxiety, holding him spellbound until the danger is over.

"Bare Fists" will no doubt give as good a satisfaction as any picture produced with Harry Carey in the lead. Released May 5. Length, 6 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Cry of the Weak"—Pathe

IF your patrons like the strong melodrama, I doubt whether you could satisfy them any better with another picture than you could with "The End of the Game." The elements of mystery and suspense, which have been worked cleverly into almost every one of the situations, can be depended upon to hold the attention of the spectator.

There is a slip in the picture, which will hardly escape the notice of even the most easily satisfied picture goer: The heroine's young brother is shot and mortally wounded, as is plainly indicated by the amount of blood shown on the hand of the heroine, and also by the spot of the wound, which is close to the heart; and yet, in the next few scenes the boy is standing up as a perfectly healthy person would, and also submitting to a third degree, apparently for many hours, without showing any signs of weakness, or that there was ever anything the matter with him whatever. In all probabilities there was a lapse of time between the shooting and the interrogating, but apparently the director found himself up against a difficult situation—he either had to allow this discrepancy to creep in and thus keep the boy in the house, or else change the story. Whatever the cause, such faults do not help to raise the motion picture art in the minds of the people.

Interesting story as it is, the effect it leaves behind is somewhat sad anl unhappy, so it wouldn't be a bad idea to temper it up by placing at the end a good slap-stick comedy. Released May 4. Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"A Man and His Money"—Goldwyn

OWING to Tom Moore's personality as well as to the excellent handling of the production end, "A Man and His Money" should give good satisfaction. As far as the story itself is concerned, there is nothing in it that is new—the same idea has been employed in pictures many times in the past; the average spectator will know approximately almost from the very beginning what the outcome would be; for that reason, suspense suffers to a great extent. But it has been repeatedly noticed that when a spectator likes a player, he generally overlooks many things; so it wouldn't surprise anyone to see this picture make a good hit.

The hero, in this case, is introduced as a wealthy young man, who dissipates quites a little. As he has failed to live up to the promises he gave his fiancee to stop drinking, she breaks their engagement. In the end, however, he makes good and they again become engaged. Released March 16. Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

Everyone about the Famous Players-Lasky studio who was fortunate in being present at the private showing of the C. B. DeMille-Edgar Selwyn story production, "For Better For Worse," enthusiastically proclaim it the greatest to date. This film is now entirely completed, and the showing occurred on the evening of April 8. It is spoken of as the strongest drama of the American screen, produced with delicacy and finesse, and of such character as to be a bell ringer for the great American public.

Bryant Washburn is now "posing" as "A Very Good Young Man," for that is the title of the play he is now appearing in under the direction of Donald Crisp. The subject was put in production at the Lasky plant this week.

Irvin Willat, director; Lila Lee and company, which includes Elliott Dexter as leading man, are back from Truckee where they went to film exteriors for a Canadian northwoods play, and are working on interiors at the studio, and exteriors near Hollywood.

A play has been selected for Vivian Martin, but a definite name has not been decided upon. She is working under the direction of Robert Vignola.

Wallace Reid and Company are completing the scenes for "The Valley of Giants," the Peter B. Kyne story directed by James Cruze; while the remainder of "Secret Service," starring Captain Robert Warwick, which is to be an Artcraft Special, will be completed within the next week by Director Hugh Ford.

Houdini, the escape artist, is to arrive in Hollywood on April 20, and preparations for the filming of a story are now progressing. Work will be commenced on the filming of the play as soon as he arrives.

Fox Studio Doings

Director Arthur Rossen and the Tom Mix Company are home from San Francisco where ten days were spent in securing scenes for "Cow Hollow," which will offer Juanita Hansen as leading woman. While in San Francisco the producing unit had every accommodation conceivable from the city officials for the filming of this fairy story of the wild west, written by Charles Kenyon.

The comedy department of the William Fox studio, under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth, this week has three companies at work on new subjects, untitled, under the direction of J. G. Blystone, Frank Griffin and Victor Herrman. Herrman was recently discharged from the navy after serving almost two years.

Al Christie plays the piano divinely, while members of his comedy company drink in the harmony

An addition to the comedy producing forces is a ballet of twelve girls engaged this week by Supervising Director Del Ruth, who are at present working in the subject being filmed by Director Blystone.

Director E. J. LeSaint continues on "Gypsy" starring Gladys Brockwell, who has Bertram Grassby as her leading man; William C. Dowlan is producing "Cowardice Court" with Peggy Hyland, and Harry Millarde is directing Madlaine Traverse in "The High Flame."

About Metro Players

The week of April 12 was ushered in at the Metro studios with the beginning of work on three new productions, stars of which are Bert Lytell, Hale Hamilton and Viola Dana.

George D. Baker, who is now directing Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den," will relinquish his claim to that actor within a day or two and Lytell is then to return to the direction of John Ince for the making of "A Favor to a Friend," from an original story by Luther A. Reed. While no statement has been issued from the Metro studios, it is learned that it will be Metro's future policy to give more attention to subjects of this star, it being understood that officials, including Supervising Director Maxwell Kargar, believe Lytell is one of the big possibilities for the screen. The new story is one of stage life, and is spoken of as a light comedy.

Alice Lake, having completed her work opposite Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den," has been cast to play the leading woman role in "Full of Pep," which will star Hale Hamilton. A. S. LeVino is responsible for the continuity, and this is from a story by Robert F. Hill. Settings are now ready for the filming.

May Allison is going back to her former director, George D. Baker, for another picture. Baker will direct her next subject which will be titled "Free," which is adapted from the Will Irwin story of a stenographer's adventures with Bolshevikism.

"Pliant Patricia" is the name role Viola Dana will play next under the direction of Henry Otto. This was originally a three act comedy written by Anne and Alice Duffy, and has been prepared for the screen by June Mathias. Only the preliminary scenes are being taken this week, and consequently the entire cast has not been at work.

Finis Fox is now doing the last re-write work on the continuity for the Emily Whalen subject which will be made under the direction of Herbert Blache, who has just made the final scenes for "The Brat" with Nazimova. This will be titled "Family Trees," and is a satire by E. Forst. Darrell Foss has been selected as leading man.

Universal Newsettes

After a stay of several weeks, President Carl Laemmle departed from Universal City. During his stay the production staff has been materially increased, until now about fifteen companies are at work at all times on new productions. Changes have been made that will add efficiency to the production department, and changes have been introduced that will be very beneficial to the productions generally speaking.

It became known this week that Dorothy Phillips in her forthcoming production, "The Right to Happiness," will have four leading men, they being Thurston Hall, Stanhope Wheatcroft, William Stowell and Robert Anderson. The other important players for this special production being directed by Allen Holubar are Margaret Mann, who appeared as the mother in "The Heart of Humanity," together with Hector Sarno, Alma Bennett and Henry Barrows.

Production work has been started by Director Paul Powell on a subject at present titled "The Weaker Vessel," which will star Mary MacLaren. This is an original story by Elmer Elsworth, and will have Thurston Hall in the leading masculine role, and Margaret Loomis in a very important part. In this film Miss MacLaren will be seen as the young girl from a small village who goes to the city to become waitress in a chop house. At the present time the company is working at Bishop filming small town scenes.

The San Quentin prison of California has been reproduced at Universal City for scenes in "The Chatterbox," which stars Priscilla Dean, which Director R. S. Sturgeon is now filming from the Bayard Veiller crook story. The entire cast now assembled includes Francis MacDonald, leading man, George MacDaniels, Gertrude Astor, Walt Whitman, Joseph Swickard and Milton Ross.

Unable to continue filming of the next serial which stars Marie Walcamp owing to the actress being in a local hospital recovering from a recent injury sustained while scenes for "The Red Glove" serial were being made, J. P. McGowan is now directing a two-reel western subject titled "In the Balance," by Alvin J. Neitz and George Hively. Other two-reel subjects in production are "The Last Outlaw," with Ed Jones and Lucille Hutton, under the direction of Jack Ford: "Wanted for Murder" with Magdalane and Pete Morrison, under the direction of George Hoit; and "Destiny's Share," directed by Jacques Jaccard with Helen Gibson and Eddie Polo.

Here and There

Two Jesse D. Hampton producing companies will begin work on new subjects within the next week. William Desmond will play the name part in an original story written by William Parker titled "Two Fisted Gallagher." Mr. Hampton has engaged Joseph J. Franz to direct Desmond, and the producing unit heads are now selecting players for the cast of this subject.

H. B. Warner is next to play in the Chinese subject titled "The Pagan God," which will be directed by Parke Frame. Barbara Castleton will continue as Warner's leading woman. George Elwood Jenks is responsible for the original story for this play and also the continuity.

Locations of a desirable nature for a Fox hunt have been found in the vicinity of Santa Barbara for the Tom Moore production now in the making under the direction of Harry Beaumont, and the company is at the millionaire colony of Santa Barbara this week. In addition to Naomi Childers, who was borrowed from the Metro to play opposite Moore, the cast contains a number of well known players including Mabel Ballin, Frank Leigh, William Burress, Philo McCollough, Kate Lester, late of Metro, and a number of others, including Leslie Stuart, Jr., late lieutenant of the Royal Field Artillery. This is Stuart's first screen assignment.

Since production was begun on the filming of "Her Kingdom of Dreams," starring Anita Stewart and being filmed for First National under the direction of Marshall Neilan, no complete cast for the subject was given out until this week, as all important roles had not been cast. Mahlon Hamilton, Tom Santchi, Lou Cody, Thomas Meighn and Edwin Stevens are among the list of leading men taking part. Thomas Jefferson, Frank Currier and Harry Holden are to play character roles, and Anna Q. Nilsson and Kathleen Williams will be seen in the principal feminine parts in support of Miss Stewart. Little Wesley Barry, who made his screen debut in "The Unpardonable Sin," takes the child role. It is expected at least two weeks will be required for the completion of photographic work.

The Lyons and Moran troop are filming "The Go-Getters," and Al Santell is making "Rings and Things" with Neal Burns and Josephine Hill, after which he will film "Father Was Wise."

Just prior to the departure of President Laemmle, Lynn F. Reynolds, who for the past year has been with the Fox organization, was engaged to film a special story, "The Little Brother of the Rich," adapted from the story of the same name by Joseph Medill Patterson, owner and editor of the Chicago Tribune.

Having completed all scenes for "I'll Get Him Yet," a comedy by Harry Carr, Sunday editor of Los Angeles Times, the Dorothy Gish Company is taking up the making of a western comedy. Elmer Clifton is the director of this, as well as the subject recently filmed. In "I'll Get Him Yet," Richard Barthelmess is leading man.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to January 26, 1919.

"FLASHBACKS" ON EARLIER RELEASES

" The Border Legion " (Goldwyn)—" A great dramatization of a great novel, and would have been a great picture had they cast Edith Storey in Blanche Bates' part. Her acting was good, but her age registers so plainly that it makes the whole story ridiculous. Otherwise a fine Western play. Characters, photography, scenes and direction fine. Better than average business all week."

" The Mystery Girl " (Paramount)—" Opened average business, closed poor business."

" Bonds of Honor " (Exhibitors' Mutual)—" This star always goes well. Big business."

" Infatuation " (Pathe)—" Didn't go well. People here not much on foreign stuff."

" Salome " (Fox)—" A wonderful production, but does not satisfy like Cleopatra.' Too gruesome. Business very good. The matinees were light."

" Three X Gordon " (Hodkinson)—" Big to average business."

" Secret Garden " (Paramount)—" Fair but star isn't much. Average business."

" Queen of the Sea " (Fox)—" Patrons walked out on this one. Poor business."

" Children of Banishment " (Select)—" Poor stuff. Average to poor business."

" Who Cares? " (Select)—" Extra big business three days. Best show in month run with Arbuckle comedy."

" Under the Greenwood Tree " (Paramount)—" Not the best this star as made. Average business."

" Too Many Millions " (Paramount)—" Good. Went well to big and average business."

" Arizona " (Artcraft)—" Good story. Something new for 'Doug.' Extra big business."

" Poppy " (Select)—" Old picture released some time ago. Book same to fill in."

" The Claw " (Select)—" Did not draw."

' Cleopatra " (Fox)—" Repeat to big business."

" The Railroader " (Triangle)—" Rotten waste of film to poor business."

" Marriages Are Made " (Fox)—" Average business."

" Life's a Funny Proposition " (Exhibitors' Mutual)—" Poor program offering. Poor business."

" The Way of a Man with a Maid " (Paramount)—" Good comedy drama. They all liked it."

" The Sign Invisible " (First National)—" Good story of the Northwest. Good business."

" In the Hollow of Her Hand " (Select)—" Good picture. Well liked. Big business."

" Treat 'Em Rough " (Fox)—" Any Mix picture is like a special to my patrons. This one went over extra big. Booked for two days, ran three, and I could have run the fourth."

" Out of the Shadow " (Paramount)—" The usual morbid, gruesome Frederick's type of picture. Too many murders for any audience. Poor business three days."

" The Girl of My Dreams " (Exhibitors' Mutual)—" Billie Rhodes registers big in this. A rollicking comedy drama that will please anywhere. Extra big business two days."

" Shoulder Arms " (First Nationel)—" Return engagement; capacity and house records for two days."

DOMINATES THE FIELD

Congratulations—

TO the Strand and to the Rialto, two of New York's picture palaces, whose anniversaries are being celebrated this week. They are castles that shadows built.

(Rialto's sister theatre, the Rivoli, has Elsie Ferguson in "Eyes of the Soul," an Artcraft Picture.)

Such are the Paramount and Artcraft Pictures whose shadows are building castles all over the land.

Lois Weber's Unique Western

LOIS WEBER, the Belasco of the Screen, is usual in only one way—she is always unusual. And this means box-office receipts exactly as much as it means screen artistry. So when we say that Lois Weber has made a Western—her first Western—which is just as different from, as it is finer than, any Western that you've ever seen, you'll know that this big, full-blooded picture will please your Treasurer just as much as it will delight your audiences. Mildred Harris and William Stowell carry the story and you've never seen a more dramatic heart-picture better acted.

Slightly Addled

WERE the family affairs of Jonas Abbott, merchant. His daughter and his son were stepping a bit too fast for the old man. Then Mary took charge.

Mary was a travelling saleswoman of the new kind. She was full of speed but she wasn't "fast." And she cleaned up the affairs of the Abbott family and won a young husband in doing it.

A lively, up-to-date comedy. Dorothy Dalton at her best.

"THE WOMAN THOU GAVEST ME"

BY HALL CAINE

Directed by HUGH FORD

Scenario by BEULAH MARIE DIX

Hugh Ford

THREE powerful factors absolutely assure the box-office success of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

One is the world-famous story by Hall Caine.

The second is an all-star cast including Katherine MacDonald, Theodore Roberts, Milton Sills, Jack Holt and Fritzi Brunette.

The third, and perhaps the greatest, is the masterly direction of Hugh Ford.

Admittedly one of the foremost producers in the theatrical and motion picture worlds, Hugh Ford has rapidly won an international reputation.

Among his brilliant stage successes are "Joseph and His Brethren," "The Garden of Allah," "The Melting Pot," "The Yellow Jacket," "Potash and Perlmutter."

His remarkable skill on the screen is proved by such hits as "Sappho," "The Prince and the Pauper," "Such a Little Queen," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and Hall Caine's "The Eternal City."

Hugh Ford is a personal friend of Hall Caine; knows the facts surrounding the startling story of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me"; knows from his travels, the scenes in England, India and Africa which are covered by the action.

The result is a big, thrilling, red-blooded production that means record crowds and record profits for exhibitors.

"THE TEST OF HONOR"

A Paramount Picture

Story founded on "The Malefactor" by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Scenario by Eve Unsell. Directed by John S. Robertson.

"A PICTURE EVERY EXHIBITOR OUGHT TO GO AFTER"

SO says Variety of the "Test of Honor." Here's more of the review: "This is a whale of a feature. It is one of the best pictures for dramatic values that has been turned out in a long, long while. It is so good a picture that there seems to be a lack of words that might adequately voice its praise. It is a picture with all the essentials that go toward making a feature production that is out of the ordinary run of screen plays. It is about as fine a piece of work as Barrymore has ever done either on stage or screen."

And here's part of an editorial headed "A Real Artist" from the Exhibitors' Trade Review: "It is a pleasure to call attention to a real star—John Barrymore—and his picture, 'The Test of Honor.' Mr. Barrymore's portrayal is without exception one of the finest pieces of acting the screen has ever seen. He has complete command of all the moods—from farce to tragedy—and in this picture his work is characterized by a finish and a maturity which deserve very high praise."

Then this, from a whole page by Edward Weitzel in the Moving Picture World: "John Barrymore is the best dramatic actor who has appeared in New York this season. He is equally proficient on the shadow stage. His latest picture, 'The Test of Honor,' is a picture exhibitors should be eager to run. It has every element for both artistic and financial success. Its story is intensely dramatic, but is never over the heads of the general public, that large class that demands that first and foremost it be entertained. The additional interest contributed by the presence of Barrymore will receive its proper valuation, but the picture would itself reveal sufficient merit to score a pronounced hit."

Can you afford not to feature it for a long run?

CHARLES RAY

A World's Record!

"GREASED LIGHTNING" will scoot to success like a burst of blue blazes.

This is a testimony and a prediction.

When Charles Ray as "Blacksmith Andy" gets his old tin Lizzy to working in "Greased Lightning," and when he gives the worthies of Pipersville a special demonstration of his Little Giant Potato Peeler---it'd have been a great peeler if it had only worked ---you'll see visible evidence of why Charles Ray and his pictures are so sure-fire, money-making, popular.

For delightful humor, quaint rural types, happy good feeling and thrills, there hasn't been a better picture in many moons.

Ray is one of the finest screen artists before the public. This is the best thing he has done---not excepting "The Girl Dodger." You'll say so and your audiences will too.

Wanda Hawley, Robert McKim and Otto Hoffman are some of the many good ones in the cast.

Lay a big bet on "Greased Lightning." She never skids, takes all grades on high and will bring home the money.

W.W. Hodkinson Is Not "Coming Back"— He's Never Been Away!

All the time, in an industry that has shifted like the sands of the sea, W. W. Hodkinson has stood rock solid in one position. He has watched chaos and ruin pile up for producers who resorted to shifty practices.

He has seen the desertion of his fundamental, sound principles make the nation's exhibitors actual or potential enemies of the producers. During all these days he has not flinched or moved away from his sound position.

During this same period he has been building a silent-working machine of tremendous power. He has been building an organization with a heart and brain. This organization, more than a year in the making, is now beginning to work on its broader lines.

Times and conditions have changed in the picture industry. Immediately ahead of all of us there is revolution—as dramatic a revolution as the one that continues to rock red Russia.

Underneath almost everything there is a granite base. W. W. Hodkinson has had a granite base from the day he entered the motion picture business as an exhibitor eleven years ago.

Many things are going to happen in the motion picture industry between now and September!

now controls four great lines of product.
will have upwards of thirty productions for the year beginning April 20.

Seven Keys To Patronage.

A "special" picture does not mean an extra half reel or reel of footage and some excitable but barely usable publicity—though many exhibitors have bought such types of pictures under forced draught advertising.

A "special" production must have 1 a great story. It can be an original story, but it is usually bigger if made 2 from a great play or novel. It must have behind it the reputation of 3 a great author. It must be made by
4 a powerful director. It must be splen-
5 didly cast with a popular star in the leading role. It must have splendid 6 technical quality and a careful
7 producer with vision must weld these elements together.

These elements make a special.

Measured by these standards of excellence, we announce to the exhibitors of the nation that "As a Man Thinks" is a special production of unusual quality and strength and of determined-in-advance drawing power at the ticket seller's window.

Also, it is a special in a sales sense: You can buy it singly from any Hodkinson representative without tying yourself up under contract for any other Hodkinson product. The Hodkinson personal representatives in thirty Pathe offices are ready to quote you prices and fix immediate playing dates.

Spending a Half Million

To produce a serial requires a vast amount of nerve and judgment.

Yet, someone had to set the pace.

Five years ago CABIRIA, the first great spectacle was launched, in the face of disaster-mongers who predicted the public would never pay $2 to see a picture.

Yet, CABIRIA did more than $1,000,000 and not only brought thousands of new faces to theatres but created a panic among producers who soon began fighting for big picture supremacy.

With CABIRIA also came "MACISTE," the mastodonic hero. Over night he became a star.

When THE WARRIOR was launched and the public fought to get near the box office, "MACISTE" knew he was a popular fixture. And now, THE LIBERATOR, an ultra-serial in twelve episodes—with the "Big Fellow" in his greatest role—produced upon a scale of magnificence not yet ventured by other producers.

High class theatres are now showing THE LIBERATOR to great returns. Others are bound to do likewise.

The Heart of Chicago

That is the initial booking—at one theatre—of Goldwyn's great drama of compassion, "The Eternal Magdalene."

A solid month's run; a thousand-dollar advertising campaign in advance; a special publicity man on the job—such was Manager John Keane's estimate of the possibilities of this big extra production.

It was an estimate made in advance of the ultimate test—public presentation. It was based on the recognition of an epoch-making handling of a remarkable subject.

Manager Keane saw instantly the power, the broad human appeal, the universality of Robert H. McLaughlin's mighty theme—the hunted woman of ten thousand towns and forty centuries.

Your audience will see it, too.

Goldwyn

The ETERNAL MAGDALENE

Funnier than in "Sis Hopkins"
Prettier than in "A Perfect 36"
Prankier than in "Peck's Bad Boy"

You know what Mabel Normand did in her last three pictures. She does more in her newest, "The Pest."

You know what Mabel Normand and those pictures did for you, or your competitor. She will do more with "The Pest."

Steadily, through two years of association with Mabel Normand, Goldwyn has been taking the measure of "the star who has everything"— coming nearer to a full knowledge of her varied talents and of the public's preferences.

With each successive production Goldwyn has approached closer and closer to the great American public's conception of the Ideal Normand Picture.

It is "The Pest."

Absolute First Run Quality

That is what Goldwyn insists upon in every special production that it undertakes to distribute side by side with its own quality product. It can not do less in justice to itself and to the exhibitors who put their trust in the Goldwyn imprint.

It is Louis Bennison's ability to meet this exacting test which has lifted this new star from the large second and third run business easily won by his initial pictures to the first run contracts that are now coming in for his fourth and best production, released May 11.

In "The Road Called Straight" Bennison has all those lovable, frank Western qualities that have won him fame on stage and screen. But he has more—a deep compelling power hiterto unrevealed.

He didn't know the meaning of a marriage of convenience.

The Gold of the Golden West

When a woman shoots to kill

Zane Grey struck "pay dirt" in his long series of Western stories.

Blanche Bates minted a fortune for Belasco as the star of "The Girl of the Golden West".

Hobart Bosworth "panned out" his solid reputation by rugged impersonations of Western heroes.

Publishers, producers and theatre managers have made their piles from the individual work of these three.

Exhibitors booking the screen version of Zane Grey's greatest story, "The Border Legion," as acted by Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth, and directed by T. Hayes Hunter, will mint the gold of the Golden West from the combined power of author, stars and story and from the public's eager love of border romance.

Why Five?

Several weeks ago William Sievers of St. Louis started a lively discussion among exhibitors over the stand taken by the First National Exhibitors Circuit in restricting its advertising to five papers devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

Mr. Sievers subscribed heartily to this policy.

So have all the exhibitors who took part in the discussion—practically without exception.

But Mr. Sievers took pains to state that two papers were enough, in his opinion; and it is significant to note that the great majority of exhibitors whose letters followed believe exactly the same way.

Note carefully these extracts from one recent installment of exhibitor letters to the Moving Picture World:

"Common sense points to the fact that no exhibitor has time for more than one or two good publications which cover his field completely and satisfactorily.

"There can be no benefits derived from duplication of advertising and a field cannot be extended by duplication."

"The producer who confines his advertising to a few reputable magazines of the trade, and drives home his punch in the strongest way possible in these, has the right idea of getting results.

"Why, then, does not the motion picture industry concentrate when the matter of proper exploitation is involved?"—Charles A. McElravy, General Manager, Majestic Amusement Company, Memphis, Tennessee.

"I myself subscribe to four magazines. Two of these I read very carefully, both advertising announcements and news. The other two I simply glance through.

"He (the exhibitor) cannot devote his entire time to the reading of publications when, as a matter of fact, it is simply a duplication of stuff which he has seen in a previous one. There are other duties that an exhibitor must perform which require his time."—Jack Kuhn, Manager, Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

"I must admit that I have not been a subscriber to all of them—have not had time to read more than two."—Joseph Erber, President Erber Amusement Company, East St. Louis, Ill., and Washington Amusement Company, Belleville, Ill.

"Duplication in advertising is one of the extravagant wastes of money that confronts the motion picture industry today. His (Mr. Sievers) assertion that two journals seem to be enough to any exhibitor to read is to my way of thinking, as I only read two each week."—Jay Emanuel, Ridge Avenue Theatre, Philadelphia.

"I receive many trade journals each week, but I have my favorite two, which give me all the information I desire about new features to be released."—A. J. Fischer, Mammoth Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

"And I don't need five motion picture trade journals. I read only two of them, and I don't know of anybody who reads any more except the various magazines' proofreaders."—Ray Stinnett, Manager, Jefferson Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

"Are five trade journals enough to carry advertising for a big distributor like the First National? Indeed, they are enough, and more, too, so far as I am able to judge."—S. A. Hayman, Manager, Lyda Theatre, Grand Island, Neb.

"If it is not decided to advertise in all, I would suggest that the advertisements be limited to one of the movie trade journals—the recognized best. This would fully eliminate wasted advertising. If this idea was adopted by the First National and several other large companies, other trade publications, with the exception of probably one or two, would soon become obscure."—A. T. Sparrow, Proprietor, Empire Theatre, Washington, D. C.

"First of all, the exhibitors want productions that are in themselves distinctive. He does not have to be sold that kind of production. It will sell itself, on its merit. But he must also have every aid from the releasing company in order that he may offer his ware to the public and elicit their ready response with their dimes that he may heed the call of the exchange for its bit.

"What the exhibitor needs is 100 per cent. pictures, and then some good, whole-hearted co-operation and advertising aids in the way of good cuts and mats to help him support the producer."—C. Edgar Momand, Manager of Garden Theatre, Flint, Mich.

"Why should we be bothered with an avalanche of trade journals in every mail, when possibly two would be a sufficiency to tell us everything we want to know concerning releases and other news pertaining to the picture.

"Two is enough for me, and any others that come to me are cast aside without a glance."—D Morris, Franklin Theatre, Philadelphia.

¶ First National deserves a lot of credit for coming out in the open on this important subject.

It is the first concern to do so.

Exhibitors in particular will appreciate its frank, independent and business-like stand.

This is a step forward; it should set a precedent that will save a lot of flagrant waste in advertising.

But does the step go far enough?

Why as many as five?

Why four?

Why even three?

Let's get frankly down to the bare practicalities involved.

The problem concerns three factors—the advertiser, the reader, the paper itself.

The advertiser does not set aside enough money—and he shouldn't—to take enough space in each of five publications to tell the exhibitor fully enough about each feature release.

And why should he repeat this complete information five times?

That is futile enough, provided the exhibitor really reads five papers. And we don't believe there's a single exhibitor in this country who reads five papers whose editorial contents must largely duplicate themselves.

By enough advertising space we mean not merely a pretty picture nor a brief announcement: but that specific and complete information which will enable the exhibitor first to decide a booking and then to put the picture over for all it's worth.

Advertising service in other words! We are sure First National will agree with us that such service is quite as important as the making of the picture; and we know that exhibitors will agree with us that he must have this service.

The advertiser should give this service in at least one trade paper.

That's concentration. That's the punch that sells pictures. That's the advertising that helps the advertiser and the exhibitor, that binds both together in a successful effort to sell the picture to the public.

And that's the function of a trade paper—to carry just such advertising service.

Splitting up the same advertising expense in five insufficient advertisements does no one good, neither the advertiser nor the exhibitor, nor even the five trade papers themselves, for on such a basis some must either die out or struggle along with a size and service of no particular value to the reader, and no credit to the industry.

The plain fact of the matter is that the industry does not ask for nor support three big trade papers today.

Why five?

EXPERT SAYS AUTOMATIC FILM PROCESSING MACHINE EXCELS

¶ The technical expert of one of the foremost producing concerns in the United States visited the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories in Chicago last week to investigate the claims made in behalf of processing by automatic machinery. After examining thoroughly every detail of the process he stated frankly that he considered the Spoor-Thompson automatic machine the last word in the laboratory end of the film business.

¶ Another visitor, prominent in the film world across the sea, stated he had come all the way from England to see if the Spoor-Thompson automatic machine was really a working actuality. As he stood watching the machine operate he said:

¶ "This has been the dream of my life. I congratulate you on your patience and success in bringing to the film laboratory this wonderful mechanism. So far as I can see it is unfailing in the delivery of its work."

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 18 May 3, 1919

What is a Special?

WE learned, just the other day of a picture which exhibitors acclaimed and booked as a "special," after the producer had decided in his own mind that it was "just an average picture."

Which brings up the question—a most important one—of: Just what is a special?

A special is not a matter of length nor of cost—for one thing. The producer is too apt to set too high a value upon these factors. They have only a trade significance. The public doesn't give a rap about either; its viewpoint is utterly different.

The public, in fact, is apt right along to class a short subject as the "special" on a bill—a good comedy, a beautiful scenic, a novelty, simply, of course, because the picture has an especial appeal. The audience has long since ceased to regard the five reel picture as the "feature" of the entertainment simply because the trade gives it that name.

Whenever a short subject dominates the bill in this way, in its appeal, it becomes the "special" attraction on the program, and it pays to specialize on the advertising of it, as many exhibitors are finding out.

The best and most comprehensive definition of a "special," we believe, is this: That picture which lends itself to special exploitation.

It is a picture which has, because of some element or another, an unusual appeal to the public, and is therefore worthy of a special announcement. This factor may be the name of a big star, or author or other personage; or it may be a topical appeal, that is to say, the presentation of a broad problem of the day; a basic and wide appeal to the human mind or emotion; or it may be a decided novelty that catches the public fancy.

Its special advertising possibilities, evidently, determine the "special" picture.

That is why the exhibitor is so anxious to know these possibilities well in advance, and to be fully supplied with the necessary advertising help from the producer.

Time For Thinking Caps

THE announcement of a new theatre costing half a million dollars creates little interest these days. There is scarcely a large city in the country to-day, but where one or more very large and costly picture theatres are either building or contracted for.

At the end of the year the list will be a most imposing one. And as such, the situation offers real food for thought.

These picture theatres will far overshadow all other kinds of theatres and entertainment halls in size and all around attraction to the public. As such, and in their aggregate they offer new possibilities in the entertainment world, possibilities to set the showman's imagination working in a very lively fashion.

They will demand a very high order of picture and picture projection and music. They will be open to varied attractions, perhaps of a new and very high order, for altogether they will be able to offer a full season of booking weeks and for special bills they will be able to command high prices.

They will give serious competition, perhaps unbearable competition, to present-day vaudeville.

It is time evidently for the many factors involved in this new theatrical order of things to put their thinking caps on.

The Weeding out Process

WITH a widespread theatre building boom on, the question has been raised if a previous era of too many picture houses might not be duplicated.

Mr. M. L. Finkelstein of Rubin and Finkelstein, who saw picture houses begin, says no.

"We will build two new theatres this year," he says, "one in Minneapolis and one in St. Paul, but simply because, we well-know, the business demands them. It is not speculation.

"In the early days inexperienced persons jumped into the picture theatre business, believing a motion picture show would run itself. Competition gradually weeded out the unfit house, the too small house and the incompetent manager.

"Very little capital was required then. Now big houses and big capital are required; and business ability and judgment go with these large investments.

"There will soon be only large theatres in the large centres.

"In the smaller centres smaller houses will of course prevail; but they are well established for the most part, and the lesson of inexperience and overcompetition has been too well learned everywhere to encourage new theatres with new owners."

Does Uncle Sam Need a Censor?

IT now appears, according to her statement to an exhibitor that the recent outburst of Ellen O'Grady, Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner of New York, was caused by the appearance of a picture in a Brooklyn theatre, in connection with which the License Commissioner took action.

The O'Grady statement was widely circulated by the New York press, and all the accounts will be greedily grabbed by the professional reformers and stored in their archives, later on to be read before legislative committees as proof positive of the motion picture's depravity.

With customary and intentional unfairness, they will make no investigation, but leap nimbly to their own conclusions.

So we set down the facts in the case.

The picture in question was not made by any concern in the motion picture producing industry, but by the Government of the United States.

The picture was not shown in a motion picture theatre, but in a theatre always given over to other amusements, and unoccupied at the time. In fact we are informed that the picture was offered to various members of the Brooklyn Association of Exhibitors and flatly turned down by every one.

For the further information of the professional reformers we would state that the exhibitor associations of Greater New York are in sympathetic accord with the License Commissioner, and anxious to take first action and report at his office any case of a theatre showing pictures of a wrong character.

Some Interesting Figures

CONTRARY to the general impression the production of pictures is not lessening, according to figures just compiled by this office.

In April, 1918, the average weekly production was 113½ reels; in April, 1919, the average was 116½.

Fifteen features, of five or more reels in length, were averaged weekly in April, 1918, and the same number in April, 1919. More two-reel pictures and less single reels are being made this year. Special and independent pictures have doubled in output. Two reel dramas have come back this year, at the rate of two a week. Otherwise the amount and kind of production is remarkably similar to that of last year.

Program production, weekly, in April 1918, included: Fifteen features; two two-reel comedies; fourteen one-reel comedies and educationals, one half-reel cartoon subject; three current serials, two reels each; seven single reel news, magazine and review subjects.

The independents supplied: Two features a month; two two-reel subjects a month; three one-reel comedies or educationals; one split reel cartoon.

In April, 1919, the weekly average included, from the program producers: Fifteen features; four two-reel comedies and dramas; nine one-reel comedies and educationals; one half-reel cartoon; three current serials, two reels each; nine single reel news, magazine and review subjects.

The independents supplied: One feature a week, and four single reel comedies or educationals.

Exhibitors are Not So Foolish

REFERRING again to the very unfortunate advertising suggestions made by a contemporary in connection with "Bolshevism on Trial," we believe that no harm whatever will result, for the simple reason that no exhibitor would follow such obviously outlandish advice.

In this case, the suggestion happens to be a dangerous one; an exceedingly dangerous one; and the writer himself had, of course, only the good intention of being of service to his readers.

But aside from its dangerous character, the suggestion is no more ridiculous than many others we have seen from other sources, including the press books issued by producers.

These "suggestions" abound in advice about as impracticable as pulling down the moon from the sky. Many deserve only a place in a humorous column. Just recently the exhibitor was calmly advised to have negroes, dressed only in breech cloths, act as ushers.

We called attention a long time ago to the utter absurdity of these space-filling gems of freakish and frenzied imagination. Isn't it about time to quit?

Any young man or woman can dream a volume full of this frenzy stuff. All of which is as nothing compared with a few usable and ingenious suggestions originated from a showman's experience, contact and practical viewpoint.

Sane Advice Well Expressed

FROM a recent editorial in the Chattanooga Times we quote the following sane advice on a subject of more than vital interest to theatre managers. Under the heading "Movies on Sunday" the editorial writer says:

"A practical suggestion is made by a lawyer of high standing in connection with the Sunday question and the moving picture shows that should appeal to the management of such shows. Without attempting an analysis of the statutes and decisions applicable, or claimed to be applicable, it is well recognized that indictments cannot be sustained except upon proof that the operation of these shows is a nuisance. In each case this question will turn upon the character of the particular picture show, with special reference to its exhibition on Sunday. In proportion as the nature of the exhibition is out of harmony with the generally accepted character of the day, it vexes, annoys, irritates—that is, it becomes a nuisance. A discordant element introduced into a generally accepted and approved system is a nuisance.

"Now applying this to the moving picture shows, if the managers would see to it that the character of the pictures shown on Sunday is consistent with the general purposes and meaning of the day, the whole difficulty would be met. There would be no possible basis for the contention that the exhibition constitutes a nuisance. Just here has been the trouble. The attorney quoted is not in sympathy with "blue laws," nor does he favor efforts to make people good by law at all, beyond protection of the rights of others. He agrees with Stevenson, as with the most of us, that our duty here is to make ourselves good and other people happy, if we may—but if the signs are any true indication of the show, some of the pictures have been of the nuisance class, not only for Sunday, but any day in the week.

"The suggestion, therefore, is, and the picture show managers will do well to heed it, that the pictures for Sunday be selected with special reference to the day."

Dealing in Personalities

As Lieut. Jim Anderson would say, "It's a long week that has no sleep."

This fillum game may be just one darn convention after another, but what are you going to do when it's just one darn convention and another.

Something tells us, in our present befuddled state, that we could achieve a double purpose by heading this week's page "Dealing in Conventionalities."

Beg your pardon, Mr. Reader. Perhaps there are some of you who don't know yet what we are talking about. Well the news is this: First National held a convention this week at the Hotel Astor. And Select held a convention at the Astor Hotel.

And—perhaps it was out of deference to Lewis J.—there wasn't a time-clock nor an alarm clock within forty miles.

Just as we write these lines we hear a description of the thousand dollar watch which Lewis J. Selznick presented to Arthur Kane at the close of the Select sessions. Platinum and diamonds—a beauty!

The clans began to gather on Sunday, and by eleven o'clock on Monday the Astor lobby was so packed with film men that you could have booked a thousand days or bought a thousand pictures within a hundred yard radius.

We arrived just in time to hear someone say, "The surface hasn't been scratched." Before we could back out the door we were reassured with the information that the speaker was "Loot." Jim Anderson and his subject Australia—not the film industry.

"Loot" Anderson, by the way, won the week's individual popularity prize. Jovial, witty, and a globe-trotter—he's welcome at any convention we ever hold.

For our next stop on the program Percy Wells, of North Carolina, grabbed our elbow to take us in and hear a story the bartender just told him.

Then we journeyed upstairs to a First National luncheon. The story from then on seems to our recollection to be a succession of First National feeds interspersed with Select theatre parties.

Listening to Boyd Cunningham of Washington, Harry Weiss of Chicago and Jack Brainard of Oklahoma City at the luncheon we learned that C. L. Yearsley had made considerable hit at the morning session with a speech on the idea of selling advertising service just as hard as the picture was sold.

All in all, we never heard a publicity department receive the boosting from the roadmen that Yearsley and Hudson were handed during the week.

Met Watterson Rothacker after the luncheon and heard that the "Daddy Long-Legs" negative would reach the laboratory next week. Also that "Mary Regan," the next Anita Stewart, would make them all sit up and take notice. "The best picture First National has had yet," said Watterson.

Gosh, that's saying a mouthful.

From C. R. Beacham of Atlanta we heard the details of a wonderful birthday party recently given in that town by our old friend Bill Oldknow. Some party. Write for details.

Harry Sherman stood in the lobby Tuesday noon. "Did you put that deal over?" asked A. H. Blank. "Over for a quarter of a million," said Harry. "Throw the piker out," chirped up M. L. Finkelstein.

Speaking of Harry Sherman, we wouldn't be surprised to find the next few days bring news that H. Pathe Lehrman's comedies will be handled through First National.

And speaking of comedies, we are informed that Sid Chaplin slipped quietly into town during the week. Stopping at the Claridge, say the rumorists. Much mystery.

Lewis J. Selznick has signed Tamar Lane, former Boston newspaper man—and clever writer—for special studio work.

We also heard during the week that Lewis J. has a brand new star—from the musical comedy stage—whom he will spring very soon.

Met Arthur James on Tuesday and learned that the "Red Lantern" print will reach New York Friday. Wish Arthur could have heard some of the opinions of Nazimova's booking power that we overheard from friendly rivals.

Willard Patterson of Atlanta's Criterion heard so much about the sales managers, sales promoters, sales pushers and sales whatnots in attendance that he started a bell-boy paging for a "Contract Reducer."

Don't know whether the convention had anything to do with it, but we learn on Thursday that Earl Hammons is preparing to sail for Europe. Also that James Quirk and Julian Johnson of Photoplay are seeking passports so that they may go on the same liner.

Harry Scott, First National's Detroit manager, spent some years with the Ringling shows. And has a great list of stories as a result.

Bill Griffith Keefe blew into town on Wednesday with the information that he had been to London and Paris and a regular "chappie" hat to prove it.

What a ruction was created on the film row when the news came that Nell Shipman is to inherit two million dollars!

A. H. Blank of Omaha is seeking capital to star Harry Reichenbach in "King Lear."

Bill Rudolph was around the neighborhood "all het up" over the New York opening of "The Unpardonable Sin" next week.

Charles Schwerin—likeable chap—has bought the Southern territory.

Bert Ennis has returned from Washington after handling the opening of "Virtuous Men." Saw A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin lunching Wednesday and meeting all comers with a smile. Reports must have been good.

Mrs. Clement Mason, buying films for Australia, is stopping at the Astor.

Even a convention couldn't make Harry Schwalbe more talkative than usual—and that's not at all. And J. D. Williams was so flabbergasted when the exchange managers handed him a cup that he hasn't caught his breath yet.

Some jealous rival started the report that the motto of the week was "Frisk 'em where you find 'em and leave 'em where you frisk 'em."

Other news stories the week brought told of the departure of Terry Ramsaye from the Rialto and the appointment of Denis J. Sullivan as general manager of Kinograms.

Arthur Levey expects to sail for England on April 28th.

New Stars and Executives for Selznick

Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein Join Olive Thomas—Sam E. Morris, New Select General Manager, and Charles Rogers, Director of Sales—Harry Rapf with Selznick Forces

IMPORTANT announcements flew thick and fast during the course of the convention of Select Branch Managers and Home Office officials held this week at the Hotel Astor, and sharing the attention of film men with the First National gathering.

The Selznick Pictures Corporation and Select divided the honors in making announcements. The producing organization brought its roster of stars up to include Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein, then added to these names the appointment of Harry Rapf, the prominent independent producer, as General Manager of the Selznick Studios.

Select's news of the week included the appointment of Sam E. Morris as General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation, and Charles Rogers to a newly created post—Director of Sales.

KANE LEAVES SELECT

Expects to Announce New Plans Shortly

ARTHUR S. KANE, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation since its formation in 1917, announced this week that he is leaving that organization, and that his future plans will be made known within the near future.

His resignation, although decided upon a week before it was announced, was made public at the Select conferences of branch managers in New York, April 22. As his closing duties, Mr. Kane conducted the conferences of managers April 21, 22 and 23.

J. S. Woody, whose resignation from Select was announced at the same time as Mr. Kane's withdrawal, intends taking a vacation for a few weeks before announcing his future plans. He was general sales manager of Select.

Week of "Business and Pleasure"

The members of the Selznick organization spent a week mainly devoted to hard work in formulating plans for the future of the organization now owned solely by Lewis J. Selznick, but also a week with its share of gayety.

The managers began arriving on Sunday and by Monday morning all were on hand for sessions in the morning and afteroon at the Home Office. In the evening the managers attended "Three Wise Fools," later journeying to Reisenweber's for the midnight show, there they were joined by Olive Thomas and Eugene O'Brien, in addition to prominent exhibitors and trade paper representatives who had accepted Mr. Selznick's invitation.

Those in the party included the following Select Branch Managers, Henry Siegel, New York; M. Milder, Philadelphia; Charles R. Rogers, Boston; S. S. Wevster, Buffalo; V. P. Whitaker, Washington; Leo F. Levison, Pittsburg; Sam E. Morris, Cleveland; Harry H. Hicks, Cincinnati; James O. Kent, Detroit; Fred C. Aiken, Chicago; J. C. Ragland, St. Louis; C. W. Taylor, Omaha; A. H. McLaughlin, Kansas City; H. A. Rathner, Minneapolis; T. O. Tuttle, Atlanta; H. G. Till, New Orleans; C. C. Ezell, Dallas; H. E. Lotz, Los Angeles; H. L. Knappen, San Francisco and Albert W. Eden, Seattle.

The others were Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Harry Rapf, Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, M. L. Finklestein of St. Paul and Minneapolis, Asst. Branch Manager Bedell of Chicago, and Mrs. Bedell, Phil Selznick, Cleveland salesman; D. J. Selznick, Asst. Branch Manager of Boston; Miss Edith Koch, private secretary to Lewis J. Selznick; Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pictures; David Selznick, Secretary of Selznick Pictures, and Howard Selznick.

Tuesday's business session of the convention convened in the College Room at the Hotel Astor at 10 a. m., President Lewis J. Selznick, presiding. In addition to the Branch Managers the meeting was attended by Joe Unger, General Manager of Select's Canadian Branches, Mr. O'Laughlin of Select's Montreal Branch, Phil Selznick of Cleveland, Dave Selznick of Boston, Asst. Branch Manager Bedell of Chicago, Morris Safier of Boston, Asst. General Manager J. J. Rotchford, Purchasing Agent C. C. Ryan, Walter J. Porges, J. A. Derham, B. L. Faralla, G. M. Sharrard, Treasurer Morris Kohn, General Manager Arthur S. Kane, Lester Adler and Publicity Manager Vivian M. Moses.

Tuesday evening the party saw "Tumble In" at the Selwyn Theatre, and later adjourned to the Century Grove.

"Promotions from the Ranks"

Following the news of Arthur Kane's resignation as general manager to embark on business ventures of his own, Mr. Selznick announced the appointments of Messrs. Morris and Rogers at one of the Tuesday sessions. With the appointments came a declaration from Mr. Selznick that the selection of the new officers was in line with a policy of "promotion on merit from the ranks of the organization" that would continue to rule in the future.

Mr. Morris has long been associated with the Selznick enterprises. Starting as an exhibitor in Cleveland he entered the World Film Corporation office in that city and soon worked his way to local manager while Mr. Selznick was vice-president and general manager of the national organization. When Mr. Selznick founded his own company he took Sam E. Morris with him as treasurer, later giving him also the duties of general manager. With the organization of Select Mr. Morris became East Central General Manager, in charge of the important mid-west territory.

Charles E. Rogers, the new Director of Sales, joined the Select organization when it was formed in 1917, becoming Buffalo manager. Leaving general sales work to enter the picture field Mr. Rogers started as an exhibitor with the Eastern Star Theatre in Buffalo, later embarking on distribution when he bought the New York rights to "Three Weeks."

Wednesday's session brought a discussion of salesmanship, with President Selznick and General Manager Arthur Kane on the firing line. In the evening another theatre party followed, ending with a trip to the Ziegfield Frolic.

On Thursday afternoon, following the three days of business and festivities in New York, the entire party will board two private cars at the Grand General Station and make a flying trip to Providence, where they will attend a big ball at the First Providence Armory for the benefit of the Fatherless Children of France Fund. Olive Thomas, who will be the honorary patroness of the ball, will be officially received by R. Livingstone Beeckman, Governor of Rhode Island.

Harry Rapf, the new general manager of Selznick Studios, has come to the front rapidly as an independent producer in the past year, particularly with such successes as "Wanted for Murder," "Sins of the Children," and "The Great Love." Mr. Rapf was prominent for twenty years as a theatrical producer and is still actively connected with the Keith vaudeville enterprises.

Elaine Hammerstein is the daughter of Arthur Hammerstein and grand-daughter of the famous Oscar Hammerstein. Her sucessful stage career has been followed in recent years by appearances on the screen in such productions as "The Accidental Honeymoon," "The Argyle Case," "The Co-Respondent," and "Wanted for Murder."

Eugene O'Brien, popular stage actor, has achieved unusual popularity on the screen where he has been seen particularly during the past year as leading man with Norma Talmadge.

Owing to the amount of business which will be discussed and the extensiveness of Mr. Selznick's plans, it is probable that an extra session of the convention will be held when the party returns to New York on Friday.

Mr. Selznick intends to outline a vigorous campaign. The acquisition of Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein as Selznick stars, and the distribution of their productions through Select, will be followed soon by announcements of unusual publicity plans.

Pictures Aid the Victory Loan

Industry Comes to Fore as in Previous Drives and Helps Put it Over — Advertisers Offer Full Services

THE motion picture, and the motion picture industry, was on hand April 21 to help the government start its Victory Bond drive, the fifth of the Liberty Loan series. As in the past, the various producers are providing both reels and stars to help the good work along, and the industry is fully living up to its well-known reputation as one of the most valuable aids the government has.

In line with the activities of the industry in behalf of the Victory Liberty Loan, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their last meeting voted their full cooperation and have tendered to Rear Admiral T. J. Cowie of the Navy Victory Loan Committee the services of fifteen motion picture stars to assist in sending the Navy quota of the Victory Loan sbscriptions "over the top."

Producers at a meeting held in the parlors of the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, April 16, pledged Chairman D. W. Griffith their studios would be one hundred per cent in the Fifth Victory Liberty Loan. The meeting was called by Mr. Griffith for the purpose of organizing each of the studios for the Victory drive, and at this time studio organization was perfected.

The Southern California Liberty Loan Committee are depending upon people of the film industry to play the most important part in the campaign. The quota for the motion picture industry to purchase is $1,250,000, and it is expected that motion picture people shall be instrumental in selling fully twice this amount at public meetings where film people will preside. Four series of meetings will be conducted. In Pershing Square, Los Angeles, meetings will be held nightly, and on each of the Saturday afternoons of the three weeks' campaign. At each meeting a different studio is in charge, and the selling program is conducted by the stars and studio executives. Precinct meetings are held nightly in the city of Los Angeles and other meetings will be held in the smaller cities in and about Los Angeles. A squadron of five airplanes will fly to the larger cities of Southern California, and hold meetings each evening in the important towns. At these three series of meetings, motion picture players will be the principal speakers. Carl Jessen of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the manager of the motion picture entertainment for the Victory Loan.

Motion picture and opera "fans" were given a real treat Monday noon when the Victory Liberty Loan drive opened in front of the Aeolian building on Forty-second street near Fifth avenue. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Aeolian Company co-operated in the affair and strange to say, all the screen stars who were announced in the newspapers during the preceding few days actually appeared —and more. The big "show" was scheduled to begin at twelve and at eleven Bryant Park on the Forty-second street side was filled with "fans" who arrived early so to make sure they would see their favorites.

As the American flag which covered the window was drawn aside Ernest Truex, Louise Huff, Dorothy Dalton, John Emerson, Anita Loos and Frances Marion began to produce a scene from "Oh, You Women," a new Paramount picture.

"Who'll take the first bond?" asked Billie Burke, of the crowd of 50,000 that assembled at the steps at the south of the Treasury at Washington to attend the opening ceremonies of the Capital's Victory Liberty Loan drive.

Admiral Sims, who commanded the American fleet in European waters during the war, was among those present. People fought to go forward, but the admiral was on the job and reached Miss Burke before anybody else could. "I will," he cried. And he did. Admiral Sims, it will be recalled, was asked when America declared war when he could have the Navy ready for action. "It's ready now," he said. And it was.

Nobody minded playing second fiddle to the admiral, and for a long time afterward the Paramount star was busy selling bonds.

At the personal request of Frank R. Wilson, in charge of publicity for the Victory Loan, Miss Burke, the Paramount star, agreed to open the drive at Washington.

Griffith's Representative Nails Chicago Report

Arthur Ryan, personal representative of D. W. Griffith, sent a most emphatic denial to all the Chicago newspapers, taking exception to statements made by the censor chairman.

Among other things Mr. Ryan stated that "the false report emanating from Chicago from an interview given out by Judge Hurley, chairman of the Chicago Censor Committee, and published on March 28th there, in which he stated that the committee had won me over to them and hoped to do the same with William A. Brady and other members of the New York representation of the motion picture industry in America at a public meeting held in the Aldermanic Chamber of the City Hall that same afternoon.

"I herewith most emphatically deny the statement. Appearing before the committee a week previously I stated that I was 'unalterably opposed to censorship of any kind,' and during three hours of catechizing—some of it not very pleasant—I maintained that censorship was the weapon of the dark ages—known as intolerance—was a destructive force wherever used, and pointed to Russia and the Central Empires as most vividly vital examples of what intolerance had done to these great nations."

Loan Committee Honors Cleveland Theatres

The motion picture industry of Cleveland was honored by a luncheon given at the Winton Hotel by the local committee of the Liberty Loan, in appreciation of the services rendered by the members of the industry. Over one hundrd guests were present, representing exchanges, and exhibitors, among them Marcus Loew and Nathan Asher.

The Liberty Loan Committee is especially pleased with the manner in which the Victory Films are being handled by the exchanges and generally shown by the exhibitors. Forty prints have been allotted to the Northern Ohio district, and every one of these prints is booked solid for the duration of the campaign. Exchanges are contributing their time toward arranging the booking, and are incurring all expense entailed for inspection of the film. W. E. Lusk, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio, is chairman of the booking committee.

H. J. Terry Heads Bartola Sales Force

It is announced by the Bartola Musical Instrument Co. that they have appointed H. J. Terry as general sales agent for their instrument with offices at 312 and 313 Mallers Bldg., Chicago.

Mr. Terry was formerly connected with the Vitagraph Co. as manager of the Milwaukee office, is a well-known and popular man with the exhibitors of the country, and a man of great musical ability which fits him particularly well for this important appointment.

Neilan and Ray sign with First National

New York Convention Brings News That Director Will Start on Two-Year Contract, While Star Will Join at Completion of Paramount Contract—Harmony and Enthusiasm Rule Meeting

WITH over twenty-five of the country's leading theatre owners and an equal number of exchange managers in attendance, the First National's annual convention held at the Hotel Astor this week more than lived up to every expectation. The enthusiasm shown by both theatre men and sales managers over the organization's prospects and the harmony displayed by the franchise holders were the outstanding points in a week of glory.

The franchise holders re-elected the organization's entire Board of Directors, with the exception of Walter Hays of New York, who has stepped aside for Ralph Clark of the New York office. Completion of contracts with Marshal Neilan for a minimum of eight special productions in the next two years was announced, while the news also broke that Charles Ray would produce for First National after his present Ince-Paramount contract for eight pictures was concluded.

The Old Officers Reelected

The guests of the organization who were given "the freedom of the Astor" pronounced the week one of unalloyed fun, but the members and managers put in many an hour of toil discussing sales problems and future production plans.

The fact that harmony was to be the keynote was sounded on Monday when the first meeting of the franchise holders was followed by the news of the practically complete reelection of the officers and Board of Directors. Robert Lieber will continue as president, Harry Schwalbe as secretary and treasurer, and James D. Williams as manager. The Board of Directors now stands: E. H. Hulsey, of Texas; T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles; J. G. Von Herberg, of Seattle; Aaron Jones, of Chicago; R. H. Clarke, of New York; and Messrs. Lieber and Schwalbe.

Morning, afternoon, and even evening sessions were the rule throughout the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday sessions. An important topic of discussion was the "open market" booking of each picture on its merits and the consequent handling of only big pictures as opposed to the gathering in of a large quantity of product. The exchange managers went emphatically on record in favor of the "fewer pictures" policy, with each sold on its merits, rather than the pushing of a large quantity of releases with the temptation to use the specials as clubs.

One important result of the manager's meeting was the formation of a permanent organization to be known as the First National Sales Club. The managers then unanimously elected J. D. Williams as president of the Sales Club, and then broke the news to him by presenting a silver loving cup standing three feet high.

Harry Weiss, of the First National Chicago office, was chosen Secretary of the Sales Club, with C. L. Yearsely named publication manager in charge of a house organ which the association will publish for the interchange of ideas.

Scattered in with the closed sessions of the two working branches of the organization were numerous luncheons and dinners at which the trade paper representatives and other film men were present.

The assault on Mrs. Astor's cooking started Monday with a "get-together" luncheon at which the exchange managers were hosts. It was then that the result of the franchise holders' election and the acquisition of Marshal Neilan was announced, and the response from the managers was enthusiastic. Lieut. Jim Williams, manager of the organization's Richmond office, and chairman of the manager's meetings, presided as toastmaster.

Monday evening, C. L. Yearsley, publicity and advertising director for First National, was host at a dinner that took the honors of the week. It started at six-thirty and continued without a dull moment until after the midnight hour. The list of speakers would include all present, and that means the managers plus the trade paper representatives.

Robert Lieber, president of the organization, stole away from the franchise holders' business session long enough to say a few words of appreciation to the managers. Speaking with obvious sincerity, he impressed on the sales organization the pride which the members felt in their exchange representatives. M. L. Finkelstein, of Ruben and Finkelstein, Minneapolis; F. A. Fischer, of the Jensen and Von Herberg interests; Louis Mayer, Harry and Abe Warner, Harry Musgrove, of Australia; Willard Patterson, of Atlanta; Frank Ferrandini, of Richmond, and Attorney Jacobs, were others who spoke in addition to the managers and trade paper representatives.

"Clear to the Top"

Following the luncheon on Tuesday President Lieber opened the managers' afternoon session with a talk on the organization's aims. He summed up the feeling of those present during the three days' gathering in the words:

"Granted that at the outset of this organization's career I saw but two possibilities, either it was to become the biggest in the industry, or it was to fall by the wayside, I am ready to say now that after this week's sessions I am firm and strong in but one opinion—we are going right on to the top."

On Tuesday evening the franchise holders were the hosts at a banquet in the Belvedere Room of the Astor, which was attended by the exchange managers and other invited guests. President Lieber passed the gavel to Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, Ky., who gracefully carried off the toastmaster's honors. Lieut. Jim Anderson, Harry Weiss, of Chicago, and Harry Scott, of Detroit, spoke on behalf of the managers, while Mr. Lieber, Nathan Ascher, and Bill Swanson were among the managers who took the floor.

James D. Williams responded to the presentation of the loving-cup by the Sales Club with words of praise for the conduct of the organization by the Board of Directors and commendation for the employees of the Home Office, in particular, Messrs. Yearsley, Hudson, Grant.

The managers and members continued their business sessions after the banquet and on Wedneday morning. Towards night the managers began to prepare for their return to the field, but the members were still looking forward to more meetings.

Publicity headquarters were maintained during the week in Room 152, with Earl Hudson in charge. Nothing but praise for the efficient handling of the publicity arrangements was heard on all sides.

The franchise holders present covers practically every corner reached by the First National organization, the following names being on the list:

Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville; E. V. Richards, of New Orleans; E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland; A. L. Freedman, of Cleveland; A. C. Barbian, of Akron, Ohio; John Kunksy, of Detroit; E. I. Church, of New Jersey; George N. Trendle, of Detroit; Jacob Fabian, of Paterson; L. D. Beggs, of Canada; J. B. Clark, of Pittsburgh; Tom Moore, of Washington; R. D. Craver, of Charlotte; Frank Ferrandini, of Richmond; H. Brouse, of Winnipeg; O. F. Stapleton, of Ottawa; Fred Dahnken, of San Francisco; F. A. Fischer, of Seattle; M. P. Bewees, of Vancouver; W. H. Swenson, of Salt Lake; Harry T. Nolan, of Denver; Mr. Schuberg, of Winnipeg; M. L. Finkelstein, of Minneapolis; Tom Saxe, of Milwaukee; A. H. Blank, of Omaha; William Sievers, of St. Louis; N. J. Flynn, of Kansas City; Nathan Ascher, of Chicago, and Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis.

The exchange managers present included:

Harry Weiss, of Chicago; Boyd Cunningham, of Washington, D. C.; W. E. Lusk, of Cleveland, O.; C. R. Beacham, of Atlanta, Ga.; James Skirboll, of Pittsburgh; A. C. Seery, of Chicago; L. Bickel, of Chicago; Jack Brainard, of Oklahoma City; H. J. Fitzgerald, of Milwaukee; J. F. Cubberly, of Minneapolis; Harry Scott, of Detroit; Lieut. Jim Anderson, of Richmond; Lee Goldberg, of Louisville; J. H. Von Tilzer, New York; Tom Spry, of Boston; Mr. Faulkner, of New Jersey; W. J. Kentucky Theatres Raise Admission Prices

Low admissions of six and eleven cents, which have been enjoyed by fans in Northern Kentucky cities, are going into the discard. Plans are under way by the managers to raise admission prices to fifteen and twenty-five cents in these cities. In addition, it is proposed to raise prices to 50 and 75 cents and $1 when the film presented warrants the admissions.

The higher cost of film service, increased wages to help, increased cost of advertising and other expenses warrant the move, they assert.

William Fox May Return in May

Winfield Sheehan Expects to Remain Abroad to Arrange for Production in Europe—American Directors to Be Used

WILLIAM FOX will return from Europe the latter part of May, according to a report current in trade circles this week, and is expected to have important announcements to make shortly thereafter respecting the signing of new stars and the elaborated plans of the Fox Film Corporation for the coming season.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, who went to Europe with Mr. Fox, may not return with him. Mr. Sheehan, it is understood, will remain to complete arrangements under way for extended production which it has been announced will constitute an important part of the Fox program for 1919-1920.

According to cabled reports received at the Fox offices in New York, Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan have spent the last ten days or two weeks in Paris, on the battlefields of France, at Rheims and at Verdun. They are now said to have practically completed arrangements for the filming of the series of big productions, announced last week, which will have these historic places as their background.

It is declared to have been decided in connection with these locations just what American directors shall be sent to Europe and what stars will be featured in the various projected productions. These details probably all will be announced at the time of the annual convention of Fox branch managers and the news will be disseminated through them and through the trade press.

Mr. Fox's idea in visiting the European battlefields, it is explained, is to determine their relative suitability as locations. Authors are reported already to be at work on the stories which are to be put onto the screen. Mr. Fox is said to be greatly impressed with the possibilities of the series of productions he has outlined and in cabled messages to his executives in New York emphasizes the opinion that they will have a greater and decidedly more personal appeal to the average motion picture patron than any productions released in the history of the Fox organization.

"It is not difficult to get the point of view of Mr. Fox," says a statement issued this week from the local offices. "More than 2,000,000 citizens of this country were in the army sent to France. These men are coming back rapidly and being discharged. There is no subject of greater interest among the relatives and friends of these men than the things their heroes did and saw while abroad. From the pictures Mr. Fox intends to make, it will be a simple matter for these veterans of the service to point out to interested persons locations with which they are thoroughly familiar as a consequence of war.

"One easily can imagine the enthusiasm and interest that will result from showing pictures of this sort. It will be the common experience of exhibitors to hear men exclaim: 'Look! Look! See that hill there! That's where our regiment was the night we opened up on the Germans! Say, that's a good picture—just as you see it from where the Americans started!'

"But of course all of these interest-generating phases of the new Fox productions will be only background—settings. The stories themselves will be thoroughly modern, up-to-the-minute themes—in no sense war pictures—the work of specially engaged authors who are competent to develop new ideas and to put a strong human interest appeal into their work."

Several of these authors, it is reported, already are writing scenarios—in fact, according to the Fox announcement, accompanied Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan on their tour of inspection of French battlefields and discussed details of the stories for which the battlefields are to furnish the backgrounds.

"All of which," according to Fox officials, "carries out the purpose expressed by Mr. Fox as being that for which he was going to Europe."

Samuel Goldwyn Returns from Culver City

Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, returned to the executive offices in New York about May 3 from an extended stay at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California.

News from the Goldwyn chief executive indicates that no effort will be spared to acquire the finest literary material available suitable for picture production for the coming season.

After a long period of observation of the Goldwyn studios in operation and a study of the ever changing development of the art of the motion picture, it is stated that Mr. Goldwyn brings with him a definite idea of the scope and direction of the company's plans for the coming season, which are forecast as being on a more significant and important basis than anything before disclosed by producers.

S-L Pictures Enlarges Its Headquarters

It is reported that owing to the increased activities in connection with the production of their initial feature, "Virtuous Men," Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Dubin have found it necessary to enlarge the quarters which they have occupied for some time.

Sawyer and Lubin originally took a suite of four offices in the Longacre Building during their distribution of "The Warrior," one of the biggest State right attractions ever offered to buyers. Following the organization of S-L Pictures for the purpose of producing a series of Ralph Ince Film Attractions, the organization has rapidly expanded.

To this end the entire half of the eleventh floor of the Longacre Building has been taken over by S-L Pictures and completely redecorated and remodeled.

National Association Flays Philadelphians

Certain Philadelphians who made absurd statements anent the motion picture industry on Sunday opening of theatres were quickly taken to task by a comprehensive statement sent out from the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to all Pennsylvania newspapers.

Rev. Percy Shelby, an officer of the Philadelphia Sabbath Observance Association, had said:

"The films granted 'four-minute' speakers, and did much, but they were well paid for their work, and they only did it for pay. They were making millions by the war in their six days of showing, but they weren't satisfied and wanted the other day. We had only one, the Sabbath, and they took that."

The National Association replied: "Throughout the last few years of intense turmoil, strife and war, of great suffering and grief, no class or profession could point with greater pride to their accomplishments than the men and women of the theatre and motion picture. Their services were on call for volunteer and charitable performances at all times.

"The suggestion and charge made by the Rev. Mr. Shelby that their work in behalf of our country was done for profit and for pay is not only unjust and unkind, but it is false, and the reverend sir when he made that statement knew it to be such."

Goldwyn Pictures Moves Its Main Offices

The main offices of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in New York moved Saturday, April 26th, from 16 East Forty-second street, to the eighth floor of the Winfield Building at 469 Fifth avenue.

Within the two and one-half years of its existence it has been necessary to more than double the floor space required for the transaction of its business.

At 16 East Forty-second street only five thousand square feet were occupied by this growing concern and at the new quarters something more than ten thousand square feet will be occupied.

The Winfield Building, of course, will only be used for the main offices. The Foreign and Exchange offices of Goldwyn, comprising over seven thousand square feet, will continue to be located at 509 Fifth avenue, and the warehouse at Fourteenth street, ten thousand square feet in area, will remain in the same place.

Gross Buys Theatre

Frank Gross, former owner of the Clark National theatre of Cleveland, and who has been inactive in the film business since he sold the house about six months ago, has purchased the Crown theatre, East 105th street and Kempton avenue, from Louis Wilke, and promises a high class feature policy.

Mr. Wilke, who has been an exhibitor in Cleveland for many years, is retiring from the business altogether.

Exhibitors Score Double Victory in New York

THE close of last week brought a double victory to the exhibitors of New York State when Saturday saw the signing of the Sunday Option Bill by Governor Smith, and also the swan song of legislation calling for the establishment of a censorship board. The Slacer Bill, calling for censorship, after passing the Assembly, went to its death in the Senate on Friday—being buried in committee.

On Wednesday Governor Smith had given a hearing to the spokesmen of both sides on the bill allowing Sunday pictures to be run legally in cities where they are now showing, while other communities may decide on the question through their City Councils or other governing bodies. In signing the bill on Saturday Governor Smith declared, "this legislation should not be viewed as forcing Sunday motion pictures on the community. It merely places the question up to the citizens of each community to be decided as the majority desires. In addition it clears up an impossible situation through the fact that courts in different parts of the state have ruled in opposing language on the statute as it now stands from the old Blue Law days."

With the double victory won, MOTION PICTURE NEWS wishes to go on record now in voicing the gratitude of the industry to the man and the men responsible for the glorious outcome. To Sydney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors League, and his able assistants, Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly must be given the credit for a victory that has been both well won and cleanly won. Even legislators who were opponents of the motion picture interests during the session were moved to congratulate President Cohen on the manner in which the industry's campaign had been handled.

Sydney Cohen, Who Wins Credit for the Sunday Victory

These men did not merely labor for two or three weeks while the legislature was in session and the bills at the critical point. Their work started way back in October, when the primaries were on and has continued unceasingly until the present moment. Their labors were unselfish and devoid of publicity-seeking.

Back of the three untiring leaders stood a one hundred per cent exhibitor organization, divided into Assembly and Senatorial district units and responding without hesitation to every request from the leaders. Sharing with Messrs. Cohen, Berman and O'Reilly in the credit for the successful campaign were numerous energetic up-state leaders including, Harold Franklin, of Buffalo; Jules Michaels, of Buffalo; W. H. Linton, of Utica; Louis Buettner, of Cohoes; Irving Salyerds, of Rochester; and such local workers as Al Hamilton, of Yonkers; and Samuel Sheer, of Long Island.

That the exhibitors are not preparing to rest on their laurels but are ready for the battles to come, may be seen in the following quotation from a telegram telling of the defeat of the censorship bill: "The exhibitors of New York." "The entire strength of our state-wide organization will now concentrate to open the remainder of the state now closed on Sunday and to prepare to prevent further antagonistic legislation. We know we can rely upon your cooperation. —Sidney S. Cohen."

Many Kentucky Cities Face Heavy Tax

Facing the loss of $70,000 revenue when the United States goes dry July 1, the Covington (Kentucky) City Council has passed an ordinance taxing motion picture shows from $200 to $600 yearly, according to seating capacity, and prices of admission charged. This tax becomes effective May 1, and all who do not pay will find themselves in the Covington Police Court bright and early June 1.

Newport, Ky., facing the same issue, also has adopted a sliding scale of occupational tax, as follows: Where admissions of five and ten cents are charged, $200 tax each year; eleven to twenty cent admission, $400 a year, and over twenty cents, $600 yearly.

Ohio Bill to Increase Salaries of Censors

While many Ohio movie fans sniff at the news and say that it is a waste of money, the Senate of that State has just passed a bill providing for an increase of salaries for members of the Ohio Board of Censorship from $1,500 to $2,250 a year.

It is expected that there will be a great scramble any time that any censor can be pried loose from the job, as the salary to be provided will make it soft picking for some of the faithful.

Another bill passed by the Ohio Senate forbids the exhibition, for advertising purposes, of any part of a film that has been put under the ban by the Ohio censors.

Building of Theatres Continues

San Antonio to Get Largest Motion Picture House in Texas—St. Paul and Minneapolis Slated for New Ones

THE building of new motion picture theatres goes forward with renewed vigor, and each week brings reports of new and elegant houses planned or under way.

Two theatres which are expected to equal in size and policy the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York and other leading theatres of the country, are shortly to be erected in St. Paul and Minneapolis by the Finkelstein & Ruben Theatrical Enterprises according to M. L. Finkelstein, president of the company and who arrived in New York Monday, April 21 to attend the second annual convention of First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Finkelstein & Ruben now control fifteen of the principal theatres of Minneapolis and St. Paul and with the two new theatres now under consideration completed they will have a chain of motion picture theatres that they believe will rank second to none in the United States.

In Minneapolis the site now occupied by the New Lyric Theatre and fifty-six additional feet on Hennepin avenue have been purchased by the Finkelstein & Ruben interests. The present theatre building is to be razed within a short time and a new exclusive photoplay house seating 3,000 or more persons will be erected on the site. This new theatre will cost approximately $1,000,000.

In St. Paul, the theatrical interests have purchased the six-story steel structure, erected several years ago by the Mannheimer brothers and work of turning this structure into a building and the largest exclusive motion picture theatre between Chicago and the Pacific Coast will also be begun within a few weeks.

Plans have just been completed for erecting in San Antonio, Texas, the largest motion picture theatre in the state of Texas. According to W. J. Lytle, local theatre manager, who will erect the building, it will cost more than $350,000. The site for the theatre, which faces the river between Houston and Travis streets, was recently acquired for $240,000.

Tentative plans for the theatre have been drawn up. The playhouse will have a capacity of 4,000, with the seating arranged so that 2,000 persons can be accommodated on the lower floor, 1,500 on the first balcony and 500 on the second balcony. It will rank fourth in size to any combination photoplay and vaudeville house in the United States.

The theatre will be fireproof and every precaution to safeguard the patrons will be taken by the management. It is proposed to have carpeted inclines to take the place of stairs between the floors.

Plans were filed this week with the department of buildings by James S. Savage in Buffalo, N. Y., for a new fireproof motion picture theatre at 26-28 Triangle street. The cost of the structure will be $60,000 and work will begin at once.

Exhibitors Join the Booking Discussion

C. W. Midgley Tells of Workings of United Theatre Owners' Association of San Francisco, and M. Kashin of New York, Expresses Views

TWO angles on the exhibitor's viewpoint were this week added to the discussion on booking methods and film distribution started by William A. Johnston's recent editorials.

C. W. Midgley, secretary of the United Theatres' Association, San Francisco, obliges with an interesting amount of the workings and aims of that organization of exhibitors which now numbers over seventy Northern California and Nevada houses. On the point of cooperative booking by the United members, Mr. Midgley contents himself with a significant hint. The other letter contributed to the discussion is from M. Kashin, the New York theatre manager.

SOL LESSER NEXT!

COULD any man in the film game know more about the open market and picture distribution than Sol Lesser, the California wizard?

Sol Lesser is next in the discussion started by William A. Johnston's recent editorials on the general subject of cooperative booking, the open market, and film distribution.

Sol was backed into a corner during the week and made to promise that he would sit down and write his views and experience in time to add a valuable chapter to the discussion in next week's issue of Motion Picture News.

Watch for it. We know you won't be disappointed — even though we can't promise to illustrate it with pictures of the Sennett diving beauties who are touring the country for Sol.

Exhibitor Midgley's Letter

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Have just finished reading your article "Looking for Advice" and we say "yes" to everything you propose, only we have gone you one better. We have already taken the gloves off. We are answering your questions with action.

In looking back over the past history of this wonderful industry, we find that many of the really important incidents connected with the development of the business, were, you might say, conceived in sight of the glorious Golden Gate. Many of us recall that the ideas and plans of one of our present big producing and distributing concerns were worked out in a little office not many blocks from here, by a gentleman whom we all know and to whom we must all give much credit for the wonderful advancement of the industry, so you see, Mr. Johnston, that we, living in this creative atmosphere and surrounded by our beautiful theatres, were naturally anticipating these most vital questions of which you are writing; but taking the questions seriously, the following is a brief synopsis of what we are doing.

For the past year, a half dozen of we exhibitors who make our headquarters in and around San Francisco, have been thinking, talking, anticipating and planning for just such conditions as are developing in the industry today. With our immense investments in theatres which compelled our protection, we realized that a systematic plan of education of the exhibitor was necessary for the future success of the industry, such as encouraging better presentation, better advertising and exploiting methods, longer runs and a system of keeping the so-called little fellow, who, by the way, is the backbone of the business, posted about what is happening in this rapidly changing business; also to especially educate each other to ask the public to pay what our shows are worth that we may have more money with which to pay for the better productions which we seriously need and are demanding of the manufacturer; and of more importance than all, to educate ourselves to be business men that our dealings with the manufacturers and distributors shall command respect and that we may demand the same from them to the point where we can all help in placing this great industry on the high plane to which it belongs.

After formulating our plans, we secured offices right in the heart of the exchange center, not a hole in the wall, mind you, but rather, offices that any business concern would be proud of. We have our own projection room, fitted up with a hundred or more opera chairs and our own operator is in charge of same. We have our own camera men, film developing department and slide and sign card department. We also have our own legal department. We maintain a stenographic department and will serve the out of town member with constant information. We mention these matters to show you that we have gone about the thing in a business-like way.

We have used considerable discretion in the selection of our members, only one in each district being admitted, thereby eliminating the danger of petty jealousies that have heretofore disrupted all so-called leagues that have been formed in the past.

We are incorporated with over seventy-five members, each holding one share of stock.

We are enclosing a pamphlet containing copy of our Incorporation Articles and By-Laws. Yes, publish them if you wish, as we want the exhibitor in every film center to follow our lead and we will go a long way in helping them get started.

You ask "Will we use our organization as a booking unit?" Well, that depends on conditions as they develop. At any rate, we are ready for any eventuality, so you see, Mr. Johnston, we have selected our harness, have put it on and believe it will work.

If you like our prescription, push it along.

With kindest regards, we are,
Very truly yours,
UNITED THEATRES ASS'N, INC.,
By C. W. Midgley, Secretary.

From Manager Kashin

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I must take this opportunity of complimenting you for starting this discussion on co-operative booking. It is very timely.

Today, in every department of life, the process of evolution is tending towards co-operative organization.

The allied countries have organized under one command for the furtherance of their ideals; the peoples of Russia have united for the seeking of better living conditions; the laborers of the universe are collectively and unitedly agitating for higher wages; and the biggest attempt at co-operative organization today is the proposed League of Nations; all in all, the very air is impregnated with the ozone of unionism.

The same thing is evident in the American motion picture industry.

It was not so long ago that members of this industry scoffed at any proposal of organization. But things are a little different now. The players have united; the producers are in greater harmony; the exchanges have very definite understandings amongst themselves. But the exhibitor? Probably when we consider the very discordant elements in this branch of the industry, it is not so surprising that so much cut-throat competition exists.

Mr. Hodkinson demonstrated in his recently published letter that the aim of both the exhibitors and the producers is to eliminate the other, or, rather, to gain control of the opposing camp.

The exhibitor has been preyed upon too much. The grumbling is at present being heard. This will very soon develop into an exhibitors' revolution.

Over three years ago in one of your editorials, you said:

"Manufacturers of other kinds of nationally distributed goods are racking their brains today to devise novel and attractive store helps, attention getting devices that will draw customers to their goods. And they have long been at it. The picture maker has a wide-open opportunity to supply the exhibitor with just such theatre help."

How many producers have followed out your suggestion, Mr. Johnston? They have done their utmost to sell the picture to the exhibitor, but not to the ultimate consumer.

The trend of present day labor is towards greater liberty. So will it be with the exhibitor. He is being exploited, but

Thomas Calls for Real Exhibitor Organization

LOOKING forward to the next convention of the organized exhibitors in St. Louis, H. M. Thomas, manager of A. H. Blank's Rialto theatre in Omaha, says, "Let's have a real convention this time." He then goes on to make many pertinent and interesting suggestions as to the sort of things a real convention could do.

There should be interest to all exhibitors in Mr. Thomas' letter, which follows:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Let's have a REGULAR convention in St. Louis this summer. Not simply a squabbling match where one person gets mad because he's not the "whole cheese" and proceeds to filibuster; or another simply wants to get in, because of the standing it will give him with the various producing companies, but a convention made up of honest-to-goodness, regular exhibitors of the caliber of Mr. Schaefer, for instance, who are interested solely in the organization FOR THE GOOD IT WILL BRING TO THE EXHIBITORS IN THE EXHIBITING END OF THE BUSINESS.

Why not eliminate the "politicians" of the previous conventions, and in their places put exhibitors who have nothing in their minds except the advancement and safeguarding of the exhibiting and producing ends of the business, and if these places are filled with exhibitors of standing above reproach, these "politicians" of the days gone by are not going to try and disrupt the organization, BECAUSE THEY WILL KNOW IT WILL DO THEM NO GOOD.

We should have a working national organization, and when we have that, we'll get members, but until that time, we won't, because the exhibitors have joined and rejoined too many times in the past with the best intentions in the world, only to see the organization wrecked by factional strife, to want to join again until they are convinced that a new element has taken hold of the organization to work and fight for the protection of the industry and for no other ulterior means or motives.

Then why not make the convention instructive and constructive, as well as "political"?

Why not invite the Secretary of the National Board of Review to be present and fully explain the working of the Board to the exhibitors, and hear the comments of the various exhibitors as to how the Board's work is taken in various states and communities?

Why not take up the question of state censorship; have views interchanged between various states; let the producers hear of the various remarks made regarding their pictures in the various state fights, and also state their side of the question. Then prepare a committee to demand a hearing before the next National Convention of the Federated Women's Clubs of America, where this censorship agitation started and see if their viewpoint cannot be changed. As long as we pass them by, and act as though we are afraid of them, they are going to pass a resolution at every convention demanding censorship, but when we present a solid front and demand SPECIFIC rather than general cases of bad motion pictures, they are going to back down and part of our battle will be over.

Then why not have a couple of hours or so devoted to papers by the foremost exhibitors of this country as to how they present their pictures, and what they consider model programs, etc., that is as to balancing programs, etc.

Then the same amount of time devoted to the proper exploitation of pictures, various methods of advertising being considered, etc.

Also some time devoted to the proper musical accompaniment of pictures, some time to proper projection, and the like, and every exhibitor join in an "experience" meeting, and the first thing you know you could'nt keep them away from the conventions.

With exhibitors like Mr. Rothapfel, McCormick, Grauman, Roth, and other equally as prominent ones on the program, every exhibitor is bound to learn something of interest and advantage.

There are many other angles that could be reached in the program, but the point I am trying to make is this: Let's have something constructive and worth while out of the convention, and I am simply writing you now calling your attention to the matter in the hope that you will start the agitation going pro and con and see if some real good cannot come of my letter.

Yours truly, H. M. THOMAS.

Theatre Building Continues

Marshalltown, Iowa, is to have a new motion picture theatre to cost $70,000. A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, and J. Jolly Jones, Jr., are the builders.

The Euclid Theatre, Cleveland's newest and most elaborate photoplay house opened its doors to the public on Easter Sunday, at the conclusion of the Liberty Loan parade.

The Euclid Theatre, which has been in the course of construction for the past ten months, is located in the busiest section of down town, on East Ninth street, just north of Euclid avenue. It has an imposing exterior of stone and rug brick, with its main entrance on East Ninth street, and several exits on Chestnut avenue.

For additional theatres proposed and now building, see page 2918 of this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"Australian Business Is Normal"—Lorimore

Alex Lorimore, of Australia, cables MOTION PICTURE NEWS that very few theatres are closed in Australia, and that otherwise business in the motion picture theatres, and generally, is normal.

Sidelights on Open Booking

Another Angle as Seen by Carl Laemmle

President, Universal Film Mfg. Co.

WILL "new" and "bright ideas" ever cease?

Recent issues of trade papers contained an advertisement by a prominent distributing company, which brought out the sensational statement that this one particular company had hit upon a new scheme. A sales policy that would prove the salvation of the exhibitor. The ad conveyed the startling information that a bomb had been placed under time worn policies of other concerns and that this particular company was going to book its pictures on the sane and only sound principle of permitting the exhibitor-customer to buy what he wants with his money.

This statement was startling. It seemed that the same policy had been adopted by so many distributors so long ago that the announcement of this great, new, bright idea was TNT.

We heartily agree with the company that recently announced the adopting of this new policy, that it is the only sane and sound policy. The only difference between this company and Universal is that Universal adopted this policy long, long ago and has never deviated from it, though it might easily have done so. And, Universal is not the only company that has adopted this policy. There are a few distributing organizations that still insist on using the whip on exhibitors; driving them into long term contracts for pictures of which the exhibitor knows little or nothing; which he plays when he can get them, not when he wants them and which he pays for and exploits in a way that increases the despotic power of the distributor and decreases the possibilities of his making the profit he deserves from the fruits of his labors.

The only possible reason any exchange can have for insisting that an exhibitor buy a series of pictures before he has opportunity to see them is that chances are the exhibitor will not buy them after he does see them. Some exchanges will offer a reduction in price to the exhibitor who contracts for a large number of pictures. Why not? The exhibitor cuts down the selling cost of the series a great deal when he signs up for 26 or 52 weeks' service at one time. He is entitled to a sharp reduc-the dissatisfaction is so general that events in the motion picture industry will very soon parallel the incidents in today's economic sphere.

Since it is inevitable that the exhibitor is coming into his own, we might as well start a discussion with the idea in view of determining the proper instrument to be used by the exhibitor. That instrument is co-operative booking.

No one knows better than the exhibitor what the public wants. It should be in his power to dictate the product turned out from the studio.

Now, if this revolution of exhibitors is inevitable, let it not be of the wild, bloody sort, but let it be sensibly organized, with cold business-like men at the head of the movement, and not impassioned ignoramuses. In that case, the result will be equity towards all concerned, not chaos.

Sincerely,
M. KASHIN.

Defies the Censors

Benjamin J. Schwartz of the Victoria theatre in Wilmington, Delaware, is not officially affected by censors, but is so close to Pennsylvania that some of his patrons apparently guide themselves by the Board's decisions.

Mr. Schwartz employed a very effective weapon, it is declared, when he bought a lot of newspaper space and successfully ridiculed the proposed eliminations the Pennsylvania Board had ordered made in subtitles on "The Love Hunger," distributed by Hodkinson.

According to all reports the Victoria was packed to the doors as a result of Mr. Schwartz's campaign.

Many Universal Changes

John W. Krafft, formerly connected with the Indianapolis Star, is the latest addition to the publicity forces in the New York home offices of Universal. He will take charge of the Universal Bulletin, a weekly publicity service, and the exhibitors' press book service.

M. Lowell Cash, also a former Indianapolis newspaper man, succeeds J. L. Johnston in the home office publicity department.

Mr. Johnston recently resigned to take over publicity and advertising work for Finkelstein & Ruben of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Fred E. Baer has been selected to succeed Mr. Cash at the New York Universal exchange.

Watch for Kane

During the afternoon session April 23 of Select's conference of branch managers at the Astor Hotel in New York, Arthur S. Kane, retiring from the organization, was presented with a watch of platinum, encrusted with diamonds.

The gift was presented by the incoming general manager, Sam E. Morris, in the name of President Lewis J. Selznick, Treasurer Morris Kohn, the departmental heads of the home office, and all managers of Select branches.

Censor Bill Proposed in Tennessee

A bill introduced by Senator Rice of Shelby County, Tennessee, on April 17, provides that all moving picture films to be used in this State shall first pass before a board of reviews and receive its O. K. before being shown to the public.

The bill authorizes the Governor to appoint a State board of review to consist of three members, one from each grand division of the State, whose salaries shall be $2,400 each per annum. This board shall investigate every film in the State before it is placed upon the screen, and shall charge a fee of five dollars for each inspection, and may order a film back for a second review if they deem it necessary.

Persons operating moving picture shows who do not conform to the provisions of the act are subject to a fine of from $50 to $100 for the first offence, and for the second offence $500 and thirty days' imprisonment. No film shall be exhibited until it bears the certificate of the board upon it. The board shall have the power to grant special permits for the showing of any film otherwise barred. The fees collected shall be applied to the salaries of the board members, and any excess shall be paid to the State Treasurer.

Cornelius Now Active in Exhibitors Mutual

H. C. Cornelius of Grand Rapids, Mich., vice-president and secretary of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, will hereafter take an active part in the management of affairs in that organization, according to an announcement of William J. Clark, president.

The association of Mr. Cornelius with the active management of Exhibitors Mutual is a result of the rapid development of the company since the first of the year. Business has grown with such tremendous rapidity that Mr. Clark asked Mr. Cornelius to so arrange his business affairs in the west that he could devote most of his time to Exhibitors Mutual and make his headquarters in New York City.

Like Mr. Clark, Mr. Cornelius is a practical exhibitor, the part owner in a string of eight theatres in the city of Grand Rapids, Mich. He has been closely associated in the management of the theatres and thoroughly familiar with the problems of the exhibitor.

Says Chile Pro-Germans Mutilated Film

Representatives of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., in Valparaiso, Chile, assert that a number of pro-Germans damaged a print of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and are suing them.

When the picture was being shown at Santiago recently, a messenger who was carrying the film to a theatre from the exchange was attacked by a number of German sympathizers, considerably bruised by rough handling, and the film which he was carrying, mutilated. One reel of the photoplay was stolen, and the remaining reels cut in many places.

tion in the cost of this service because he is taking a gamble. These same selfish exchanges that try to lash the exhibitor, who keeps them in business, into a contract for a large number of productions usually demand an impossible rental when the exhibitor sees through the thin wall of argument and insists on booking his pictures singly.

Universal has always given the exhibitor the choice of booking what he wants; has always extended the exhibitor the privilege of seeing what he gets, if he desires and of actually seeing that he is helped to exploit the pictures he books, to the best advantage. That IS something new. An exhibitor can book any production released by Jewel or Universal as he desires. Universal urges exhibitors to see its photoplays, because it knows that they are of high standard quality and there are no burnt out "spark plugs" to hide. Because Universal has concentrated on making its pictures better rather than to devise "new" and dynamic sales policies, the fact that "Universal has shown greater improvement in quality than any other concern" is recognized everywhere.

Ellen O'Grady Failed to Appear Before Board

Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner Ellen O'Grady of New York failed to appear at the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., in response to the association's invitation to be present and amplify the statements embodied in her recently published tirade about the alleged immorality of motion pictures.

On motion the association unanimously voiced its appreciation of the work of Harry Reichenbach and N. T. Granlund, who constituted the special committee appointed to handle the matter.

Bert Adler and Joseph L. Kelley were added to the committee which was continued in office and empowered to take care of the publicity which may be necessitated by the situation.

L. C. Wheeler Announces Big Export Deal

A contract was entered into last week between Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., and the Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc., according to an announcement by Mr. L. C. Wheeler, manager of the export department of films for the former concern, which will aggregate many hundreds of thousands of dollars in the course of the year.

"We are buying foreign rights for superior productions," says Mr. Wheeler, "and our chain of distribution circles the globe. It is our desire to issue the very best prints that can possibly be made, and we believe that we have accomplished this end by contracting with the Palisade laboratory to do our work."

Exhibitor Service Bureau

It's Up to You to Get the Very Best

IN his article in this issue, H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto theatre, Omaha, and one of the most progressive showmen in the whole country, refers to the fact that the exploitation matter furnished by producing companies has considerably improved in the last year and a half and gives a considerable share of credit for this to the discussion of the matter that was carried on in these pages by members of the Advisory Board and others.

This was one of the first questions considered by the Board, and you who have been following these pages carefully will remember that the question was exhaustively treated and the various leading exhibitors undertook to point out what they believed to be wrong. As a matter of fact, these men did a great service to the producers and distributors, for every good business man wants to know what is the matter with his product—especially from the people who are using it.

It is to men like Mr. Thomas and other members of the Board that this improvement is largely due, and the Exhibitors Service Bureau appreciates that it has had the opportunity in this way to be of service to exhibitors as a whole.

AND the point that we want to repeat here is that this department is always ready to serve the exhibitors either in a general movement or individual cases. But it goes without saying that unless we know what your troubles are, unless you speak out, we cannot find the remedy.

We believe that one of the biggest causes of the improvement in exploitation matter is that the exhibitors have been stirred to think more of their own advertising. They are trying to do far, far more than they were two years ago, and we haven't the slightest hesitation in saying that exhibitor advertising as a whole has improved a thousand per cent.

And we believe that the credit for this is largely due to those progressive exhibitors who have allowed their ideas to be told in these pages. When we first announced that this department was to be a real forum for the exhibitor and for him alone, most people believed that it was the usual bunk and that the department would be conducted as others—on the basis of boosts and flattery. As soon as it was seen that an honest effort was being made to serve, the response from every section of the country—from the largest exhibitor to the smallest—was wonderful.

In passing let us urge those of you who have not yet recorded their ideas here, learn what they are doing--for the benefit of others—that the efficiency may be raised another big notch.

WE believe that the greatest part of the progress is due to the fact that exhibitors generally were aroused to trying to do more with the material that they had, that the manufacturers saw the evidences of that, and that together with the direct criticisms that were printed from the exhibitors themselves they determined that better work would have to be done.

It is a fact, too, that a couple of years ago a mighty small share of the showmen were trying to do the most they could with the material they had. We admit that the most of the matter supplied was mighty sad stuff, but it is also true that the exhibitor did not make the most possible out of his opportunities. At the time this department was started we made the statement that we did not believe there were fifty exhibitors in the country who were doing the most possible with what they had. And we believe that we were right at that time. But who will make such a statement now?

The change that has come has been little short of amazing.

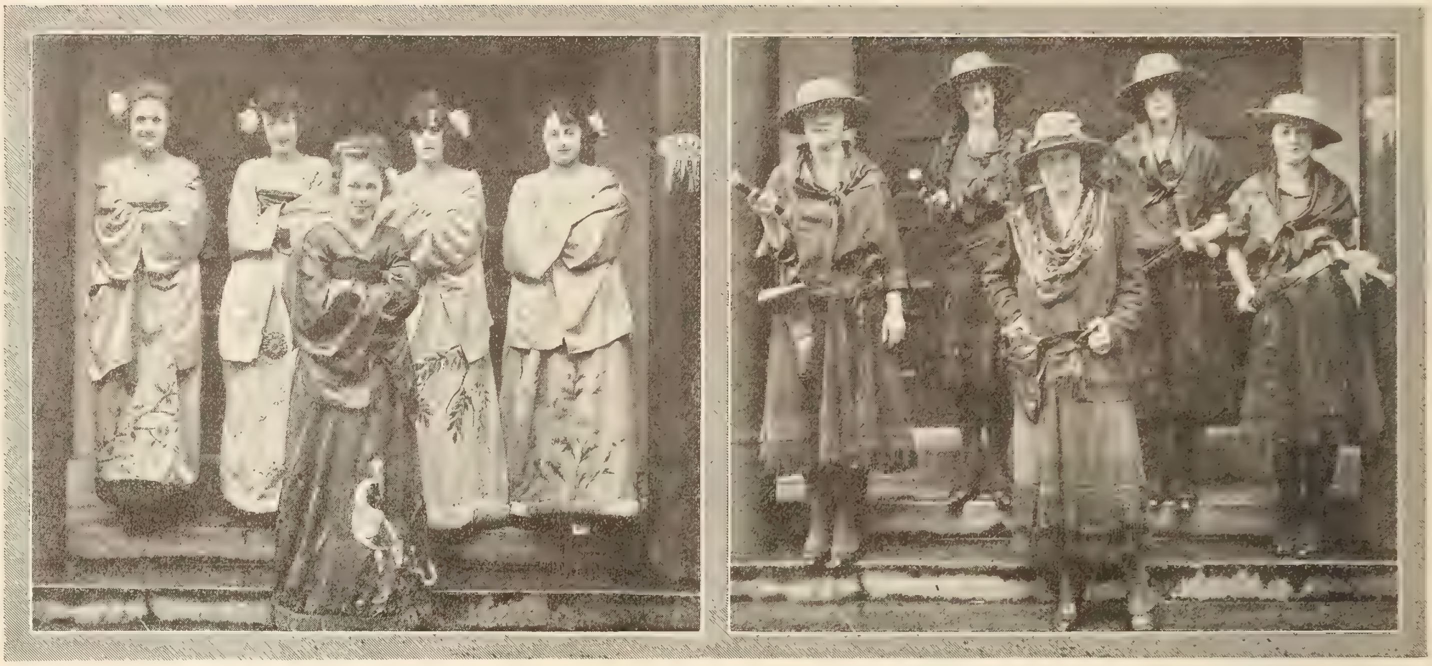
Instead of it being a case of exhibitors who paid real attention to their advertising being few and far between, it is not mighty hard to find any of the fellows who regard their exploitation as merely an incident in their business. Every week there come to us scores of new examples of renewed interest.

WITH the start of these splendid articles from leading advertisers, it is time for those who have not gotten heartily interested in the study of exploitation to begin. Here you are begging the views of the best advertisers of the country. You may not approve all of their ideas—and we are purposely selecting men who use varying policies, regulated by the needs of their theatres and communities.

But you will get ideas here.

And this is one phase of exploitation. We are anxious to record the accomplishment of all the exhibitors of the country.

Let us start in strong.



Portland, Ore., has ever been one of the most progressive cities in the United States in the presentation of motion pictures, several theatres, headed by the Liberty, Majestic and Columbia, devoting special attention to the "atmosphere" garbing of their girl ushers. Frank A. Lacey, manager of J. J. Parker's Majestic, offers more usher costume changes these days than any other manager in the Rose City. For the Hayakawa pictures he has silken Oriental costumes of many colors, while recently for the showing of Tom Moore in "Go West, Young Man," he introduced his girls in typical Western stuff, the head usher dressed as a sheriff and her assistants as deputies.

Vaudeville Circus Acts and "Hoop-La" Units To Pack Detroit Theatre During Holy Week

HOLY WEEK comes but once a year and as a rule its dreaded by every theatre manager because the receipts go down instead of up and the figures on the ledger are in red ink to represent a loss.

But Gus Greening, manager of the Miles, has made Holy week the biggest in point of receipts in his theatre's history and what he has accomplished other house managers can do in this or other weeks that are equally bad.

The proposition came to Mr. Greening's attention when he was offered a circus piccus picture, Billie Rhodes in "Hoop-La." Now the Miles plays vaudeville as well as pictures, but often the pictures are featured over the variety acts and every week the newspapers carry the picture advertising just as they do the vaudeville. In fact the Miles has gone even further by advertising and presenting some first run feature as a "supper show," offering the picture for one performance only between the regular afternoon and night shows and advertising it so successfully that sometimes the house is filled at a time when it would generally be empty.

To get back to "Hoop-La" the circus feature was easily seen. And as circuses are not yet on the road, with a few exceptions, it was an easy matter to have the vaudeville agents book in clowns and circus acts. Then the whole thing was advertised as circus week. Every trolly in town carried a car banner, "This Car to the Circus," with "Miles" in red ink just below.

The newspapers carried a lot of advertising and the picture was handled as a circus act itself. As all the public schools were closed mothers were told to bring their children in the afternoon.

Hoop-La the Circus Girl

WITH Billie Rhodes

SEE A real circus in operation, museum of human and inhuman freaks; a bearded lady who resembles a bolshevik, a human skeleton gorging a swell feed, Billie Rhodes in skin-tight jockey togs, how a bewhiskered lady inhales soup.

SEE OUR BIG CIRCUS AD. ON STAGE PAGE

This was small, but it tied up with another on the drama page

Naturally the theatre was filled all week. In fact there was hardly a moment during the day or evening when there wasn't a line at the box office buying tickets. And at night the throngs were so great hundreds were turned away which made business for other houses.

This display, three inches, two columns, was carried on the motion picture page and then the larger display to which reference is made with the general theatrical advertising. You will note that in this display it says: "Minors Mammoth Shows present Hoop-La, the Circus Girl." Then underneath this in small type is the further sales argument:

> See a regular circus in operation, museum of human and inhuman freaks; a bearded lady who resembles a Bolshevik, a human skeleton gorging a swell feed, Billie Rhodes in skin-tight jockey togs, how a bewhiskered lady inhales soup.

It's a very good idea and it's a pity that there couldn't have been more space used for this display. Four times as much would have gotten a whole lot more people into the theatre, we believe.

Detroit Manager Tests Blondes and Brunettes in Popularity

Manager George E. Guise, newly appointed manager of the Majestic Theatre, in Detroit, who has become well known in the exhibition field for his many novel "stunts," pulled a new one last week. Guise had a strong suspicion that blondes were much more popular with screen followers than brunettes, so he decided to learn definitely. So he put on a contest.

Grace Darmond, a dashing blonde with blue eyes and fair skin, played the first four days of last week in "What Every Woman Wants," the Robertson-Cole sensation which Exhibitors' Mutual is releasing. The last three days, Geraldine Farrar, a very pronounced brunette with jet black hair and black eyes, played the last three days in "Shadows," a Goldwyn production. Mr. Guise watched the receipts closely to see which type proved the most attractive to Detroit movie fans, and he found that on the returns the star of "What Every Woman Wants" was entitled to the honors.

Noted Artist Will Draw Special Universal Advertisements

Mon Randall, noted Mid-Western artist, who was the originator of art titles first introduced by Triangle several years ago, former cartoonist for the Scripps-McRae newspapers and whose numerous, original pen portraits of W. S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Thos. Ince, Dorothy Dalton and other stars have made his work known to several million film followers, has been engaged by Universal to prepare a special series of advertising drawings for Universal Special Attractions and serials. Among the first work Randall has done for Universal is the preparation of a number of black and white portraits of James J. Corbett, suitable for reproduction.

How Hyman Got Boosts of Women

EDWARD L. Hyman, manager of the William Fox Liberty theatre, now has a good share of the women of St. Louis working for his theatre because of a piece of cooperative work that he has just done. Hyman belongs to the class of managers who make it a point to know what is going on in their communities and to take advantage of events.

His stay in St. Louis has been but a matter of a few months and he soon discovered that the competition in the moving picture game in this city is an extremely keen one.

Hyman learned to his chagrin that there were many people who didn't visit his theatre for one reason or another. Why? That was the burning question and the method to overcome their absence was another interesting, if not perplexing, problem.

He hit upon a happy plan and one which is proving an undisputed success.

The women of St. Louis are keenly ininterested in finding a photoplay theatre that will meet all of their varied expectations and Hyman, knowing his theatre would fulfill the most exacting requirements of the fair sex, set out to cultivate the visit of all women in St. Louis to his theatre.

There is an old adage that a woman reaches a man through his stomach. In some state where the equal suffrage law is on the book it is said that the women influence their husbands in the way in which they cast their ballots.

If all of these things are true Hyman reasoned that it would follow that women pleased with the performance they saw at the Liberty theatre would naturally influence their husbands and friends to "repeat" the visits.

He learned recently that the St. Louis Women's Council, interested in the Belgium Relief Fund, an earnest endeavor of many a good woman, was in need of funds to meet an emergency. This organization, which is composed of numerous women's organizations in St. Louis, was anxiously seeking someone who would help them meet the situation.

Edward L. Hyman, manager Fox's Liberty theatre, St. Louis

The business men of the city had come to the front and incidentally this is the city's slogan, and the women were timid about "stinging" the business men again and were in deep despair.

Hyman's opportunity was at hand and he knows his business well enough that Opportunity would not knock on his door and find him absent. He visited the executive committee of the Council, pledged his support and offered a plan to assist the organization in raising the needed funds.

He suggested that the women sell tickets to the people of St. Louis for two night performances at the Liberty theatre. The only restriction Hyman made was that the theatre should be paid the war tax for each ticket sold. The stage was set for action and various teams and committees of the Council started out in a house-to-house canvass of the city.

The number of tickets sold was above what Hyman expected and he selected two nights during the last week of Lent for the performances for which the tickets could be used. Those who are in the game know that the Lenten season is a pretty tough one for the photo-play theatres.

The nights on which the tickets were used were the "weak nights" of the week. The sale of the tickets attracted to the theatre many hundreds of persons who would not have attended because every person has his favorite theatre and seek no other unless the attraction is simply too good to be missed.

Through the executive committee of the Council Hyman learned that hundreds who attended the two performances had been converted into "Liberty goers." Some explained, according to the information that reached Hyman, that they knew the Liberty theatre was on an equal footing with other theatres, if not in the lead, but they had never reached the point where they desired a change.

Having seen good pictures at the Liberty and heard delightful music rendered by the symphony orchestra hundreds of persons acknowledged that they had passed up "the best bet" in the city and didn't intend to do it any longer.

Now the Liberty theatre has hundreds of new patrons who are sure to be "repeaters" and Hyman is happy, the Women's Council has its needed funds and everything turned out "lovely" as all good stories must end.

If there is a women's organization in your city that needs financial aid, try this scheme, help them get the money, build up a new clientele and take another stride up the Ladder of Success.

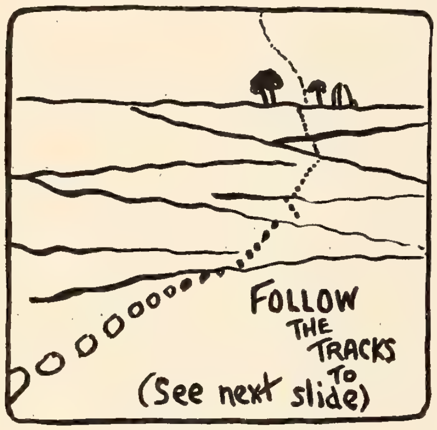
Wide Awake Manager "Swipes" Cigarette Ad. Campaign to Exploit His Cannibal Pictures

MANAGER C. L. ROSEN of the Al Ringling Theatre, Baraboo, Wis., is an opportunist. He has just given the latest example that it pays mighty well to be up to date and to take advantage of everything that the other fellow is doing.

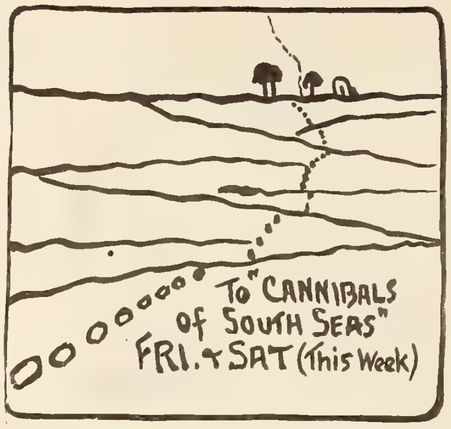
Manufacturers of Camel cigarettes have just been conducting a teaser campaign through that section, showing a series of camel tracks and then the slogan "Follow the Tracks." Then along came "Cannibals of the South Seas" to be shown at the Ringling Theatre and Mr. Rosen saw that he could make the cigarette advertising work for him.

So he made up two slides, one of them showing tracks leading from the foreground off across the desert and the inscription "Follow the Tracks." After he had the people sufficiently worked up on that he followed with a second slide, giving the whole thing "To 'Cannibals of the South Seas' Friday and Saturday."

These slides were run for two days in advance of the showing and at the same time Mr. Rosen used in the local papers that hooked the theatre and the picture up with the mystery cigarette. In fact, it was so well done that for a time a lot of people thought that the entire "Follow the Tracks" campaign belonged to him. As a result the whole campaign did work for him and helped bring big business.



This got the benefit of the cigarette campaign



To "CANNIBALS of SOUTH SEAS" FRI. & SAT (This Week)

And this persuaded them it was all about the Cannibals

In calling our attention to this excellent stunt, Mr. Rosen adds:

"The writer watches your department closely and values it greatly. My only wish is that it could be much larger and include more accounts of the other fellow's displays, etc., for they have a decided help not only in gathering ideas and data, but in having a means of knowing something about what the other houses get in the way of admission for special and the like."

This department would be larger if there were more exhibitors like Mr. Rosen who are glad to send along their ideas for the benefit of others. Some of these days we expect to have the greater share of the exhibitors as regular contributors. The number is growing every day.

Who will be the new ones this week?

Johnston to Write Ads for Finkelstein-Ruben

John LeRoy Johnston, one of the youngest publicity men in the New York film field has resigned as assistant publicity director for Universal, to accept a publicity and advertising berth with the Finkelstein & Ruben theatrical circuit of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

For the past twenty-two months Johnston has been in the employ of Universal, until last December being publicity manager for Universal's Minneapolis office. Prior to that he was editor of "Amusements," an artist and writer on St. Paul newspapers for several years and the originator of many animated cartoons and titles made by the Lochren Film Corp. Being an artist as well as a writer, Johnston returns to Minneapolis with a hope of making his work in the exhibiting field doubly effective because of his dual ability.

Many of Johnston's ad drawings and typographical advertising creations have been reproduced in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and upon his arrival at Minneapolis he will submit various advertising stories and drawings to these columns. Johnston is a firm believer in simple phraseology and art work that clearly conveys the idea of the film play they advertise.

Big Exploitation Booklet for "Oh, You Women"

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just set a new mark with the issuance of a twenty-two page press book in colors on the exploitation of "Oh You Women." The size of the pages is 10 1-2 by 16 inches enabling it to reproduce even page advertisements which are supplied by the company. It has the advantage of showing all of the advertising aids, even to the folders in the exact colors that are used in the originals.

There is a wide variety of both advertising and text cuts and all of these are shown together with the paper, and besides this there are general publicity story and special suggestion on how to get the most out of this feature. Ready made advertising ranges from full page down to single column displays.

Sam W. B. Cohn, manager, Sunset theatre, Portland, Ore.

Sam Cohn Made Manager of Sunset Theatre in Portland, Ore.

SAM W. B. COHN, aggressive young theatre manager of the Pacific Northwest, who was at the helm of the big new Liberty, Spokane, Wash., before he went to the Officers' Training School at Camp Pike, Ark., is now boss of the Sunset Theatre, Portland's most centrally located photoplay house.

Cohn is a youngster in years but a veteran of motion picture exhibition in the Northwest. He was one of the first exhibitors in Seattle, managing the original Alaska Theatre on Second Avenue and Yesler Way. Several years ago he went to Spokane and operated the Spokane Theatre, vaudeville and picture houses, and later the Liberty, one of the finest motion picture theatres in the West.

The new Sunset manager is a native of Portland, where his family are pioneers. He is an ex-newspaperman of the Rose City, and when he expressed a desire to remain in his home town John A. Jennings of the Sunset immediately offered him the Sunset berth.

Cohn is one of the "idea" men of picture exhibition, and ranks among the live wires of the West.

The presence of Cohn as manager of the Sunset theatre in Portland has brought about a peculiar situation as regards the Advisory Board of Exhibitors of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Originally Ralph Ruffner, then manager of the Columbia, and E. J. Myrick, manager of the Liberty, were Portland members of the board.

Ruffner was shifted to Butte by Jensen and Von Herberg but Paul E. ("No-Bull") Noble jumped from Butte to Portland and the Columbia-Liberty, and as he was a member of the Advisory Board, the status quo was preserved.

But now comes Cohn from Spokane, another member of the Advisory Board, and Portland holds the record with three live members of the organization.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Novelty a Business Builder

By H. M. Thomas

Manager, Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb.

NOVELTY and variety constitute the two fundamental points of success in advertising, to my mind, whether the advertising applies to theatricals or merchandise.

In my theatre advertising, I try to use diversified methods in keeping with the picture presented, and in addition, I vary my styles of advertising to keep the public interested and guessing.

On possibly some picture like, for instance, "Good Gracious Annabelle," I will break loose with a long, chatty ad, like the enclosed, while again another time as on "Out of the Fog," I will use possibly very few words, depending on the make-up of the ad. to attract attention.

In this connection, permit me to say that of late there has been a wonderful improvement in the class of advertising mats put out by the film companies, as both of these ads were built from mats I obtained at the exchanges; of course, altered in some few ways to suit my fancy. But I believe the News deserves a great deal of credit for helping make this improvement, for you will remember over a year ago, we started our complaint about the inferior quality of cut accessories furnished, and today I do not think a complaint of this kind could be universally made.

In exploitation of pictures, I use every possible method of publicity I can obtain: Billboards, newspapers, circular letters, trailers, circulars, but I try to vary the campaign on each picture to such an extent that the public will not become tired of any particular kind of advertising.

'CEPTION SHOALS

Thomas doesn't hesitate to use producer stuff when it is good. This is 12½ inches across four columns

For example, I have had one patron ask me: "Why don't you run more of your bright, breezy talking ads?" while the very next one might say to me: "I didn't read your ad. it was too long, don't you think it pays you to use more white space, less words and more pictures?"

So I figure that I will please all sides of human nature by using diversified ads. Talking about diversified ads. you will recall reproducing one time in your paper one of my ads, which simply consisted of a cut of Douglas Fairbanks and cut of theatre, the only words in the ad. being "Two Favorites That Need No Introduction to Omaha Movie-Goers." The ad. caused considerable comment and business was good on the picture, so the ad. did the work required of it. You will recall I used an ad. printed entirely in French on "Virtuous Wives," while the most talked of ad. I had on "Don't Change Your Husband" was one headed by a drawing of two onions.

My own personal choice is for a classy drawn ad., with not very much wording, on the order of the Saturday Evening Post, Vogue or Vanity Fair advertisers, but I do not believe it is good policy to overdo this class of ads., so I hit for variety, pulling everything I think will get by and arouse the least bit of interest. I've had folks say: "That man Thomas must be crazy—look at some of the foolish things he puts in his ads.," but I've found that "nut-ology" whether it be on the stage or in print is a good investment when it comes to bringing in the money at the box office.

I've read of certain managers and publicity representatives howling about "dignified advertising" and never overstepping the bounds of propriety. That's all right when you are advertising a dignified subject or feature, but when you've got a feature that's full of punch and pep, why not expend part of this "pep" in telling the public about it?

This is an old story of some of my exploitations, but it covers the point under discussion: Several months ago I ran Fred Stone in "Under the Top." I fixed up a regular sideshow in an empty store room next to the lobby, even putting in a "spieler" and a calliope, then I had part of my orchestra boys double in brass in front of the theatre afternoon and night, playing a short "squealer," after which the calliope would play a few minutes, and then see-saw back and forth just as you would at a carnival or circus. Was business good? Well, our house is one of the few in the country that made money on this Stone picture, and we simply got it through putting the proper atmosphere in our advertising and making the people in the proper frame of mind to see the picture.

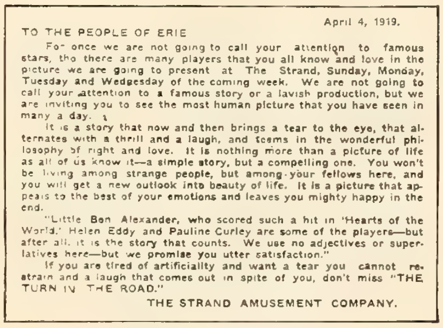
Your Idea and Ours

STRAND theatre, Erie, Pa., followed a suggestion given in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Special Service Section on "The Turn in the Road" and also used the selling talk verbatim. We suggested: "You can afford to take a new angle in the advance announcements on this picture. If you find that letters to your patrons are pullers, we would use this idea, otherwise as a general letter in newspaper space." And then the selling talk, which though we wrote it ourselves, we believe is good enough to repeat.



April 4, 1919.

TO THE PEOPLE OF ERIE

For once we are not going to call your attention to famous stars, tho there are many players that you all know and love in the picture we are going to present at The Strand, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wedgesday of the coming week. We are not going to call your attention to a famous story or a lavish production, but we are inviting you to see the most human picture that you have seen in many a day.

It is a story that now and then brings a tear to the eye, that alternates with a thrill and a laugh, and teems in the wonderful philosophy of right and love. It is nothing more than a picture of life as all of us know it—a simple story, but a compelling one. You won't be living among strange people, but among your fellows here, and you will get a new outlook into beauty of life. It is a picture that appeals to the best of your emotions and leaves you mighty happy in the end.

"Little Ben Alexander, who scored such a hit in 'Hearts of the World,' Helen Eddy and Pauline Curley are some of the players—but after all, it is the story that counts. We use no adjectives or superlatives here—but we promise you utter satisfaction."

If you are tired of artificiality and want a tear you cannot restrain and a laugh that comes out in spite of you, don't miss "THE TURN IN THE ROAD."

THE STRAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

For once we are not going to call your attention to famous stars, though there are many that you all know and love in the picture we are going to present at the Strand Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the coming week. We are not going to call your attention to a famous story or a lavish production, but we are inviting you to see the most human picture that you have seen in many a day.

It is a story that now and then brings a tear to the eye, that alternates with a thrill and a laugh, and teems with the wonderful philosophy of right and love. It is nothing more than a picture of life as all of us know it—a simple story, but a compelling one. It is a picture that appeals to the best of your emotions and leaves you mighty happy in the end.

Little Ben Alexander, who scored a hit in "Hearts of the World," Helen Eddy and Pauline Curley are some of the players—but after all it is the story that counts. We use no adjectives or superlatives here—but we promise you utter satisfaction.

To this the Strand has added:

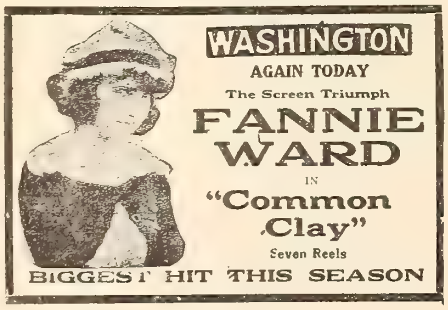
If you are tired of artificiality and want a tear that you cannot restrain and a laugh that comes out in spite of you, don't miss "The Turn in the Road."

This was signed by the name of the company and used the Friday afternoon before the Sunday opening of the picture. Space occupied was only 3 1-2 inches double column and we'll bet it got more business than a lot of big splashes. This peculiar style of advertising is good occasionally.

There's a lot in a name, especially if its THE.

THIS three inch double column display of the Washington theatre, Dallas, Tex., appeared Monday, following the Sunday opening of Fannie Ward in "Common Clay." Taken as one advertisement alone and not considering the time that it was used or anything else we would consider it very poor, but one must remember that the picture probably scored a big hit on the Sunday that it was shown and also that the Dallas papers print reviews of the first run pictures in the Monday issue so that the display got the benefit of them.

For that reason the theatre did well to use a cut of the star and the name of the star and then the title and refer to it as "Biggest hit this season." That will cause the patron to ask about the picture and result in the theatre getting the most possible out of the word of mouth advertising. We don't know how this was followed up, but the Tuesday displays should have quoted extracts from what the local papers said about the picture and so have still further profited from the opinions of the pleased patrons.



Don't make your theatre simply appeal to your patrons' idle hours. Make it something as worth while to them as their busiest moments.

HERE is a striking five column twelve inch display of B. Lee Smith, the new house manager of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga. It follows the general arrangement of a display of the Hippodrome, Dallas, Tex., which was reproduced in these pages in the April 19 issue. It is one of the many instances that shows the help that exhibitors are able to get here if they will study this matter carefully.

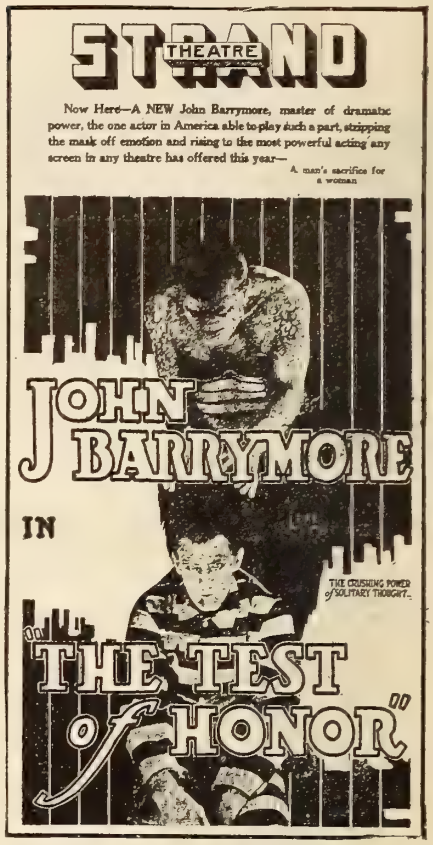
ATLANTA'S LATEST SENSATION THOUSANDS HAVE SEEN—THOUSANDS MORE WANT TO VIEW ITS MARVELS

In the case of the Dallas display there was reading matter in the hearts at the upper right and the lower left. The Tudor has substituted a picture of Miss Phillips in the upper corner and a scene below. The effect is most striking. It made the whole page of the newspaper a living, throbbing advertisement for the offering.

By-the-way, Mr. Smith is another example of newspaper men who have been very successful as theatre managers. He was the first man to start a motion picture page in an Atlanta paper and is to a considerable extent responsible for popularizing the photoplay in that section.



STRAND THEATRE

JOHN BARRYMORE
IN
THE CRUSHING POWER of SOLITARY THOUGHT
"THE TEST of HONOR"

Now Here—A NEW John Barrymore, master of dramatic power, the one actor in America able to play such a part, stripping the mask off emotion and rising to the most powerful acting any screen in any theatre has offered this year—

KEEP the SHUDDER out of your advertising.

There has been enough hard luck in the world during the past four years and that is being realized in the production of motion pictures. Here is a case where there is a strong, dramatic, entertaining story that doesn't leave anything like a bad taste in the mouth—John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor."

It was a real pleasure to write a Special Service Section on such a story. In that we told you that his term in prison and the brief scene of it was only incidental to the picture, and that it should be kept in the background. Later in comment on another display we advised keeping the convict garb out of the illustrations. But here the Strand theatre, Seattle, has seen fit to build the whole display around a few feet of "vision." It absolutely ignores the humaneness, the love motive and everything else that enters into the picture. It is the sort of a display that is pretty sure to keep the women and children away from the theatre.

This display is repulsive—and aside from that meaningless.

One idea that gets there is worth a million that just start.

GOOD stuff, this, and the work of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O., that keeps on getting the bing-bang punch in the big space that it uses. This ten inch, four column display is mighty good and there is only one fault to find with it. We like to see the selling arguments indented—that is with white space on either side. Even when you have to reduce the type, we believe that it is more apt to be read, for the plan of trying to play everything up to the limit is never convincing and generally serves only to achieve a crowded effect.

The name of the star is properly played with a half tone used at the right and then there is a good line with "The thrilling adventure of a girl who risked honor to win love." The smaller typed matter says, under the name of the picture:

> In which a girl plays a desperate game with the man who plans her ruin. Men coaxed her. they taunted her, they tortured her, they threatened her, they kissed her—BUT they did not love her truly, so the girl fought out her battle and bestowed her gifts on the only man SHE loved.

This is the second of the Theda Bara advertisements of the Colonial we have printed. An even better one appeared in the April 12 issue, but we are using this to show how variety may be obtained with the same picture and with practically the same material.

They say that no man is a hero to his valet, but you have to be the trail-blazer for your patrons.

HERE is one of the most striking displays that we have seen in a long time and it is a splendid example of the punch that can be put over by taking advantage of the beauty of a star. This eleven inch, six column display of the People's theatre, Portland, Ore., is practically given over to pictures of Elsie Ferguson. There are three striking poses of her and the resulting effect is a great deal stronger than if a single one had been used. Now we say that in all sincerity, but when you try the same stunt be sure that the three pictures that you use fit in with each other and that they give the impression of meaning something.

Now at first glance one thinks of the Three Graces and the impression to the quick eye is that they are three different women. Then one pauses to see and with the discovery that they are different poses of Miss Ferguson the selling power of her beauty becomes all the stronger. The brief selling argument says:

> He really loved her. Nothing unusual about that, you say? No? Then you have a great surprise coming. Get the family together and enjoy it.

In the course of clipping this display from the newspaper the date at the top—this week—was destroyed.

Faith may be a jewel, but advertising will get a lot more sparkles into your business.

HERE is a case of a well designed, good looking advertisement that sadly lacks the punch. The picture of the devil is out of place and detracts from the cleverly decorated figure of George Walsh. While this 8 1-2 inch, three column display of the Walnut, Louisville, Ky., occupied the upper right hand corner of a right hand page, it was seen because of location, but that was all the more reason why there should have been a wallop in either hand.

This could have been much better done by leaving the figure of Walsh as it now stands and then using toward the left in large lettered design, "He was born on Friday, the thirteenth." Then there should have followed, considerably indented, the line, "The Jinx is always tagging at his heels whether he is playing poker, getting married, or hunting sunken treasure." Then below that there should have been the name of the star and the title of the picture.

It is merely a question of the punch; for in appearance alone the display is mighty hard to beat. But it is an example of how a catch line, properly displayed will make the people read the advertisement, while a merely "artistic" one is liable to be passed by in the rush.

HERE is an advertisement that is hemarkable for several reasons. In the first place there is no sign of a cut, and, next, the name of the star has been reduced so that the title of the famous stage play would have a startling appeal.

Further than this, Arthur G. Stolte, who prepared this advertisement for the Strand theatre, Omaha, just before going to Des Moines to take charge of the New A. H. Blank theatre there, conceived the idea of changing a number of the title so as to bring them into accord with the book versions. These took the lighter side of the situation and instead of death threats merely had the character say that he was "coming heeled" and then the conversation turned on that.

But the main point is that the display relied on the title of the picture and some of the subtitles which could be read and some which could not get the people into the theatre. It succeeded. It was something so novel that those who had never even heard that "Paid in Full" was one of the greatest speaking stage successes of recent years simply had to come—the lure of curiosity.

Of all the star attractions your theatre should be the chief one.

HERE are two mighty good advertisements of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., on "The Light of the Western Stars" in which Dustin Farnum is starred. Both of these are built to a considerable extent around the personality of the star, but different angles have been taken in the two. For instance, the one in which the full length figure of the star appears, features the three things that should be brought out, Farnum, the title and Zane Grey, the author.

Now although those points are brought out prominently in the typing, the designer proceeds to repeat the things and in a very clever way, for he says:

> If you will note the star, the name of the picture and the author you will naturally expect something extraordinary—and that's what it is. It's a picture that we will back with our reputation.

This one was built up from an advertisement that appeared in the Motion Picture News.

The other display gets good effect by using the black background and the white lettering, but there is not the personality to the drawn figure of Farnum that there is in the other. Here the selling argument says:

> "THREE TO ONE—SO THE ODDS WAS EVEN"—Monty Price's last words after the scrap gives you a glimpse of the dashing spirit of fearlessness and contempt for danger which Zane Grey puts in his thrilling romance—Just come to the theatre and we will guarantee the rest.

There are a few adjectives used in these displays and it would probably have been the better to have omitted them, but, after all, the breeze and action of the picture and the personality of the star are the things that stand out and when you get those elements of appeal over strong you are pretty apt to get the crowds into your theatre.

Exploitation without thought makes as much noise as a blank cartridge, but it gets no further.

THIS display of the America, Denver is modeled along the Vitagraph advertising that appeared in the Motion Picture News. It gets attention because there is a large amount of white space around the reproduction of the book and the unusual arrangement, but it lacks a lot in getting over the punch that it should have had.

In the first place the typing has been badly arranged. To get a look at it, one left eye sweeps the book and the right eye, first, and then both of them fall on the Larry Semon comedy. There isn't any question that Robert W. Chamberlin himself is a big selling argument, but in these days when practically all of the popular novels are being made into motion pictures, we would certainly add the selling argument on the picture itself.

Figure this out for yourself: Probably half of the people of your town have read "Ivanhoe." Probably one out of fifty have read "The Cambric Mask." Of course, your appeal is stronger to the people that have read the story, but you cannot afford to pass up the rest. There is a certain impression that this sort of advertising leaves on the man who has not read the story that is likely to keep him away from the theatre. This display occupies eight inches across three columns.

VICTORY

How much better is the picture sold by the Victory theatre, Tacoma, Wash. It is true that there are 14 1-4 inches used across four columns, but even reduced the effect would have surpassed that of the America. There is a single thing that we have to find fault with in this and that is the failure to bring the name of Alice Joyce out stronger. Here outline is used for her name and it is not prominent enough. The reason this was done was not to conflict with the black letters, "The Cambric Mask," but it would have been much more effective to have used the name of the star at the upper left, allowing a margin of white space at the top of the cut that would have helped. Picture of the old man with his hand up at the right should have been omitted. It carries to the reader no meaning except to suggest tragedy and that should always be avoided in any display unless it is the vital hinge of the picture.

There is a clever arrangment here with the suggestion "It's another six feature bill." Thrown at the top this would look like a bargain day announcement, but the Victory has already sold the feature and it is a case of adding, "Look, we are going to give you all this, too." It's a good way of calling attention to the short subjects—but not too often.

Ever remember that good cheer needs no apology?

IF the Palace theatre, Des Moines, had used a larger cut and had been able to get better printing this display would have been improved a great deal. As it is, we like the spirit of it for one of the gay sort of jazzing displays.

Very frankly, a large part of the appeal made here is physical. Miss Barriscale unquestionably "looks good" to the male portion of the population in the chorus girl costume and here is the very reason that the cut should have been made larger. In this case it could easily have been done by pushing the name plate over and up a little and making the name plate run into the border and then using the "Stars Today" in some other place. This inch and a half increase in the height of the cut would have a lot of difference, and there was plenty of white space at the sides to have allowed for the added width.

You can always get a chic effect by using the broken French and here we have "Ooo-La-La-Zis Babee Shrug and Tweest Voila!" Then after the name of the star comes:

OUT in Freeport, Ill. there is a theatre that has caught the right way to advertise where the bill does not run longer than one or two days. The Strand evidently believes in getting the full worth out of each offering and so it does not weaken the announcement by putting matter referring to another film. Instead of doing that the Strand uses separate space for each announcement.

In this Tuesday issue of the local afternoon daily the Strand advertises three different productions side by side. The attraction for the day is Fred Stone and since the late business is the only thing to be caught, five inches single column is used. Then on the picture that is to come Wednesday and Thursday it occupies seven inches double and then seven inches single for the Enid Bennett picture Friday. The advertising matter is almost entirely press book copy.

CLOSE followers of this department will remember that for a long time our comment on the general motion picture theatre in St. Louis was very severe and that we told you that for the average display it was one of the poorest cities in the country. We have been mighty glad to notice from time to time the improvement that has been shown there.

Now the newspaper rate in St. Louis is very high and exhibitors are not able to employ the large space that marks the work of the best advertisers in other cities. Therefore the only thing to do is to get some plan by which the advertising will stand out and this has been done by the Central as the two displays reproduced here will show.

THIS is a rather unusual program for a small city, but it is a good one and serves the purpose of a bulletin. We make this statement because these programs are not handed out at the door of the theatre, but are distributed in the homes. In addition these are regularly placed in frames at convenient locations around the town so that one may always know what is the bill at The Minor, Arcata, Calif.

For display purposes these are not startling, but they serve the purpose well of keeping the people posted at what is doing at the Minor. We like the arrangement very much, especially the way that the date is set in at the left with the rule effect. The Minor seems to have obtained the work of an exceptionally good printer in following the copy in an especially attractive and tasty style.

There is one thing that appeals to us especially, coming as it does from a small city, and that is the inclusion of the number that is to be featured in the musical program. Just those few words are likely to bring out a lot of people who might not be brought out to see the picture alone. We want to take this occasion to point out that there are a lot of music lovers who are going to certain motion picture houses today more on account of the music than the pictures themselves. Of course the film attractions have to be up to the standard, but they want the PLUS of symphony.

Elaborate front of the Verdi, San Francisco, for "For the Freedom of the East" during the run of this Goldwyn production

This Manager Makes His Theatre Show Place To Attract Attention of Many Nationalities

"PUT 'EM OVER JOHNSON" should be the name of L. C. Johnson, proprietor of the Verdi theatre, on Broadway, San Francisco, as he has built up a reputation for exploiting pictures which has attracted wide attention in the West.

An example of just how Mr. Johnson operates is shown in the handling of the "For the Freedom of the East" in which Lady Tsen Mei, the first Chinese screen actress, made her initial appearance.

Aside from his newspaper and poster advertising Mr. Johnson constructed the most elaborate front ever seen in San Francisco. The entire facade of the theatre during the presentation of the picture was treated in Oriental effect, but the most wonderful display was in the lobby. All of the space was covered by magnificent hangings and tapestries, many of them inset with brilliant stones, which gave an amazing effect, particularly at night, when they had the benefit of the many lights and gave the impression of real Oriental splendor.

Many large Chinese parasols were used together with art fans and other hangings. Over the entrance arch was a mammoth parasol fifty feet in diameter, with two smaller ones at each side of the arch.

This display has been gradually accumulated by Mr. Johnson for a long time. It represents an outlay of about $3,000 and is very impressive for all plays having an Oriental trend. The best idea of the accuracy of his judgment in making a display of this kind is the fact that he broke all records of the house.

The Verdi is located in the heart of San Francisco's Bohemian section. Its audience consists of nearly every nationality on the globe. There are Italians, Russians, French, Chinese, Hindoos and every other race at each perfromance.

It is one of the sightseeing points around the Western metropolis and each night many tourists visit the Verdi to get a glimpse of the Bohemia of the West.

Mr. Johnson is a good friend to all of his patrons. He takes a leading part in forming various organizations, conducting athletic events and in every way helping the people of his section to find various kinds of recreation and amusement.

were present, and we had the same community singing leader too.

In connection with this article, it might not be out of the way to tell of an incident that just happened in Omaha in connection with various methods I use to exploit our pictures. A beverage company has put on the market a new drink called "Whistle" and has started a teaser and billboard campaign with just the word "'Whistle'—If You Are Thirsty." I'll bet I have had ten or twelve people ask me what picture I was advertising with the sentence above referred to and other similar inquiries have been made at the ticket office and of the doorman, simply going to prove the fact that the public do watch novelties in the advertising game.

I do not want to close without paying the three newspapers of Omaha a sincere tribute for the wonderful way in which they cooperate with us in the matter of motion picture news, and it is certainly of much assistance to run theatres in a city where the newspapers are on your side of the fence, rather than where they don't care a tinker's darn whether you get any publicity or not, but I believe the day is drawing very, very near when the papers who take this attitude are only hurting themselves, for to-day to my mind there are at least ten persons interested in the motion picture to one in sports, and yet I defy you to show me a paper that does not run a sport.

Michigan Manager Hires Special Trains to Bring Business on Biggest Nights

ACCORDING to the latest census figures East Jordan, Mich., is a town that contains but 2,516 men, women and children, but F. J. Gruber, manager of the only picture theatre, has figured it out that the population which he can draw from is close to 5,000. How he increased the number of his possible patrons is a lesson that many managers in small places similarly situated can follow with profit.

East Jordan is on Lake Michigan at the end of a stub line of railroad and well off the line of travel. It has two little railroads one of which is 19 miles long, reaching Bellaire, a town of 1,700 and the other going to Frederic which claims 600. Midway there is another town of 600 people.

There is a weekly newspaper in East Jordan and the advertising rate is ridiculously small. Also both railroads run trains in the afternoon into East Jordan, one train being due at 4 p. m. and the other at 7 p. m. Usually there isn't another train back until the next morning.

Mr. Gruber is progressive and he decided to advertise his big pictures not only in the newspaper but in every town along the railroad line. Bills were sent to the postmasters and railroad agents. They were hung up in the country stores. One told all about Charlie Chaplin coming in "A Dog's Life." Now everyone up in that district knows about Charlie Chaplin but few had seen his pictures and when they figured on railroad fares and the cost of remaining over night in East Jordan the expense held them back.

Gruber investigated, found out the difficulty and met it. He engaged two trains at his own expense to leave after the show to take everyone home who came to the show. He told everyone about it a week in advance. He got some of the merchants to co-operate on the ground that it would stimulate trading. It is needless to remark that "A Dog's Life" played to the biggest business ever seen in East Jordan. And since then Mr. Gruber has repeated this success with "Shoulder Arms" and "Tarzan." He figures he can do it at least once a week with profit to him.

Hollywood Theatres Combine on Issuing a Program

Hollywood, Calif. theatre managers have effected co-operative advertising for their houses which has materially reduced cost, and today is believed to have added efficiency in that there is no duplication of advertising, and the managers have every assurance that every resident of the film foothill city receives a copy of their program for the month.

There are but three theatres in Hollywood; the Apollo, conducted by J. M. Young; the Iris, managed by F. R. Alexander, and the Hollywood by J. L. Swope. The same admission fee is charged at each of the theatres; namely, ten, fifteen and twenty cents plus war tax.

How New York Stages the Show

RATHER a peculiar coincidence that two of the finest motion picture theatres in the world, and both located in the same city, should celebrate their birthdays at the same time. But this is just what is happening this week. The Strand is celebrating its fifth anniversary and the Rialto its third. Certainly there is plenty to occupy the attention of New Yorkers in the splendid bills that are offered at the two houses.

So far as we know, for the first time in the history of a motion picture theatre animals are being introduced in the overture at the Strand this week through a novel and attractive conception of Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett. There is a very elaborate scenic and lighting arrangement with "The Spirit of the Elements," and right at the end there is a scene in which a shepherd walks across the stage followed by a drove of sheep.

At the Rialto William S. Hart is the star in "The Money Corral." There is a clever marking of the third birthday at the start of the magazine with the appearance of three little girls, and Dr. Riesenfeld has otherwise marked the occasion by an especially elaborate bill in which music has a prominent part. Charles Chaplin is seen in the revival of "The Adventurer"; and, of course, the bill would not be complete without a Robert Bruce scenic. It is "The Wolf of the Teutons."

Not to be forgotten just because other theatres have anniversaries, the Rivoli has one of the most artistic bills possible, and here again music has a large part. Elsie Ferguson is seen in "Eyes of the Soul," and a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Young Mr. Jazz," supplies a big lot of laughs. There is a special Van Scoy scenic picturizing Shelley's poem, "The Cloud."

At the Broadway last week's bill is held over—Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil" and Chaplin in "The Jazz Waiter." This, by the way, is the last week of the Broadway under the present management, it having been taken over by the B. S. Moss interests.

Rialto Theatre

RIALTO'S third birthday is marked this week by a bill that is thoroughly in keeping with that maintained by the theatre since its very first week. It is a concrete example of the high place that the motion picture has taken in the hearts of the people who want the very best in amusement, and if one could note the crowds that have flocked to the Rialto this week one would be convinced that every one appreciates it, and that they all want to pay this birthday tribute.

"Second Hungarian Rhapsody" is the brilliant overture. This is started with all of the house lights in blue, and the orchestra flooded in the same color. After a few bars the side curtains part, and at the left there is seen a stream running through the hills, and at the left a more distant view of the same river. Toward the end the side panels light up to red. Very near the end there is a czimbalon solo by Bela Nyary, with the rest of the orchestra tacet.

There is a birthday tribute at the opening of the Rialto Magazine, for with muted horns the curtains part, revealing three little girls. The center one speaks: "This is my birthday. Lots of nice things I bring with me." Then there is the start of the Magazine proper, with a view of a cake with three candles. This gets a big hand. "Children's March" is played softly through these pictures, and then comes another one of the Toplinsky series of "sayings," including one referring directly to the theatre: "This week the Rialto theatre is three years old. Going some. It has only one bad habit. It's always full."

There are a lot of laughs in this, including one which says: "The best month for marriage is June. That gives you July for a honeymoon, and then comes the dog days." At the end the kid remarks to the old Jew, "Say, pop, when do we eat?" Kinograms comes along with pictures of guns from the dreadnoughts mounted on railway cars, which were used so effectively in beating the Huns.

Then we get a lot of laughs with the latest of the Silk Hat Harry comics released by Education, this one being "A Sweet Pickle." Here we have the Judge and Harry running their new delicatessen, and here we have "Sensation" played at the start and then at the title, "It must be his income tax," we have the piccolo predominating. As the woman enters the store and asks for cat meat, "Me-ow" is played in a way that help the laughs along. When another customer wants a sausage, and the supply is found to be out, the Judge finds a dog, and the supply is quickly renewed. There is clever stuff with the Jewish boy who tries to make his wants known with a dance, and then with the appearance of the huge husband, when "Who's Who" is played. There are all sorts of effects used here, including the one when Harry accidentally grabs the rope that operates the coal bucket cash carrier, and it drops on the man's head. Then the Judge arrives with the ambulance, and Harry drags out the husband while the Judge faints.

Following this are Victory Loan pictures, "A Dramatization of the Heroic Feats of the War," this representing the bravery of a corporal, and showing some striking battle effects. "Battle Music" is used for this, and then when the title comes saying that this incident shows how freely the soldiers risk their lives for us, and the appeal for the Victory Loan the music turns to "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Miss Julia Henry adds a delightful bit to the program with her rendition of "Mighty Lak a Rose."

"The Wolf of the Teutons" is the title of the Robert C. Bruce scenic released by Educational. No anniversary celebration at either the Rialto or the Rivoli would be compete without one of these Bruce scenics, for they have always been a real feature of the two houses, and it is here that they won their greatest fame because of the splendid musical settings given them. Here the Great Dane plays a leading part, together with another dog that closely resembles a wolf, and therefore supplies the title. These two take us through their travels and supply us with some wonders of scenic beauty, there being some fine shots of lakes and mountains, and some splendid silhouette effects. "Scenes Poetique" is played at the opening, and then we have the French horn following through, and then the orchestra coming back with the same selection. At the title, "Of the many days," the French horn is dominant again, and then with, "Of the many nights," "Von Vivant" is played until the title, "Over Yonder the Two Sit and Listen," and here we have the French horn to the finish.

"Hunkatin" is used for the scenes at the rodeo, and then with a view of the president's special train we have "Chin Chin Chinaman," and then another numbered piece. The theme is introduced with the first sight of Rose, the poor relation, and there follows through "I Found the End of the Rainbow," and as Hart enters the train, "Arioso." With the introduction of Carl Bruler, the villain, "Symphonette," is played twice through, and this is followed by "In the Silence of the Night." With the title, "Getting bridle wise," we have "By the River," and then a couple of numbered selections. In fact, practically all of the rest of the music consists of numbered selections or organ interpretations. The theme is brought back with the sight on the screen of the violinist, and then with the title, "She's in the Library" we have the theme with the full orchestra.

Charles Chaplin follows in a revival of the "Adventurer," and there are as many laughs as if it were being shown for the first time anywhere. This was formerly known as "The Man Hunt," and is the story of a convict escape. "Chaplin Feet" is played at the opening, and then with the shot and Chaplin playing dead we have the organ effect, and as he gets up the orchestra swings into "The Star Gazer." When

"a morning dip" followed by a tympany rumble, and the woman cries for help we have the tympany effect, followed by a numbered selection, and then "Chaplin Feet" as he leaps into the water. "Oh, How I Hate To Get Up!" Then with the change of scene, "Girl Behind the Gun" is used, and then as the girl plays the piano, "Have a Smile," with the chorus of "Chaplin Feet" coming in as she sees the picture of the convict.

With the title, "You need a shave," "Miniature Waltz" is used, followed by "Slippery Hawk," as Chaplin enters the kitchen, and then by "Krakowak" as the dancers are seen. Then after the guards appear "Lure of the Night" is used, and when Chaplin drops the ice cream in his trousers we have whistle effects with "Whispering Flowers" and "Tickle the Ivories," as the ice cream drops down the woman's back. As the guards enter "The Globe Trotters" is used, and then when Chaplin says good-bye Tosto's "Good-by" is played burlesque fashion.

Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" is the organ solo.

Strand Theatre

MANAGING Director Joseph L. Plunkett promised novelties for the celebration of the Fifth Anniversary of the Strand and he certainly had them in his well rounded and entertaining program which is being shown this week. All that side of Broadway was packed with people Sunday night when we attended the performance.

We have already referred to the fact that probably for the first time in any motion picture theatre animals were used during the overture for a wonderfully striking effect. And that overture certainly made a hit from the beginning to the end. It is a special arrangement of Henry Hadley's "The Spirit of the Elements." After a few bars the stage curtains part and show an Italian volcano in eruption, the red glare and the streams of lava running down the side, it increasing in velocity until there comes a rainstorm.

There is a vivid picturization of the gathering storm clouds and the noise of the thunder and wind, the lights now sinking down to a grayish effect as the sheets of water fall and put out the fires from the volcano. The storm gradually dies away and then we have a rainbow appearing in the sky with the lights coming up to blue and just at the very end, a shepherd all in white walks slowly across the stage with a drove of real sheep following him while the Angelus is heard in the distance.

The audience voices its fullest appreciation, though the effect is so novel that one is at first almost dazed with wonder. On all sides we could hear the question from doubters as to whether the sheep were real or not. Thy positively are, for imitations have not gotten to the point yet where they can create such an effect.

Of course it is a lot of trouble to do things of this sort, but it will pay any theatre in the country. The Strand was the first of the real motion picture palaces and it doesn't need advertising, but we'll wager the old winter hat that people will be talking about the Strand and this incident for y'ars and y'ars.

For this special occasion Mr. Plunkett prepared "A Trip Through the Strand," interesting motion pictures of the officials, theatre, employes and various departments at work in presenting pictures. The audience keenly enjoys this "peep behind the scenes." Included in these are pictures of the Brewster carriage plant which occupied the site five years before. We have views of Mr. Plunkett at work arranging his program, Carl Edouarde preparing the musical score and consulting with such celebrities as Victor Herbert, House Manager R. Alfred Jones and his staff and Chief Usher A. Sweeney drilling the usherettes. It is really amusing to hear the comment of the audience as they recognize some of the officials or employes in the picture. The big lobby man attracted special attention.

A few bars from "Home Sweet Home" are played at the start of this picture and then "You'll Have to Do It All Over Again" until the scene where Edouarde and Herbert are seen with the music of "An Irish Rhapsody" and then that is played until the scene of the stage men working the effects when we have "Whispering Willows." At the end there is an animated cartoon showing the leading stars that play that theatre lining up on the stage and here "Auld Lang Syne" is played.

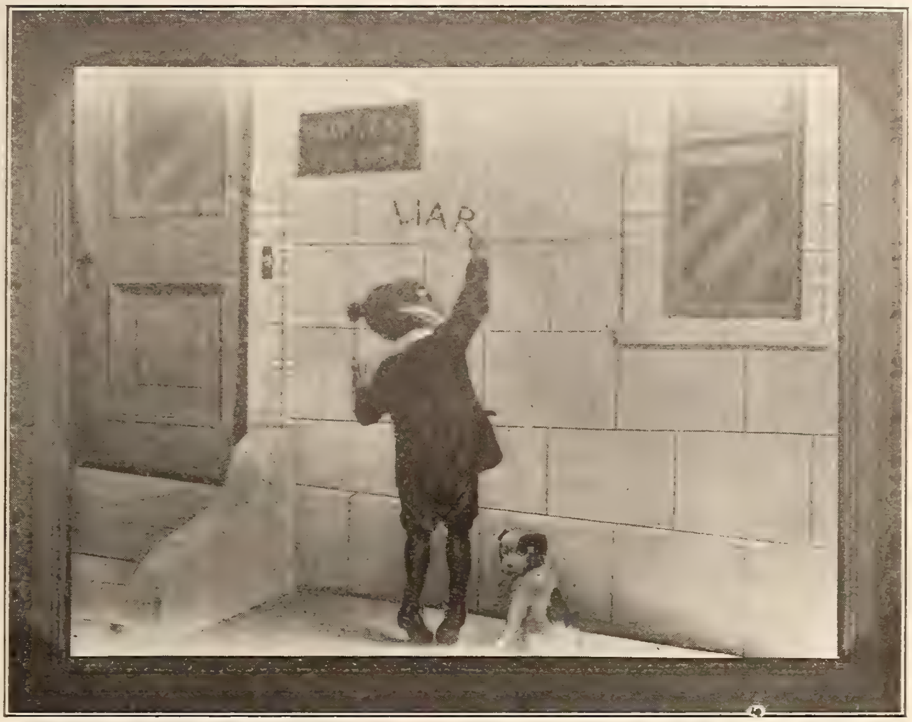
Strand Topical opens with Current Events pictures of the "Fighting 69th," packing up in France for their return to America and here "Garde du Corps" is played. Then come Pathe pictures of a Chinese expert at a ball game in San Francisco. This is a comedy feature for it shows the old Oriental using a telescope to watch the play and then his own way of keeping the score. From the same source come pictures of the Kaiserin Auguste Vitorie, just turned over to the Americans by Germany, making her first trip to America with a shipload of soldier-heroes from New Orleans. "Give a Little Credit to the Navy" is used.

Pathe then follows with "Heroic Deeds of Soldiers" and the Victory Loan appeal which has already been described. "Heroic Symphony" is played for these with the effects for the cannonading. From the same source come views of Admiral Beattie reviewing the English sailors at Plymouth, England, and then some fine shots of the huge battleship, "Queen Elizabeth." Final punch to the Topical comes with International pictures of Gen. Pershing reviewing the American troops at Coblenz, Germany. We see the men massed in the square where the clown prince once reviewed his Death Head Huzzars. There are included pictures of Gen. Pershing decorating a young hero and then Gen. Dickman. "The Rookies" is the music.

"Garden Dance" is played on the organ for the Pathe pictures of "What the Eye Misses," these being the ultra rapid pictures of tennis playing. It gets an unusual amount of laughter.

"Out of the Inkwell" is a Paramount-

Music Hints For Entire Programs



We believe that this is the first time that comedy has ever been used as a setting in a motion picture theatre. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was the recent victim of the dentist's, and so Michael Shea sent him a postcard with a reproduction of the painting by William Grotz, and Franklin got such a good laugh out of it that he decided to let his patrons enjoy the fun, too

Bray, showing the artist drawing the clown and the amusing antics. "Wedding of the Rose" is the music.

Strand is introducing the Strand Ladies Octette for the first time this week with a special stage setting. As the curtains part there is revealed a huge cathedral window and we have the effect of an altar with four girls on either side, robed as choristers. They sing "The Lost Chord," and toward the end of the selection the drop goes up revealing the blue sky while the dove of peace gradually comes out toward the top.

Mary Pickford in "Capt. Kidd, Jr." is the feature and the orchestra is kept so busy with the rest of the program that the music for this has to be largely carried on the organ. At screening a portion of the "Keltic Suite" is played with "Lass O' Mine," without introduction, following through and then comes "Basket of Roses" with the introduction out also. With the title "On account of our high taxes" we have "Tears" and the comedy effect is reflected here in the music. At the title "with considerable trouble" the music turns to "La Navarraise Nocturne" until the scene where Willie tips the butler and then the organ takes up the music for three minutes until the scene where the man grabs the box and "Walmarchen" is played by the orchestra, turning to "Mood Pensive" when Willie enters the bookstore. At the scene where the woman shakes the door "Water Lillies" is played at agitato and then "With the fortune hunters" it turns to "Eccentric Comedy" which is played once through and then "Summer Showers" to the scene where the wagon drives away.

Here the orchestra turns the music over to the organ for seventeen minutes or until the scene where the constable rings the bell and then we have the dinner bell effect with the orchestra taking up with music, "Intermezzo Arensky." At the scene where Mary is seen reading the letter to Willie "Constance" is played, following through with "Remembrance" until the scene of the girl in the boy's arms when we have "Spring Flowers" until the fade-out and then "Lassie O' Mine" to the end.

Miss Ann Rutledge, one of our favorites among the singers at the local theatres, then renders "The Magic of Your Eyes." She is dressed in a rather short, white dress and the spot light is on her as she sings.

Then comes "Cameraring Through Africa," or rather the first portion of it. This shows the adventures of a motion picture man in Zululand and we have some wonderful shots of all sorts of wild beasts including zebra, giraffe, spring box, etc. Through the titles comedy has been made to dominate this picture and there are a lot of laughs.

Certainly everyone is left with a fine impression of the show after seeing the final number, the second of the Briggs childhood comedies. This is "Skinny's School and Scandal" and it is one of those wonderful human things that everyone much enjoys. It is just a little story of Skinny falling in love with the new girl pupil and the troubles that he has as the result and also of the plot of the old deacon to put his niece in as teacher instead of the regular one. At the screening "Suite Villageoise" is played with "My Little Billiken" following through until the point where the teacher is seen ringing the bell and here we have "School Days" played twice through, while the audience hums it. The organ then takes it up and toward the end "School Bells" is used followed through with "Those Good Old Days Back Home" to the end.

Grand March from "The Queen of Sheba" is the organ solo.

Rivoli Theatre

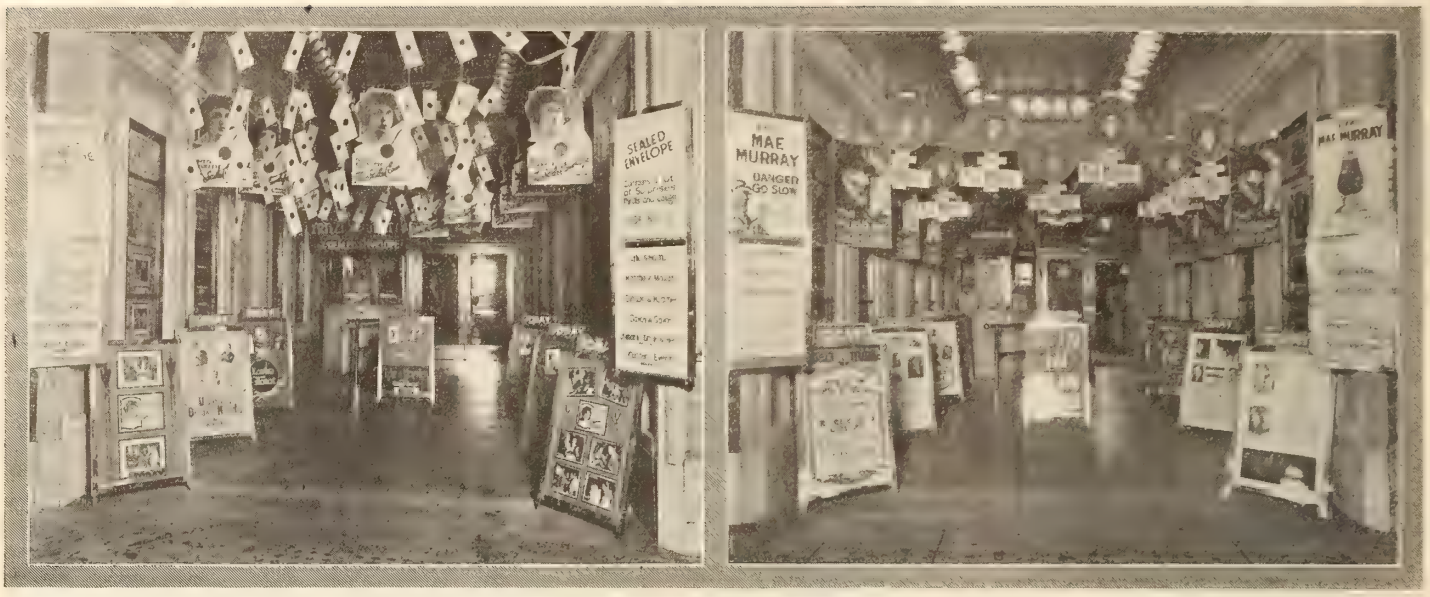
THERE is more real artistry on the Rivoli bill this week that you'll find in a motion picture theatre program in a long time, because the feature and the shorter subjects and especially the musical selections reach a high plane. One might call it a sentimental bill, but that does not mean sorrowful, for it is accentuated with plenty of laughs.

"Capriccio Italien" is played with the lights all in gold. This is a brilliant, lively number, opening with a fanfare of trumpets. All of the instruments are brought out, and there are some beautiful harmonies.

Then comes a Post-Van Scoy scenic illustrating Shelley's famous poem, "The Cloud." There are some wonderful shots of clouds, the rains they produce, the water and the moon. In the arrangement the last verse of the poem is illustrated first, but the lines of the whole thing are carried through. It is hardly fair to pick out any of the shots as especially fine, but there is one most effective one showing the clouds, the lake and the falling rain. "First Arabesque" is played at screening, following through with "Pastorale," and then the organ taking up the music.

With the lights in red the curtains part revealing an oval white opening in a purple background for Miss Helen De Witt Jacobs, violinist. There is a lounge directly in front of the window, on which she is seated until the curtains part, and on either side a standing light. "Nachez's Indiana Dance" is the selection.

Rivoli Pictorial this week opens with International pictures of Gen. Pershing's review of the American troops at Coblenz, for which "Sounds of peace" is played. Then come Pathe views showing the big guns in France, mounted on the railroad cars that had such a big part to do with winning the war. "Victorious Democracy" is played for these. Kinograms then takes up to St. Louis, where the squadron of tanks is awaiting the "Zero Hour" to go over the top for the Victory Loan. We are shown the camouflage artists painting them up so that they CAN be seen. For these the music is "Speed Her Up," and this continues into the title of Pathe pictures showing an airship flying under the bridge over the Arkansas River at Little Rock and doing all sorts of stunts. The orchestra



Manager Walter Armstrong of the Strand theatre, Portland, Ore., is a great believer in cut-outs for lobby displays, and he is making them increase his business. These two on "The Sealed Envelope" and "Danger, Go Slow," were made from the one-sheet with some of Mr. Armstrong's own added touches dims down with the appearance of the machines and then we have the effects only.

Now comes Mutt and Jeff in "Seein' Things," and sure is a scream. We have pictures of Jeff seated on the floor playing a piccolo, while a pair of shoes does all sorts of queer steps. Here the piccolo in the orchestra improvises "Forward march," "Over the top," "Left Oblique," "About Face," "Charge," "Jazz" and "Shimmy." Then with the title, "at ease," the whole orchestra comes in with "Hezekiah." As the ambulance is seen coming the music changes to "Kinky," and then when Mutt gets home and sees the shoes again there is the improvising piccolo. As he sees the mice it changes to "Spooky Ookum," and then "Umbrellas to Mend," with the appearance of the mice. All sorts of effects are produced during the showing of the cartoon.

We get back to the news subjects with Gaumont pictures of the launching of a four-master at Stockton Springs, Me., an International view of Admiral Beattie inspecting the Queen Elizabeth, and for both of these "Tommy Atkins" is played. Then we have International pictures of the men of the fighting Sixty-ninth leaving Germany for home, and views of the guns that helped to take the hill overlooking Sedan. Then the final punch is put in the Pictorial with another one of the pictures designed to boost the Victory Loan. This is titled, "For Conspicuous Gallantry," and distributed by Kinograms. It tells the exploits of Lieutenant Williams, who with one captured a German dugout and took all the inmates prisoners. "Battle of the Marne" is played for the action of the picture, and then with the title that this picture is presented in behalf of the Victory Loan, the full orchestra turns into the moving notes of, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," only the last four bars being used.

There is a beautiful John Wenger setting for Miss Marie Ball, a rendition of "Ave Maria." There is a window effect at the rear with a series of panels with the head of the Madonna and angels and one single small blue light. The singer, in a white robe, stands at the right of the stage, and renders the selection to the accompaniment of a violin obligato.

This is followed by the feature, Elsie Ferguson in "Eyes of the Soul," a really artistic picture that really requires such a delightful musical setting, as Dr. Riesenfeld has given it. At the screening, "Battle Hymn of the Republic," is used, and then with the title, "Miss Elsie Ferguson," we have the theme introduced, Fiblich's "Poem." Then for the scenes at the Palm Garden we have "Dream of the Ball," and then when Judge Malvin speaks to the manager, "Dialogue." After the title, "On the way home," where the girl and the press agent are together, "Clematis" is played, and when the girl says, "It has come to me," we have the theme again. Where she is dreaming that she won't have to cook any more, "Constance" is played.

"Pomp and Circumstance," as specially arranged, is mighty properly played for the introduction of Sergeant Gibson, with a pause when the auto strikes his wheel chair. When the girl discovers that he is blind, "Louise is used," "Pomp and Circumstance" is again used, as the girl steps out of the auto on the return trip, and then the theme, as she speaks to the soldier. At that point the organ takes up the music, but there are some striking effects gained in that period, for with the title, "When the Lusitania Was Sunk" we have the theme on the violin, and then after the girl is seen giving him the banjo and the flute, and then when she tells him that she wants him to teach her his song, we have it on the 'cello.

Orchestra comes back with the title, "Let's be happy to-night," and then the theme comes in when the girl urges him not to give up. Then again we have the scene at the Palm Garden, and here "My Dreamy" is played, changing to "Twilight" as the girl is seen, and then to two choruses from "Twilight," as she goes to the piano. "Ectasy" follows through, and then with the title, "And so once more" comes "Good-Night," and then with the scene with the baby we have the theme through to the end.

"In the Birdshop," the wonderful imitation selection that we have described to you before in these accounts is played, and then we have a clever Harold Lloyd comedy, "Your Mr. Jazz," is played at screening, and then with the title, "Six hours later" it turns to "Old-Timers' Waltz," with "Porcupine Patrol." As they are being robbed there is "Do Re Mi," and then with the title, "Everybody dance," "The African 400," and after the title, "The Cherry Sisters," there is a shift to "Shim Me, Sha Wabble," and then at the title, "Everybody rattle a toe," we have "Mr. Jazz Himself." Then when we are informed that father is being robbed "Frou Frou" is played, changing to "What's the Matter With Father?" as he and the pair are seen coming out of the cellar.

Francois Fetis' "March in D" is the organ solo.

Grauman Gets Special Song as Victory Loan Boost

Sid Grauman, of Grauman's Cinema Temple, Los Angeles, has found playing up the Victory Loan a very attractive feature for his program. Working with the Southern California Liberty Loan Committee in pre-loan propaganda, Mr. Grauman had a special Victory Loan song prepared. His orchestra leader, Arthur Kay, prepared the music, and Mr. Grauman himself wrote the lyric.

It is titled "Dig in Your Jeans and Buy." The words of the song were flashed on the screen, two lines at a time, while the music was played by the thirty-five piece orchestra. Immediately following this, stereopticon slides of the several Victory Loan lithographs were projected on the screen. Each slide was dissolved out, and the screen raised, and there was reproduced the picture in flesh and blood. The Victory Loan feature ended with the Miss Liberty picture, and real life interpretation of the same.

Live News from the Producers

Outing-Chester Shows Big Game in Africa

One of the features chosen by Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett for the super-program at the Strand, New York, during the big Fifth Anniversay Week which began April 20, was "Cameraring Through Africa," Part One, the Outing-Chester big game release.

This picture may be considered an unusual offering in the Outing-Chester series. It shows Charles Cottar, the famous big game hunter, in hand-to-paw battles with lions, and close shaves with rhinoceroses and other belligerent natives.

There are also hippopotamus families, dozens seen bathing in one pool or stretched out on the sand, crocodiles by the score, the almost mythical Greater Kudu, and great herds of zebra and giraffe, waterbuck and antelope.

New Health Picture Shown

The United States Government has enlisted the screen drama in behalf of a nation-wide campaign now being carried on by the U. S. Public Health Service, a division of the U. S. Treasury Department.

Before a number of high officials of this department of which Surgeon-General Blue is the head, the Warner Brothers held a private showing of their production, "Open Your Eyes," at the Knickerbocker theatre, Washington, D. C.

The result was that this picture will be released as the only official picture made especially for th U. S. Public Health Service.

Can't Break Contract

It was announced by wire from Los Angeles this week that the California Assembly has passed the Lyons bill, making possible the use of injunctions to prevent players breaking contracts until the picture upon which they are working is completed.

Foreign Plans for the Vitagraph

General Manager of Vitagraph's London Office Visits New York and Arranges For Foreign Expansion

George H. Smith, general manager of Vitagraph Company's London office

GEORGE H. SMITH, general manager of the Vitagraph Company of London, England, arrived in New York again last week on his way home.

Mr. Smith sailed for Europe on April 26, after having perfected arrangements for a remarkable expansion of Vitagraph's foreign business, now that war conditions make a resumption of normal business possible.

His last trip to America was in December, 1916, but his whole time in the United States on the occasion of that visit was scarcely a week. His present trip has embraced almost two months and he journeyed all the way out to Vitagraph's Hollywood studio and participated in the reunion of the Smith family in Santa Barbara, California.

"The entire amusement business in England is better than it has been in years," declared Mr. Smith. "We have a vast floating population in the big English centers. Troops and civilians from all over the world are travelling through England, hotels are crowded and picture theatres are doing the biggest business in their history.

"A big boom is coming for Vitagraph, and it was mainly for the sake of speeding up negatives for shipment abroad and for the closing of contracts for the company's export business that I came to America.

"When I get back to London, we are going to initiate a big campaign. We are going to install American booking methods throughout our organization on the other side and I am going to have my rental manager make a trip to America to study at first hand the rental methods employed here by Vitagraph.

"Before the outbreak of the war, and particularly up to the time of America's participation in it, we did a truly phenomenal export business through our London office. We covered the entire Eastern hemisphere with Vitagraph product and I dare say that no company had as big a representation in the Far East as Vitagraph had.

"When the war came, and particularly when America entered the war, the exportation of negatives was so limited that our export business naturally could not keep apace with the demand. Now that normal conditions are in sight once more, the London office will again take over the exportation of Vitagraph pictures to the Eastern hemisphere.

"We have closed a number of important contracts for Vitagraph productions, serials and two-reel comedies that will give the product of our Company a remarkable representation in the Eastern hemisphere, and within the next six months, I look to see a bigger Vitagraph export business than at any time in the Company's history.

"Even during the war years, we have done a remarkable business in the United Kingdom with the big Vitagraph Specials 'Over the Top,' 'The Common Cause,' and 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation.' 'The Battle Cry of Peace' we released in England under the name of 'The Americans' Home' and what the picture did stands as one of the big achievements of the cinema business in England.

"And you'd be surprised to know how popular Vitagraph serials are with English audiences. Take 'The Fighting Trail' as an example. The wonderful photography, the melodrama and the western atmosphere are apparently as popular with the folks in England as they are on this side of the pond."

George H. Smith is a brother of Albert E. Smith, President of the Vitagraph Company. His visit offered him the opportunity of participating in the reunion of the Smith family which occurred out in Santa Barbara, California, about the first of April.

For the first time in thirty years the father of Albert E. Smith, Mr. S. W. Smith, of Santa Barbara, had with him his entire family of children, seven sons and one daughter.

There were present at the reunion Albert E. Smith, President of the Vitagraph Company, George H. Smith, General Manager of Vitagraph's London Office; W. S. Smith, General Manager of Vitagraph's Hollywood Studios; David Smith, director at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood; John P. Smith, scenario writer in Vitagraph's Hollywood Studio; Lieutenant Arthur Victor Smith, who has just returned after twenty-two months of service in France with the American Expeditionary Forces, and Fred Smith, who is in business in Santa Barbara. Six of the brothers are associated with the Vitagraph Company. The sister, Mrs. E. H. Hunt, resides in Santa Barbara.

"Pictorial Life" to be Distinct Novelty

In announcing the early appearance of its new weekly release, "Pictorial Life," the Gaumont Company promises a distinct novelty.

"Pictorial Life" will not be modeled after any other release but will blaze its own trail—a trail which will be unusually brilliant, it is said, judging from the subjects selected for the first few issues.

Robertson-Cole Names Releases

Number of Big Productions Ready for Release Through Exhibitors Mutual Exchanges

AN imposing array of productions, which are expected to measure up in every respect to the high standard set by Robertson-Cole for all its photodramas, have been completed by various Robertson-Cole units for release through Exhibitors' Mutual.

William Desmond has just finished "The Mints of Hell," a stirring story of a mad hunt for flat gold, in the wild country where many a man has "eaten snow and kicked in." "The Mints of Hell" is successor to "Whitewashed Walls."

"The Courageous Coward," and eventful play relating the struggle of a man to oversome a supposed act of cowardice, but which was really the bravest deed a man could commit for a friend, is the latest Sessue Hayakawa contribution. Thomas J. Geraghty wrote the story.

The National Film Corporation proclaims "The Love Call," to which Billie Rhodes recently added the finishing touches , the best this star has done since producing for Robertson-Cole. It is a light comedy-drama, much on the type that has such popular appeal on the stage. In "Modern Husbands," which the National Film Corporation has just produced Henry Walthall, has a role which was made almost to order for him. The play is probably the strongest in popular appeal that Walthall has been supplied since joining National, and in his usual finished manner he has made the character he portrays a living person.

Having recovered from a recent illness, Alma Rubens is again back in the Brunton studios preparing her second picture, "Diane of the Green Van," Miss Rubens initial offering, has been received favorably everywhere. The second Rubens attraction is still unnamed, but is a story of the Yukon.

Martin Johnson, Jesse D. Hampton, Mrs. Osa Johnson, H. B. Warner and William Desmond, photographed as the Johnsons sailed for the South Seas to visit cannibals

"The Mints of Hell," the newest Desmond offering, was directed by Park Frame, under the supervision of Jesse D. Hampton from a story by James B. Hendryx. Many of the scenes were filmed in the heart of the Sierras at Truckee, Cal.

Bessie Barriscale is still devoting all her energies to making "Jozzelyn's Wife," taken from the novel by Kathleen Norris. Miss Barriscale is being directed by Howard Hickman, who did some notable work with her previous film features.

Thomas Ince Signs Ray for More Pictures

THOMAS H. INCE has just signed a new contract with Charles Ray whereby the latter will continue under his management for future Paramount Pictures.

In the renewal of the contract between Mr. Ray and Mr. Ince, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is assured the release of the product of one of the most popular and talented stars of motion pictures. Always a favorite with audiences —many critics have pronounced him the finest actor on the screen—Mr. Ray is today at the very pinnacle of his popularity.

Following two years' experience in repertoire companies, Mr. Ray came under the direction of Thomas H. Ince in 1915. He appeared for some time in two and three reel pictures in which he was required to perform all manner of hazardous feats. Then he flashed into a stardom over night in a picture titled "The Coward," and critics at once proclaimed him a "find."

During Paramount's current releasing year Mr. Ray has been seen in four productions, everyone of which it is said has taken its place among the biggest box-office attractions of the year. They are "The Law of the North," "String Beans," "The Girl Dodger" and "The Sheriff's Son." April 20 will mark the release of "Greased Lightning." Mr. Ray has also completed two other features under the supervision of Mr. Ince, "The Busher," and "Hay Foot, Straw Foot."

The new contract with Mr. Ray will allay many rumors as to his contemplated alignment with other producing and distributing organizations and the announcement will be received with satisfaction by Paramount exhibitors everywhere.

J. Stuart Blackton Resumes Production Work

J. Stuart Blackton is rapidly completing his plans for even greater production activity in the next few months and will commence a new production in his own studios in Brooklyn next week (May 1).

"A House Divided," his last production, will be handled here by the Independent Sales Corporation and abroad by Bech, Van Siclen & Co.

Reports Activity in State Right Market

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, reports unusual activity in the state right market. During the past few weeks the Aywon Corporation has sold much territory for their Security features.

Among the sales reported are to the Sterling Film Company, 1417 Farnum street, Omaha, Neb., Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

Also, the Savini Film Co., Atlanta, Ga., for Alabama, Georgia, and North and South Carolina.

To the Penn Film Service, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Negotiations for many of the other territories are pending and will shortly be closed.

Reports Keen Interest in Rothapfel Films

E. S. Flynn, special representative for Frank G. Hall and Samuel L. Rothapfel in marketing the Rothapfel Unit Program, returned to the New York offices of Independent Sales Corporation after a two weeks' trip through the New England territory in the interest of the Rothapfel program. Mr. Flynn reports a keen interest throughout the territory in the Rothapfel program and brought with him contracts from some of the biggest exhibitors.

To Handle Executive End for Rothapfel

Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, Inc., has been given the added responsibility of handling the executive end of the sales on the Rothapfel Unit program. With the release of the first Charles Miller production, started this week at the Bacon-Backer studio under the direction of Mr. Miller, Mr. Card will have another list of sales to promote. Mr. Card has the supervision of eighteen film clearing house exchanges.

Says 1919 Will be Banner Year for Industry

Following a tour of the United States, conferences with exhibitors and exchange men in many cities, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Co., is firmly convinced that 1919 is going to be a banner year for the motion picture industry and having supervised the production of several forthcoming Universal releases and laid plans for many others he is also firmly convinced that 1919 will be a banner year for his company.

"Everywhere I went, while traveling, I found business booming," said Mr. Laemmle. Regarding new productions Mr. Laemmle stated that no effort or expense is being spared to make every film play coming from Universal City the best on the market.

Allen Holubar is now producing another super-drama, "The Right to Happiness," with Dorothy Phillips, which will have a strong cast. "Prairie Gold," Mary MacLarren's latest completed production, "The Open Road," featuring Monroe Salisbury and "The Pinnacle," Eric von Stroheim's production are all big Universal features.

Plans Exploitation of Fischer Production

David G. Fischer Productions, which has recently released through the Arrow Film Corporation the seven-reel feature, "The Law of Nature," is at work at Miami, Fla., on a second production. The new feature, which will also be released through Arrow, is entitled "When Bonds are Loosed," and is from the novel of that name.

It is said that David G. Fischer has an excellent company of artists at work in Miami and that the picture will be completed within a short time. The release date has not been announced, but plans for the exploitation of the production are being completed by the sales and advertising department of Arrow.

Socialism Not Attacked By Film

Select Pictures Declares That "Bolshevism On Trial" For Entertainment Purposes Only and Not Propaganda

ACCORDING to reports reaching Select Pictures Corporation, distributors of "Bolshevism On Trial," an erroneous impression has arisen that this production combines ill-advised propaganda with an attack on Socialism. Select declares that it is not a propaganda picture, and is not directed against Socialism.

"Bolshevism On Trial" was produced by the Mayflower Pictures Corporation, of which Isaac Wolper is president. It is based on the novel "Comrades," by Thomas Dixon, and was written months before the word Bolshevism originated. An impression that "Bolshevism On Trial" is an attack on Socialism has recently gained considerable headway in motion picture circles, and a report has even reached the officials of the Department of Justice at Washington, that injudicious methods were being resorted to in the picture's exploitation, and were calculated to create riots and disturbances.

Select, therefore, emphatically declares that "Bolshevism On Trial" is in no manner an attack on the Socialist party, nor it is propaganda. On the contrary, the production is designed purely for entertainment. Select has circulated no advertisement or publicity, either directly or indirectly, advising methods which might create a riot, or which are opposed to the orderly procedure of American communities, and recognized as such by the Federal Government.

In the Select advertising, there has been no attempt to connect "Bolshevism On Trial" with the Socialist movement, nor is there included in the story any unfavorable propaganda against this form of government.

Exhibitors in every section of the country are said to be clamoring for early dates on this attraction. With the popular discussion of Bolshevism and its evils at its present height, no more timely nor momentous attraction could be offered; and Select heartily regrets that the erroneous impression has gone forth that this production is propaganda or unfriendly to the Socialist party.

"Heart of Humanity" Big Success in Canada

ADVICES from Canadian exhibitors who have played and are now playing "The Heart of Humanity," bring out the fact that the big Holubar-Jewel super drama is proving, it is said, to be the greatest film attraction ever shown in the dominion.

Exhibitors say their patrons are pleased with the Canadian atmosphere of the film.

At the Province theatre, Winnipeg, Man., "The Heart of Humanity" played its first week to business so great, it is claimed, that any previous box office and attendance record was almost doubled. The theatre will begin a second week's run of the production April 21. At Vancouver the film play also proved such a tremendous success, it is said, that it will be shown a second week at the Dominion theatre. The film began a week's run at Calgary, April 14 and at Saskatoon on the same day, following a big week's business at Moose Jaw.

In Eastern Canada, where the film is playing its second runs at Montreal and Toronto, record business has been the rule at the theatres according to reports forwarded to Universal exchanges by managers. In a telegram sent to Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, Manager Schuberg of the Province theatre, Winnipeg, told of the success of "The Heart of Humanity" at his theatre the first week, as follows:

CARL LAEMMLE,
Universal Film Co.,
New York, N. Y.:

Opening day people standing in line for four hours in terrible rain storm. Every former city attendance and box office record smashed to smithereens. "Heart of Humanity" record almost double any previous Province record.

Davies Latest Subject Nears Completion

Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle is nearing completion in the Paragon studio at Fort Lee, under Allan Dwan, and it is said that this is one of the most pretentious features put out this season by any company, and one in which Miss Davies is seen to the very best advantage. The picture was begun three and a half weeks ago, at Paragon, which C. F. Zeitel leased for the Select star and a record has been made in completing it. At present it stands seven reels, enjoys three locales for its exteriors, and its cast includes Norman Kerry, Matt Moore, Dorothy Green, Fred Hearn, George Cooper, Arthur Earle, Ward Crane.

Universal Changes In Canal Zone

Organization Appoints Executives to Take Charge of Business Which Has Become Popular

WITH a view of increasing its distribution in Central America, Universal has announced several important changes in its exchange staff at Christobal, Panama, and at Mexico City.

Charles L. Brookheim, who for several years has been in charge of the Universal exchange in the Canal Zone and who is intimately acquainted with the conditions in Colombia, Gautemala and Mexico has been appointed manager of the new Universal exchange at Mexico City. Heretofore Universal products have been distributed throughout Mexico by independent companies but the office of which Mr. Brookheim is to be manager is directly under the jurisdiction of George E. Kann, head of the Universal export department in New York. In establishing the Universal exchange in Mexico City, the export department has also engaged W. M. Chambers, who during the war represented the film department of the United States Committee on Public Information in the Mexican capitol. Mr. Chambers will not only act as assistant manager of the Mexico City exchange but will look after publicity throughout the Central American country.

To fill the position vacated by Mr. Brookheim, Universal has chosen Monroe Isen, who for six years has been a salesman in the New York Universal exchange. Mr. Isen is one of Universal's youngest salesmen. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, states that the opening of an office in Mexico City, under the direct jurisdiction of the Universal export department was but one of the many changes to be made in the Big U foreign distribution during 1918. According to reports received from Central America, Universal films have become very popular during the past few years, according to Mr. Laemmle. "The Heart of Humanity," which has been breaking records with regularity in the United States and Canada will be shown for the first time in Central America shortly at Cristobal, Colon, and Mexico City. Reports from the Central American exchanges show it is said that "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and "Crashing Through to Berlin" have been great box office attractions in the Canal Zone. Serials Western dramas and Western features have become very popular in Mexico according to Mr. Laemmle.

Wm. Fox to Release Six Productions in May

WILLIAM FOX will release during May, six dramatic feature pictures, each differing entirely from the other in theme. A powerful drama, a romance of the Orient, an exciting comedy-drama, a thrilling western story, a delightful romance of a young couple's struggle, and a sprightly adventure story.

The releases for May are divided into Standard Pictures, two Victory Pictures and two Excel Pictures.

"The Siren's Song," a super-production staged by J. Gordon Edwards, tells a powerful story of a singer's sacrifice to prove her love. Its scenes are laid in Paris and Brittany.

Tom Mix will have a release in May—"The Coming of the Law." In this one he maintains the same high standard that has marked his previous Victory Pictures, and the result is said to be a five-reel film that is packed with thrills. The picture is based on a popular novel by Charles Alden Seltzer and was staged by Arthur Rosson.

"A Fallen Idol," is the title of the Evelyn Nesbit picture to be issued next month. The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and was staged by Kenean Buel.

Following the success scored by "Pitfalls of a Big City," her latest photoplay, Gladys Brockwell will have another strong offering in "The Divorce Trap." This picture, directed by Frank Beal, is a tragedy of modern divorce.

Peggy Hyland's release during May will be "Miss Adventure." It tells the story of a child who falls into the hands of a smuggler, is rescued by an honest sea captain and grows up in a tiny fishing village.

Albert Ray will see his second William Fox picture released next month. This is "Words and Music By——"

Sheldon Says His Latest Is His Very Best

E. Lloyd Sheldon, writer of scenari who has written the scripts of nearly hundred film productions, from program fillers to big special attractions, says in his opinion "Wolves of the Night," starring William Farnum, is the best work he has done.

"Wolves of the Night" was recently finished by Farnum in California, being the first of a series of big productions which the star arranged to make upon the signing of a new contract with William Fox. The picture was made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, who staged "Salome," "Cleopatra" and other big Fox spectacle dramas.

"Getting Mary Married" Is Boosted

Marion Davies' latest Select Picture, "Getting Mary Married," released early in April and now being distributed to first-run theatres throughout the country, is declared by many prominent exhibitors to be the best picture Miss Davies has ever made. The story was an original one by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It was directed by Allan Dwan.

In no other picture in which Miss Davies has starred it is said has she appeared to such excellent advantage as in this feature.

Beranger Continuity Reaches the Screen

The announcement recently by Famous Players-Lasky that "Come Out of the Kitchen," starring Marguerite Clark, has been completed, and may be expected on the screens of the country within the near future, carried added interest to exhibitors through the fact that Clara Beranger did the continuity for the picture.

Miss Beranger, one of the foremost free lance writers in the motion picture industry, is supplying Famous Players-Lasky with a continuity at the rate of at least one a month under an agreement recently arranged. This permits Miss Beranger to continue her work for other producing organizations, and to devote some time to original stories.

Immediately upon the completion of the filming of "Come Out of the Kitchen," which was adapted from the stage production, Marguerite Clark prepared for a journey to Los Angeles, where the camera is scheduled to begin grinding on Miss Beranger's continuity for "Girls," also from the stage play, while in Florida, Irene Castle is at work on Miss Beranger's adaptation of "The Firing Line."

"Virtuous Men" Reports Many Offers

"Virtuous Men," the special feature produced by S-L Pictures, bids fair to become one of the state rights sensations of the present season, it is said. Following various offers from leading distributors desirous of buying "Virtuous Men" Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have decided that this attraction will receive the widest exploitation through the medium of territorial sale. The picture, which stars E. K. Lincoln, was personally directed by Ralph Ince and is described as containing at least six distinct "thrills." Offers are said to have been received from prominent territorial purchasers in every part of the United States and Canada, and contracts have been practically closed with more than one half the territory embraced by the United States. Sawyer and Lubin believe that all records in the matter of state rights sale will be broken with this picture.

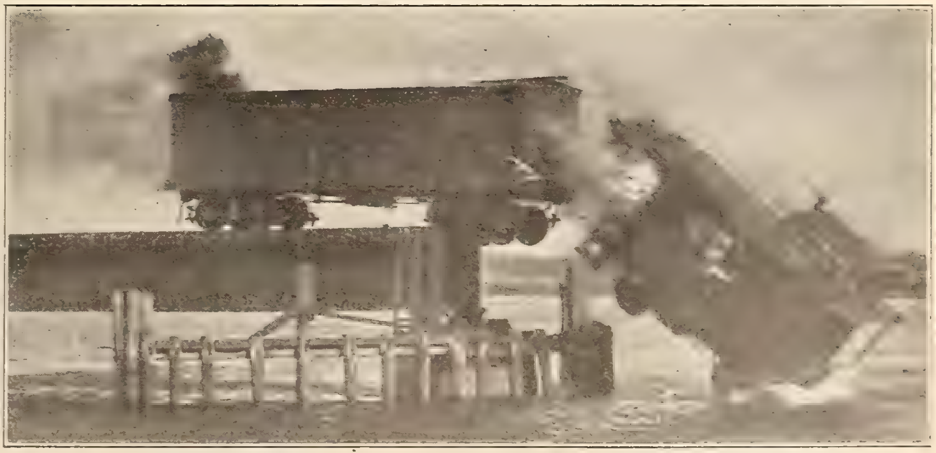
Triangle Eulogizes Holmes in "Taxi"

It is the unanimous opinion of Triangle's executive staff that "Taxi," Taylor Holmes' latest comedy, which they viewed at a private showing last week, is the smoothest and most swiftly running vehicle in which their star has ever been presented. "Taxi" runs swiftly, with a snap and a dash, but why shouldn't it?" remarked Triangle's publicity representative, "for, you see, it's well greased with laughs."

George Agnew Chamberlain is the author.

Mr. Holmes plays Robert Hervey Randolph, of an old New York family, who loses his fortune when the rightful heir, a little girl, is discovered in the back row of the chorus. When Taylor finds her, he sacrifices his income and seeks work as a taxi driver. As a chauffeur Holmes proves to be altruistic, and future events develop a strong love and mystery plot.

The cast includes Maude Eburne, Lillian Hall, Irene Tams and Fred Tiden.



Realistic is the Real Name to Use in Describing the Wreck in the William Fox Production of "Checkers"

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gives you an inkling here of what to expect in three of its current offerings. On the left Ernest Truex and Louise Huff seem very congenial in " Oh, You Women," a Paramount production, and on the right Elsie Ferguson appears to be enjoying a little music in " Eyes of the Soul," an Artcraft picture. The center panel shows that Catherine Calvert has not lost any of her beauty since joining Paramount. She is starring in a screen adaption of Elinor Glyn's famous novel, " The Career of Katherine Bush."

Famous Players Active in East

Four Companies Will Soon Be Working in Eastern Studios for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

WITH four big productions in work or in immediate contemplation, the next few weeks promise to be replete with busy activity at the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Catherine Calvert has already started " The Career of Katherine Bush " at the Fifty-sixth Street studio and Billie Burke is scheduled to begin " Billeted," the first of her series of Paramount pictures under her new contract, April 28, probably at Fort Lee. Meanwhile Elsie Ferguson is well along in the production of " The Avalanche," her new Artcraft picture which George Fitzmaurice is directing at Fifty-sixth street, and Irene Castle with Director Charles Maigne and her supporting company, will be back from Florida in a couple of weeks to film the interiors for " The Firing Line."

Dorothy Dalton waving goodbye to Los Angeles upon her recent start to New York

" The Career of Katherine Bush," scenarized by Kathryn Stuart from Elinor Glyn's sensational novel, promises to be one of the big attractions of the year. The theme treats of the numerous and varied love affairs of a girl of humble parentage who through her own ambition finds herself playing with the hearts of divers scions of English aristocracy.

Directing Miss Calvert is R. William Neill, long one of the " aces " of Thomas H. Ince's directorial staff, who came on from California specially for this production.

Billie Burke, just home from a long vacation spent in Florida, is busily engaged in selecting the gowns which she will wear in " Billeted," which starts the latter part of the week. Frances Marion adapted this successful comedy in which Margaret Anglin appeared for nearly a year. The play was written by F. Tennyson-Tesse and H. M. Harwood. The central figures are two young women, one supposedly a widow, and two wounded American officers who, on account of the nearby Army hospital being crowded, are billeted at the home of the young " widow " pending their recovery. The scandal-scenting neighbors are up in arms over the situation created and are dismayed and disappointed when one of the officers turns out to be the " widow's " own husband.

John S. Robertson will direct.

Word comes from Director Charles Maigne that he is making rapid progress with the new Irene Castle picture, " The Firing Line." Miami is the headquarters of the company, but frequent location trips are being taken to Lauderdale, Atlantic Beach and other points.

Frank Keenan Shows New Picture at Studio in Los Angeles

Frank Keenan entertained a party of 40 at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, one evening recently at a pre-view of "The Gates of Brass," a five-part drama, which the actor-producer regards as his best screen production.

Mr. Keenan has the role of "Jim" Blake, a tin-horn gambler, who amasses a fortune in the promotion of waterless desert lands in the Southwest. His great wealth brings him neither happiness nor health, and in the end he loses everything, including his life.

The scenario is by Jack Cunningham from an original story by Mrs. Kate Corbaley. Ernest C. Warde staged and directed the production. In the cast are Lois Wilson, George Fisher, Edwin Tilton, Lillian Langdon, Clyde Benson and Tom Bates. Charles Kaufman did the photography.

Exhibitors Smash Records with "Salome" in Many Sections

"Salome," William Fox's super production, with Theda Bara as the star, after breaking all records for Fox Pictures, is pushing on to new triumphs, it is stated by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. Reports are coming in daily, it is stated, showing that this picture is crowding houses everywhere and forcing exhibitors to make repeat bookings.

In Pittsburgh, where it played a two weeks' engagement, it is said to be the biggest money maker of the year.

Reports come from other cities throughout the West, it is said, that managers have been compelled to book the picture for a return engagement, in order to accommodate the crowds. At Cedar Rapids, Ia., a number of ministers who saw the picture are said to have acclaimed "Salome" a true and accurate portrayal of the tragic story of the daughter of Herodias.

Gymnasium for Western Photoplay Artists at Crystal

Joseph A. Golden, who personally directs Western Photoplays, believes that the "punch" is the thing in a serial production, and in pursuance of this belief he has injected an unusual amount of thrilling escapades in his present production, "The Great Gamble," which will be released on the Pathe program.

As the majority of these feats are performed by Charles Hutchison, who co-stars with Anne Luther in the fifteen episodes, it is necessary that the actor keep in unusually fine trim, and last week A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the concern, held a consultation with Mr. Golden.

The upshot of it was that a gymnasium has been erected on the roof of the Crystal studios, the headquarters of their serial operations.

"Common Clay" Gets Long Run

Pathe Picture Runs for Three Weeks at the Olympia, Boston, and Is Duplicating Its Success in Canada

NATHAN GORDON, head of the Gordon Bros. Amusement Company, one of New England's biggest motion picture circuits, is congratulating himself, it is said, on the manner in whch he and A. M. Holah, Boston's Pathe Branch Manager, "put over" the phenomenal first-run of "Common Clay," Pathe's seven-reel special feature at Gordon's Olympia, Boston.

"Common Clay" enjoyed the most successful first-run in the city of Boston of any picture released to date, it is declared. The contract was closed for an indefinite run, and, for the first time in the history of motion pictures in Boston, it is said, "Common Clay" extended its first run to three solid weeks.

As a proof of the enormous drawing power of this production the management of Gordon's Olympia stated, it is said, that they handled more people during the engagement of "Common Clay" than ever before in the entire history of the house, and that it was necessary daily to give an extra performance to satisfy the crowds during the last two weeks of its run, thereby making it necessary to eliminate the vaudeville part of the bill.

"Common Clay" was also booked by the Gordon Bros. for their entire circuit, including the Strand theatre, Dorchester, for six days, where three days for any picture had always been the previous policy, it is said.

The picture adds to its success in the United States "the complete captive of Canada," is the manner in which the fact is announced by Mr. L. Ernest Ouimet, president of Specialty Film Import, Ltd., in a letter to Pathe Exchange. H. W. Conover, of the Imperial theatre, Montreal, called it "one of the greatest offerings of the year," and writing to Mr. Ouimet, said:

"It will no doubt be gratifying to you to know it was a tremendous success."

W. P. Dewees, of Vancouver, a leading Western exhibitor and purchasing representative for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has bought "Common Clay" for the entire circuit.

Tenth Episode of "The Red Glove" Exciting

AFTER revealing the fact that in the explosion which brings to a close the ninth episode of "The Red Glove," Universal's, current serial, the heroine, Billie, played by Marie Walcamp, is thrown into the water, and though bruised, is not killed, the tenth chapter of the serial shows Wiley and the Vulture trailing the girl to her new home with the Halstead's.

Hauled from the water by the captain of a passing tug, following explosion of the barge, Billie having mailed the deed to the oil wells to herself in care of the Halsteads, goes to the residence of the latter to introduce herself to the administrator of her estate. Once in the home she learns that the crafty Wiley is a visitor, and that her maid has been bribed into spying on her. After having foiled an attempt of her maid to obtain the deed from a bureau drawer, Billie finds a poker game in which the younger Halstead is participating, in progress. Watching the game intently, Billie discovers that one of the players is cheating. Realizing that should the younger Halstead's losses become known to his family serious trouble would develop, Billie accuses one of the players of cheating, and proving his guilt drives him from the home. This act wins her the admiration of Halstead.

Fearing that the maid will get the red glove and the deed which is inclosed in it, Billie decides to take both to Tia Juana. Hiring a taxi, Billie goes to the home of Juana, followed by the maid and the Vulture, where a fight takes place between the Vulture, Jose and Billie's chauffeur, Billy escapes with the red glove and is followed by the Vulture, who has broken away. She drives for the ferry, but the boat having pulled out, is unable to stop her car and falls into the bay.

The title for the tenth episode is "Out of Death's Shadow," and that of the succeeding one, "In the Depths of the Sea."

"Unpardonable Sin" Courts Jinx

Opens During Holy Week and on the Thirteenth at Kinema in Los Angeles for Indefinite Run

AFTER demonstrating that a national premiere of a special film production could be made outside the city of New York, by opening at Detroit for more than $25,000 on the first week, "The Unpardonable Sin" again courted the "jinx" by not only selecting the "thirteenth" as an opening date at the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles, but starting there during Holy Week as well.

Furthermore, the producers are to open the New York run on Friday, which is said to be generally considered a "hoodoo" by all showmen of the old school.

"At the Broadway Strand in Detroit, the California in San Francisco, the Randolph at Chicago, and the Kinema at Los Angeles, the leading theatres in four of the principal cities of the country, 'The Unpardonable Sin' broke all existing house records," declared W. H. Rudolphe, eastern representative, who has just returned from Chicago, where he assisted in the exploitation of the production for that city.

"The New York City opening will be at the Broadway theatre, Friday, May 2, and the Moss interests, which have recently acquired this theatre, expect to run the production all summer. The receipts at Los Angeles Kinema theatre for the first week's run was $15,841," concluded Mr. Rudolphe.

Reports from the West Coast state that Harry Garson's production, "The Unpardonable Sin," made by Marshall Neilan, opened Sunday, April 13, at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, for an indefinite run with a two-a-day policy, and the first four days of the week played to capacity evenings, and very good attendance at matinees.

While this record is not as big as the one made by this picture in Detroit, even though the Los Angeles showng is in a larger house, it is due to the fact that but two showings are made each day, and therefore, the Los Angeles showing is not to as many people as would be possible under the continuous performance policy.

The admission prices are as high as any previously charged for a motion picture presentation, the top prices for evenings being one dollar for the 200 loge seats, seventy-five cents for practically all of the main floor, fifty cents for the balance, and twenty-five cents for top of the balcony. Matinee prices are twenty-five, fifty and seventy-five cents. In all instances the war tax is in addition to the prices.

Producer Garson is more than pleased with the attendance at the Los Angeles showing, and is emphatic in his claims that the policy adopted for this presentation with respect to reserving all seats of the theatre, will ultimately be the policy in all high-classed theatres where the better productions are presented.

"No one in the audience is disturbed during the showing of the picture," Mr. Carson said, "and I think this is one of the requirements necessary for the success of a production. Under this plan all have their seats before the curtain is raised, and the screen is therefore always in perfect view of everyone in the auditorium.

"Missing a sub-title, or a short highly important scene, frequently causes one to form an adverse opinion of a production, and this possibly is overcome by having every one in their seats during the entire showing."

Three Ford Educationals for May Release

The Ford Educational Weekly, which under Goldwyn distribution is now being shown in close to 5,000 theatres throughout the country, discloses three interesting topics in the coming issues. They are:

May 4—"Going Up"—climbing Mount Hood.

May 11—"Can the Poor Fish"—a picturization of the salmon industry.

May 18—"A Wild Goose Chase"—hunting wild geese with a camera.

The Weekly has a first-run account in every American city of ten thousand population, it is declared.

Strand Pays Chester High Compliment

One of the features chosen by managing director Joseph L. Plunkett for the super-program at the Strand, New York, during the big Fifth Anniversary Week of April 20, was the first half of "Cameraing Through Africa," the Outing-Chester big game release. And C. L. Chester feels that Mr. Plunkett paid his productions a high compliment in retaining with honors the regular weekly release on such a program. The Strand's managing director for many months has had a keen eye peeled for material that would make his birthday week one to be remembered until next April, and he cast it ahead of the Outing-Chester series, and called the contemporaneous release worthy.

Outing-Chesters are regular weekly events at the Strand, and that is why Mr. Chester feels so good. He feels that it would have been a matter for pride had Mr. Plunkett selected this as a special release for anniversary week only. But to be running the series each week, and to keep it as one of the carefully-weighed-and-found-worthy features for the event of the Strand's year, this Chester considers the highest compliment that could be paid the quality of his weekly offerings.

Dorothy Gish Success Passes Expectations

It is less than nine months since Dorothy Gish started work on the first picture of her own Paramount series. The progress made in those nine months is said to have surpassed the most sanguine expectations of everyone connected with her productions.

Exhibitors' reports on "Battling Jane" gave Dorothy a reception that marked her success. When "The Hope Chest" found its way to the screens, they increased the number of adjectives and stretched out the bookings. And the way in which "Boots" was received can best be told by the way J. A. Partington of the Imperial Theatre in San Francisco, explains it during a recent visit to the studio in Hollywood.

Vitagraph Closes Deal In Chicago

Ascher Brothers Enterprises Contracts For Vitagraph's Feature Star Releases For Fifteen Theatres

Gladys Leslie is the Vitagraph star in "A Stitch in Time"

ANNOUNCEMENTS come from Vitagraph that it has scored heavily this week in the matter of accomplishment with the signing of a contract with Ascher Brothers Enterprises, Chicago, whereby the fifteen Chicago and Rockford houses controlled by Ascher Brothers will play all of Vitagraph's feature stars' releases.

All of the Earle Williams pictures, the Alice Joyce pictures, the Harry T. Morey pictures, the Bessie Love pictures, the Corinne Griffith pictures and the Gladys Leslie pictures will therefore play over the entire Ascher Circuit, giving Vitagraph's features a dominant place on the screens in Chicago.

The Ascher Circuit includes the Oakland Square, the Metropolitan, the Milford, the Kenwood, the Cosmopolitan, the Frolic, the Terminal, the Adelphi, the Peerless, the Columbus, the Calo, the Lane Court, the Chateau, the Rosewood, and the Midway, Rockford,. Ill. In announcing the signing of the Ascher Brothers contract, the Vitagraph statement expressed particular gratification over the fact that the Ascher contract has been signed, not on a preliminary announcement of what Vitagraph's features will be, but after the many months that the Vitagraph pictures have been on the market on their present basis.

In other words, Vitagraph looks upon the Ascher contract as the most substantial form of testimonial of its product, for in signing the contract, they declare that Ascher Brothers are taking over a known quantity; are signing for a line of product that has demonstrated its boxoffice value.

"The signing of the contract by Ascher Brothers," says the Vitagraph statement, "is the result of performance, not of promise. It is not what we hope that Vitagraph pictures will do, that has prompted the Ascher contract; it is what Ascher Brothers know that Vitagraph pictures are now doing that closed the deal.

"This contract is typical of what hundreds of exhibitors all over the country are now doing. Vitagraph is to-day serving more theatres than at any time in its history, and the Ascher contract is just an indication of the heavy trend Vitagraph-wards that has been brought about by the consistent quality of the company's releases."

Larry Semon Comedies Book in Big Centers

WITH the closing of a contract by the Strand Theatre, of San Francisco for first run on Vitagraph's Larry Semon Comedies, Vitagraph reports that first run arrangements have been perfected for these comedies in every important center in the United States.

Considering that the Larry Semon Comedies are but a recent addition to Vitagraph service, this promptness with which the exhibitors have booked them is taken to speak for the showmen's estimate of their value.

The first Larry Semon Comedy released was called "Well I'll Be ——!" and his next, which will be released very shortly, is called "Passing the Buck."

Larry Semon not only writes and directs these comedies but also appears in them.

Another rather unusual evidence of popularity comes to Vitagraph's Anita Stewart productions through the rapidity with which return dates are being booked by exhibitors who have played Vitagraph's first Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," and who have booked, but not yet played the second production, "Two Women."

"From Headquarters" was released on March 10th and was booked in the big Metropolitan circuits including Fox, Moss and Poli in the East and the big Chains in the Middle West and Far West.

"Two Women" was released on April 28th, yet a great many exhibitors with "Two Women" on their books for forthcoming showing have already booked a return date on "From Headquarters," according to reports.

"From Headquarters" and "Two Women" were directed by Ralph Ince and were edited by George Randolph Chester. "From Headquarters" is a tense police drama and "Two Women" is a James Oliver Curwood story of a different type from the first Anita Stewart release. "From Headquarters" enjoyed a big pre-release write-up but judging from statements made by the Vitagraph home office, "Two Women" is expecting an even bigged advance booking to its credit.

Names Schedule for Michelena

Robertson-Cole Announces First of the Star's Series for Release Through Exhibitors Mutual

THE entire series of three productions, upon which Beatriz Michelena, noted star of the screen, and her own company have been working for more than a year, has been purchased by Robertson-Cole Company. This announcement follows the statement issued by this organization last week, to the effect that "Just Squaw," first of the series, had been purchased for release through Exhibitors Mutual.

"Just Squaw" has been made ready for release, and in order there will follow "The Deadline" and "The Spitfire," each a stirring drama of life in the great West.

The acquisition of the three Michelena attractions by Robertson-Cole is just one more indication of the intensity with which this fast growing company is striding toward leadership in the motion picture field. Many deals in the past have compelled general recognition of this international factor, but perhaps none more so than does the purchase of the Michelena pictures.

George Middleton, who directed this feature which will shortly be screened for the first time in New York, also directed "The Deadline" and "The Spitfire." This director's work has always been beyond reproach, and his efforts with the Michelena series has outdone anything he has previously attempted, it is said, in the filming of screen dramas.

There will be many distinctive features to make the Michelena contributions to the silent drama noteworthy.

Not the least of these will be the incorporation of the most distinctive line of titling—something entirely new, it is said.

These new titles are simplicity personified. They lack any bombast, but are so simple that they are direct and right to the point.

"Just Squaw" is expected to give the Michelena series a flying start. Combining all the elements of good melodrama with its barrier of blood, it contains a powerful appeal to motion picture audiences.

The story is written by Earl Snell, who is well known for his ability to depict the characters of the West. It is believed to surpass the best previous efforts of this talented author, fortunate in having his work interpreted by such a capable artist as director George Middleton.

Christie Closes Territory on Two-Reel Specials

C. H. Christie, who is now in New York in the interest of Christie Comedies and Christie two-reel Special productions, which were recently launched, has announced that all territory for the United States and foreign countries has been closed for the new two-reel Specials.

Booking arrangements have already been in operation for all this territory for the Christie one-reel comedies, and the closing of all territory for the Specials was completed during Mr. C. H. Christie's Eastern tour.

Several new booking firms are to handle the new Christie productions.

Paramount Analyzes Box Office Values

Analysis of box office values of all Paramount and Artcraft pictures produced during the past year, made by the Production Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and based on reports from first-run exhibitors in all sections of the country, shows not only a steady upward trend of the drawing power and qualities of the pictures themselves, but the remarkable fluidity with which box office receipts respond to general national conditions in business and industrial life.

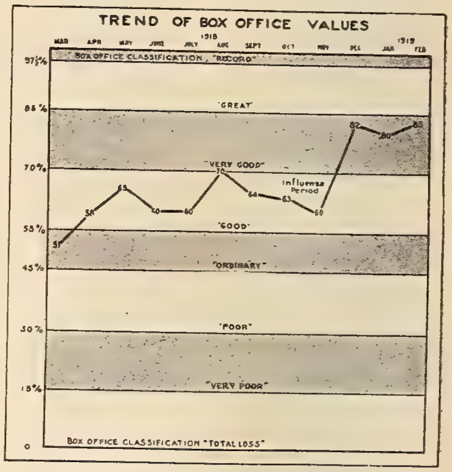

Chart prepared by Famous Players-Lasky to show the box office value of films

Analysis from the receipts themselves shows that in the three months' period December, 1918, to February, 1919, only six subjects did not qualify as "good," which was the average classification of the entire output in the nine months preceding December, 1918.

The last three months' period shown in the chart covers thirty-nine releases, as compared with ninety releases in the preceding nine months. The average classification of the ninety releases is "good" and of the thirty-nine releases, "very good," and within three per cent of "great." The ninety releases included ten "record" features. The thirty-nine releases included eleven "record" features, comprising one Griffith, one DeMille, one Hart, one Ferguson, one Ray, one Fairbanks, one Washburn, two Gish and two Reid subjects. "Record" productions are those reaching a percentage of 97½, or practically universal box office success.

Priscilla Dean in "Exquisite Thief"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show this picture and who have shown other Priscilla Dean offerings know that her personality should be played strong. If this is the first time you have used one of her vehicles you should make up your mind to put a whole lot more pep and punch in your advertising than you do in most pictures.

In "The Exquisite Thief" you have an attractive title, especially when connected with one of the attractive pictures of the star in evening gown and carrying her automatic. There is no question about getting the attention and then it is left for you to build the selling argument around the story and to show that this is a picture whose ending will satisfy even the most prudish.

Don't tell too much about the story. There is far more action in this picture than in most and until almost the final turn of the projection machine your patrons will not know exactly how it is going to end. Keeping the climax and the turnings of the plot a secret not only increases the enjoyment of your audiences, but creates word of mouth advertising far more valuable than any recital of the story in your advertising and in newspaper stories.

THIS is taken from a story which appeared in the Detective Stories Magazine: Blue Jean Billie was a dazzling mystery to the police. The whole force was hunting this beautiful, handsomely gowned girl robber, but they were without a trace. We are introduced to her in an apartment in company with Shaver Michael who is not only her partner in theft, but madly in love with her. "There is only one I can love and trust," she replies to his hundredth proposal, and indicates her revolver.

The only description the police have of the girl is that she is "dazzling," and when one sees her in evening dress as she starts for the Vanderflips party one admits that they are right. Shaver accompanies her as her chauffeur and remains at the wheel as the girl alone enters the house, timing her arrival so that all the guests will be at dinner, given to announce the engagement of the millionaire's daughter, Muriel, to Lord Chesterton.

Posing first as a guest who is looking for a lost jewel she makes a prisoner of the detective sent there to watch the jewels and binds him and then enters the dining room, pistol in hand, closing the door behind her. The orchestra in the balcony stops playing, but at the point of her gun she makes them resume and then proceeds to relieve the guests of their jewels. Chesterton deftly removes the necklace of his fiance in his attempt to save it, but Billie is too clever for him and he has to come across with it as well as the engagement ring.

THEN the escape and the thrilling auto chase in the night. They throw off all the pursuers but Chesterton who has hidden himself on the running board and it is not until the two crooks arrive in front of the girl's place that he is discovered and made a prisoner. He is tied hand and foot to a chair and gagged before Shaver leaves and Billie goes to another room to change her clothes. Chesterton is clever, too, and he releases himself, arranging the cords so that he appears to still be tied. Then there follows the scene at the table with the girl giving him coffee and the romance just starting to bud.

In the meantime the police are busy on the case and Detective Sergeant Wood, much to the indignation of the Vanderflips insists on looking up Chesterton in the rogues gallery of foreign crooks. Then hearing that some of the stool pigeons of the police have seen the exquisite thief Wood seeks to get the information from them, but a girl member of the band is too wise for him and convinces the others that they should go after the loot for themselves. Then follows the battle with the girl making her escape through the window carrying the jewels with her and Chesterton also fleeing as Shaver comes back and engages the crooks in a revolver battle. The police arrive and take him prisoner. But they are unable to extract from him the slightest information. He simply replies that he is her chauffeur and knows nothing more.

AS a refuge after her big jobs Billie has a cabin in the mountains far away from the city and to this she escapes, closely followed by Chesterton. There she changes to simpler garb and when she goes out to gather firewood Chesterton slips into the cabin and his first act is to take the cartridges from her pistol. When she comes back she seizes the gun from the table and he permits himself to be made a prisoner again. But Billie has used the same cunning in her retreat as in her robberies and in an adjoining room there is a regular cell to which Chesterton is escorted.

But soon she relents and makes him a "trusty" and their love begins to ripen quickly. At first she jokes with him and as he replies to her question that the wedding of the heiress will never take place

At right, she binds the Englishman in her apartment; center, she pretends to the detective to be a country girl, and at left, Shaver is caught with the goods

she replies sarcastically: "I know—you met me and it has changed your whole life." And then a little later on, "You are breaking my heart." Then he begs her to send the jewels back and to go straight hereafter, but at first she will not listen to the suggestion, but instead gets her gun again and puts him back in the cell. It is then that Chesterton tells her "You'd better load it, for you'll be all alone tonight."

Yet she is convinced he is right about the jewels and she goes to get them, her true sentiment aroused as she fondles his ring. With the new day comes the dawn of a new hope and the girl resolved on the straight path hereafter.

UNABLE to get him to talk the police have freed Shaver and Sergt. Wood starts out to follow the chauffeur, sure that he will go straight to the girl. The scenes that follow there are too rapidly changing to be told in detail. The girl first tries to fool Wood, but he discovers her identity. Then Shaver arrives and when he finds that the girl loves Chesterton and is about to return the jewels he attempts to steal them and Chesterton goes after him. The action winds up with both Shaver and Wood locked in the cell, Chesterton, now himself revealing that he was merely posing as a lord and that he is a reformed English crook who was known to the police as "Lord Harry" they start down the road to a new life.

The Vanderflips are satisfied to get the jewels back especially since they are faced with the exposure of "Lord Chesterton." A note from the girl freeing him of blame brings final liberty to Shaver.

FOR exhibitors who are having their own cuts made and designing their advertising we would strongly recommend the use of the picture of Miss Dean in evening dress pointing her gun at the detective. Eliminate all but her figure. Then let's jump right into it

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

"For months and months the rich society people had been robbed of their priceless gems by a girl thief. The only description that the police had was that she was DAZZLING. You'll admit that when you see Priscilla Dean in evening gown, gun in hand. She certainly is the EXQUISITE thief.

"Just when the police had been told that they had to land her in twenyt-four hours she walked into the dining room where a millionaire was announcing the engagement of his daughter to an English Lord. She took the jewels of all of them and then made good her escape—except for the Englishman.

"It was her last robbery—she didn't get caught by the police—but something far stronger nabbed her. We'll promise you more thrills than you ever had in one picture and more delight than you've known in months."

HERE is one based on the mere personality of the actress and you who have played the pictures in which Miss Dean has appeared will appreciate the appeal that it will have:

"'Only description that the police had of 'the exquisite thief' was that she was 'amazing.' That's nothing new on us. Every patron of the Empire who has seen Priscilla Dean has known for a long time that she is amazing.

"She's the most astonishing actress in motion pictures, and here we have her in a drama that gives her more chance than she had ever had before—and therefore she's just that much better. And Priscilla—the girl robber, in evening gown—Oh, la, la!"

And then another:

"Blue Jean Billie didn't love any man. The only thing that she trusted was her automatic. She had the nerve of steel and a thousand policemen hunted for her in vain—all that they knew of her was that she was AMAZING.

"Then she made her great haul—took all the jewels of the guests of a society millionaire and his guests at the dinner where his daughter's engagement was being announced. She came only for the jewels, but she stole something else—the heart of the bridegroom—at the bride's dinner.

"But that only starts the action. More amazing things happen than you ever saw in a photoplay. There is a thrill to every foot of film and a heart full of delight at its end."

THEN here are some shorter ones:

"A thief, this wonderful woman in evening gown—the most radiant thing at the whole part. That is the one reason why the police only knew her as 'amazing.' You'll agree that Priscilla Dean is amazing in 'The Exquisite Thief,' the most astounding drama you ever saw.

"N. B. We don't like to use adjectives, but we are helpless without them here."

"When she associated with the rich, they paid for her time—with their jewels. The police couldn't trap her for she left no trail behind. Then she went to rob a wedding announcement party and did it so well that she got the jewels and the bridegroom, too —and then lost—most gloriously."

"She was the smoothest society thief that the big city had ever known. She was so perfect in her work that she never made a bobble. It was her business and she knew no other emotion—until her greatest robbery came and then she found that she had stolen something else that she had not counted on. No wonder she was willing to give up the jewels."

"She wasn't of the underworld—but she was a thief—the most amazing one the police had ever known. Her beauty dazzled every one, her cleverness outdid them. She was cold and merciless until—and then something came agriping at her heart."

Scenes are laid in the millionaire's home, the police station, Billie's apartment, an underworld cafe and in the cabin in the country. We would leave out anything that indicates that this is an "underworld" picture, for in the sense that word is generally used it distinctly is not.

But all is changed with the scenes in the cabin retreat. First she locks the Englishman up, then makes him a "trusty" and then listens to his love

Star's Personality Sould Be Played Up Strong

BECAUSE of the wonderful leap to the very front that Priscilla Dean has made with her last few pictures including "Kiss or Kill," "The Wildcat of Paris," "The Wicked Darling" and "The Silk Lined Burglar" we would devote the lobby to display of her pictures and send a special letter to the patrons about the new picture.

We know a dozen exhibitors who claim that they discovered this star. Possibly all of them may be right, and there is no reason why you cannot advertise her as the adopted star of your theatre. If you have played her recent pictures you know just exactly what her appeal is and if you can bring that all the more intimately before your patrons. We believe that a letter along these lines will help business:

"We've just about come to regard Priscilla Dean as our own star. You will remember what we told you about her when her first big picture came along. We've watched you and our other patrons pretty carefully and we've seen the way that you enjoy her work. That's the reason we always smile in content when we get the word that another Priscilla Dean picture is coming along.

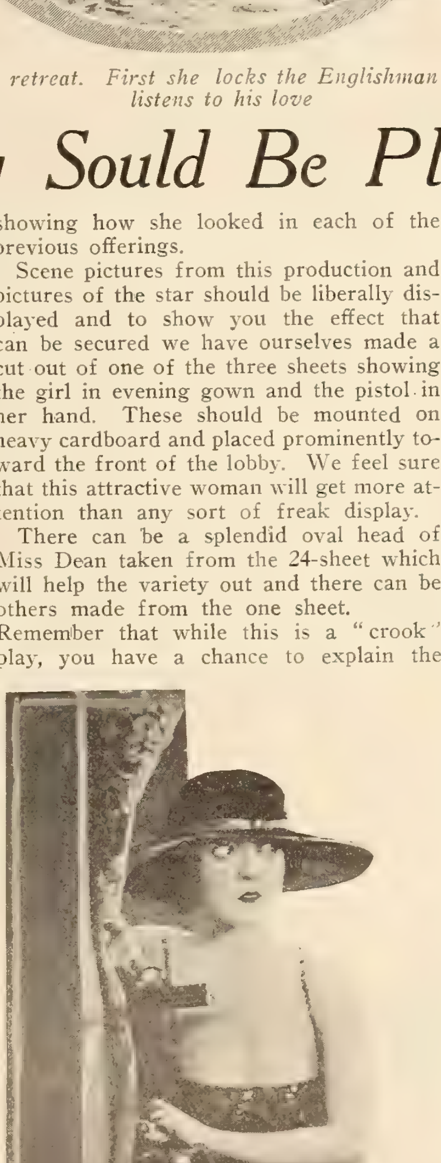
"Beginning next Monday she will appear for four days in 'The Exquisite Thief,' which we can promise you as the most interesting picture in which she has yet appeared. The only police description of this girl who robs the millionaire society folk is that she is 'amazing'—and there couldn't be a better description. You'll agree when you see her at work in an evening gown.

"In twenty-four hours after the first showing the whole town will be talking about this wonderful star and her startling picture. Certainly you want to be in on the secret. It carries our guarantee of unusual delight."

WITH such a star as this on your roster you should have begun to save photographs of her and if you have preserved the stills from her last four productions you will be able to make a mighty showing how she looked in each of the previous offerings.

Scene pictures from this production and pictures of the star should be liberally displayed and to show you the effect that can be secured we have ourselves made a cut out of one of the three sheets showing the girl in evening gown and the pistol in her hand. These should be mounted on heavy cardboard and placed prominently toward the front of the lobby. We feel sure that this attractive woman will get more attention than any sort of freak display.

There can be a splendid oval head of Miss Dean taken from the 24-sheet which will help the variety out and there can be others made from the one sheet. Remember that while this is a "crook" play, you have a chance to explain the charm of it in your newspaper advertising and that most always lobby displays that try to take the same angle are misleading and give a purely criminal appeal.



This cut-out from three-sheet is effective for lobby dispaly

THERE is nothing sad or tragic about this picture, but it is intensely gripping and therefore the surrounding bill should be light and frothy. The music for a good part of it will have to be played to action, but there are times when the music itself will aid in getting a laugh.

For instance when Billie enters the millionaire's dining room to rob the guests the musicians stop playing in their fright and she orders them to resume. Have them playing some sentimental piece that is well known so that the changes will be quickly recognized. For instance, it would not be likely that all the musicians would see her at once and one might be left playing alone for a moment, say the cornet. Then when they resume have them playing with the jerky, nervous effect. Jazz music can be used with the scene where the detective tries to induce the stool pigeons to give him information.

There is another scene where the girl mocks the Englishman when he says that the marriage to the heiress will never take place and here you can use "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry" or a burlesque on "Hearts and Flowers."

When this picture was shown at the Broadway Theatre Hirsh's "When You Look Into Her Eyes" was played as the theme and the swing to it fits well with the story and especially with the captivating Priscilla Dean eyes. It should first be introduced at the coffee drinking scene.

HERE is another case where the photography is largely night. There is an especially fine scene with the auto chase. There are lots of people who like these unusual things in pictures and it is well to mention them.

There is an unusually strong cast. Sam DeGrasse, who has had the crook role in several of Miss Dean's pictures again is cast in such a part while Thurston Hall is leading man. They should be mentioned.

New Way of Advertising a Feature

Harry H. Hicks, Branch Manager of Select's Cincinnati Exchange, is employing every trick of the trade to put over Select's big super-production, "Bolshevism on Trial." In addition to the advertising matter with which Select Branch Managers have been supplied by the Home Office, Manager Hicks has gone one step further, by making his letter heads work as well as his salesmen. Every letter that leaves the Cincinnati Exchange carries the head and hooked hand of the Bolshevist which Select uses in its trade paper advertising. This is printed across the full face of the sheet, with a light impression, forming a background of faint red. It makes an attractive display and serves the double purpose of keeping "Bolshevism on Trial" before every exhibitor.

Strong Cast for Miss Phillips in Her Next

What Universal declares is one of the strongest supporting casts ever seen on the screen has been chosen for Dorothy Phillip's newest Universal subject, "The Right To Happiness." Allen Holubar is preparing the screen play. The cast includes: Thurston Hall, Stanhope Wheatcroft, William Stowell, Robert Anderson, Henry Burrows, Hector Sarno, Margaret Mann, and Alma Bennett.

Fox Feature is Pronounced Hit

Exhibitors Declare "Pitfalls of a Big City" Is Scoring Big Success for Gladys Brockwell

FOLLOWING immediately after the trade paper reviewers' unanimous praise of Gladys Brockwell's picture, "Pitfalls of a Big City," as one of the best photoplays of the season, exhibitors throughout the country are adding their statements that the picture is scoring one of the biggest successes yet achieved by this star.

Heavy rain that lasted all day and was accompanied by a gale failed to keep people away from the Chicago showing of "Pitfalls of a Big City" at the Rose theatre on the opening day of last week's engagement, according to the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. While neighboring theatres were doing virtually no business, it is stated in telegrams from Chicago, there was a continuous stream of patrons into the Madison street house where "Pitfalls of a Big City" is booked for two solid weeks.

A preliminary one-day showing on the preceding Sunday at the Boston theatre, Chicago—operated by the owners of the Rose—brought capacity business throughout the day and evening. Manager Harry Miller of the two theatres reports many comments in praise of the picture.

A. Horwitz, owner of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, Ohio, is another exhibitor who is enthusiastic in his praise of "Pitfalls." In a letter to W. D. Shapiro, Fox branch manager at Cleveland, Mr. Horwitz says:

"We are getting ready to exploit the biggest and best picture of its kind that I have ever seen, namely, "Pitfalls of a Big City," with Gladys Brockwell as the star. Since the day you screened same for me I have been talking nothing else but this picture. This truly is a masterpiece, with Gladys Brockwell at her very best. You know what a crank I am on pictures; but I take my hat off to this one, and all I can say is 'Wait and see me eat the space in all the Toledo papers with this one picture.' More pictures like this and I will wear a smile you won't even be able to massage off."

In the Philadelphia district exhibitors are unanimous in their praise of the quality and box office value, it is said.

Milton Russell, managing the Colonial theatre, Atlantic City, said the subject had great value from every viewpoint, and immediately entered into arrangements for repeat dates on the picture.

Excel Pictures Are Nearing First Anniversary

A YEAR ago, the Exhibitors Service Bureau recalls, William Fox made certain promises regarding Excel Pictures. He stated that his object in introducing this series of productions was to give certain stars greater scope for the development of their abilities. He promised particularly that effort would be made to obtain the highest type of stories for the Excel releases—that these productions would not be ordinary program releases, but better, stronger pictures in keeping with the general upward trend of motion pictures quality standards.

The current release is "The Love That Dares," starring Madeline Traverse, to be followed by "Miss Adventure," featuring Peggy Hyland.

The Fox office cites a number of other big stories that have been produced for the Excel program.

"Cowardice Court," written by George Barr McCutcheon, the famous novelist, has just been completed by Peggy Hyland, and is set for early release.

"Buchanan's Wife," which was made from a book written by the late Justus Miles Forman.

"Words and Music By—" which Albert Ray, with Elinor Farr has just completed in Hollywood, is taken from the book by that name. It was written by William Charles Lengel.

Peggy Hyland has made seven Excel Pictures. The preceding six are "Bonnie Annie Laurie," "The Rebellious Bride," "Caught in the Act," "Marriages are Made," "The Girl with No Regrets," and "Miss Adventure," the current release.

Madelaine Traverse is working on her fourth Excel Picture, the others being "The Danger Zone," "Gambling in Souls," and "The Love That Dares." Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, the latest addition to the Excel group, have made two productions in this series, "Married in Haste" and "Words and Music By—"

Other Excel Pictures so released include "Queen of Hearts," "Buchanan's Wife," "The Love Auction," "Tell it to the Marines," "Swat the Spy," and "Smiles."

Shomer-Ross to Release a New Feature

There has been some comment of an inquiring nature in the industry on account of the non-appearance of any further productions by Abraham S. Shomer since "Ruling Passions."

The Shomer productions having been reorganized under the name Shomer-Ross Production Co., Inc., are about to release their latest, known as "The Great Mystery," a comedy drama said to have especial merit.

Mr. Shomer has not decided on the exact date of the release and will perhaps wait until his next production, which now is in preparation will be finished.

It is claimed by the author-director that the next production issued by him while being a modern drama will have all the qualifications of a super-spectacle. The question of cost is one of the items that will not be drawn in consideration in this production.

Hodkinson to Release Big Ones This Spring

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces the inauguration on April 20 of a series of spring and all summer big productions for the allies whose pictures are distributed under the Hodkinson imprint through the Pathe branches in the United States. Most producers and distributors wait until mid-September to begin the calendar releasing year and in the past years much of the summer dullness in the motion picture theatres perhaps has been directly traceable to the producers' unwillingness to risk releasing big, pretentious pictures during July or August.

The most accurate reports obtainable from every section of the United States indicate a period of unprecedented patronage now being enjoyed by exhibitors and comparatively few exhibitors can be found who do not feel assured of the heaviest patronage ever known during the approaching summer. The Hodkinson sales plans therefore contemplate the immediate aiding of exhibitors by giving them what unquestionably will rank as the most powerful and unusual productions ever before ventured upon a summer market.

As the opening smash that will create and sustain big business in the theatres, Harry Raver's production of Augustus Thomas' New York stage success, "As A Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving, will be released everywhere April 20. This is the first of the previously announced Four-Star pictures, deriving their name from an equal apportioning and featuring of the author, the story, the star and the director.

On May 4 Jesse D. Hampton presents J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Best Man," from the story by Grace Livingston Hill Lutz. It is of the Arsene Lupin-Sherlock Holmes type that fairly tingles it is claimed with electric excitement. It is worthy of note that the Kerrigan productions are the only ones to be continued from the first Hodkinson releasing year into the company's second year.

Zane Grey's story, "Desert Gold," directed by T. Hayes Hunter, is now being completed in California and Colorado and will be ready for release in either two or four weeks after May 4.

Another producing unit about which announcement is to be made separately has completed Stewart Edward White's famous success, "The Westerners" under the direction of Edward Sloman. This production will have an early summer release.

Each of these productions, as well as all other productions past and present or future will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and are to be offered to exhibitors, singly under contract on their individual merits and values.

Larry Darmour of Gaumont Back on the Job

First Lieutenant Larry Darmour, U. S. Signal Corps, photographic division, is back from the war. Shortly he will take up his work again as assistant to Pell Mitchell, editor of the Gaumont Graphic and Gaumont News.

Mr. Darmour worked on all of the sectors held by the American army for the last three months, and just prior to his resignation was assigned to the Peace Conference in Paris. Among other interesting feats at the front he made the first pictures of the emplacement of the "Big Bertha." one of the long range guns used in the bombardment of Paris.

Goldberg Reports on a "Midnight Romance"

THE ease with which an agent books a picture featuring a star who has had a recent success was illustrated in the case of Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., in booking "A Midnight Romance," featuring Anita Stewart.

Remembering Miss Stewart in "Virtuous Wives," many exhibitors were willing to book the next Stewart picture released by First National by mail. Within a few days after beginning operations with "A Midnight Romance" Mr. Goldberg reports that he received these contracts: Strand, Louisville, one week; Signal Amusement Co., Chattanooga, one week; Crescent Amusement Co., Nashville, one week; Majestic Amusement Co., Memphis, one week; Ada Meade theatre, Lexington, Ky., one week; Lyric theatre, Covington, Ky., one week; Princess theatre, Hopkinsville, Ky., two days; Dixie theatre, Mayfield, Ky., two days; Dixie theatre, Paris, Tenn., one day.

Manager Frank H. Dowling, of the Signal Amusement Co., the first manager to offer "Virtuous Wives" in Kentucky and Tennessee, duplicated on "A Midnight Romance" which he showed the week of March 16. Its first Louisville showing took place the week of April 6.

I. Libson, of the Strand, Louisville, had "A Midnight Romance" advertised in the same way which marked the exhibition of "Virtuous Wives," and is said to have enjoyed marked success.

Tony Sudekum of the Knickerbocker, at Nashville, who showed the picture the week of April 28, used Anita Stewart's song, "A Midnight Romance," for advertising purposes.

Theda Bara Appears in A Belasco Feature

IT is announced that William Fox has persuaded David Belasco to sell the motion picture rights to one of his plays, "La Belle Russe." This play, which has been adapted for the screen by Charles J. Brabin who also is directing the motion picture, is being filmed at one of the Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J., with Theda Bara as the star.

"La Belle Russe," as a spoken play, was produced first in San Francisco and since then it has been played by stock companies throughout the country.

In announcing the purchase of "La Belle Russe," the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation calls attention to the fact that five novels and plays are being made into Fox films. These are "Cowardice Court," by George Barr McCutcheon; "Checkers," the play written by the late Henry M. Blossom, Jr.; "The Lone Star Ranger," by Zane Grey, and "My Little Sister," a novel by Elizabeth Robins, the English author.

Said an official of the Fox organization: "The reputation of these books and plays in the original form has a big value for the exhibitor. Every city and town contains a large public who have either seen these plays on the stage or have read the books. These people naturally will want to see the works in their screen form; so their patronage is already assured the exhibitor. The advertising possibilities in the productions and the merits of the pictures themselves will account for a 100 per cent. patronage."

Thousand Dollars a Word for Riley Poem

The announcement made by World Pictures that it has taken over the distribution of a picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "Little Orphant Annie," recalls the fact that Riley in writing this poem is credited with having written the greatest money making poem and the best paid piece of literary work ever published, if one takes into consideration the number of words. With what was paid for the moving picture rights together with the rights of publication it brought in more than a thousand dollars a word.

"The three modern writers whose incomes from their literary work are said to be the greatest in the world, are Rudyard Kipling, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and Arnold Bennett.

Alice Brady's "Redhead" April Attraction

Alice Brady's forthcoming Select Picture, "Redhead," is now completed and will be ready during the current week for distribution as an April attraction. "Redhead" was adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne from a story by Albert Payson Dowst, which appeared in a recent number of one of the popular magazines. Mr. Maigne also directed the production.

The opening of the story finds Miss Brady as the star entertainer in one of the fashionable cabarets. She sings, dances and flirts, and her latter accomplishment wins for her the love of one of the wealthy patrons. They are married. Then comes the rift in the lute which makes one of the most entertaining stories Miss Brady has ever done, it is said. There is the inevitable happy ending, but it is arrived at by an entirely new and different road. Conrad Nagel is Miss Brady's leading man.

Film Club Holds Meeting to Stop Propaganda Against It

The Film Social Club, an organization devoted exclusively to social matters, took action at a meeting held Monday evening to counteract propaganda expressed by enemies of the organization giving the impression that it intended to take an active part in labor and industrial controversies and was in fact involved with a campaign for the organization of certain elements in the film business into a union to combat existing conditions.

Max Ehrenrich, secretary of the club said in an interview that the Film Social Club had been formed for the sole purpose of affording its members and their wives and families opportunity for social enjoyment.

"We have enough business in business hours," said Mr. Ehrenrich. "If we want to form a union or change our present working conditions, we'll leave the women at home."

Tincher Sees Her First Christie Special at Pre-Release

"There is nothing in the life of an actress worse than looking at the first run of a new picture when you don't know whether it is going over or not," says Fay Tincher.

Her first Special, "Sally's Blighted Career," was pre-released at the California theatre in Los Angeles, where she saw it. She was huddled down in a seat chewing her fingernails when the picture started. After a couple of scenes a snicker came from the row behind her. Then somebody else laughed and the picture got over.

Miss Tincher was unusually worried over the first of the Christie Specials, since they introduce her, after an absence of some time from screen comedy, in a little more varied work, under new direction, that of Al E. Christie.

Hodkinson Changes His Sales Organization

E. A. Crane, Hodkinson representative

As a necessary preliminary to the vigorous sales campaign and policy of regional exploitation for the benefit of exhibitors, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, through its sales department, has affected changes in a number of its regional representations within the past two weeks.

Announcement is made of the appointment of the following Hodkinson representatives, all of the men named being installed to work in close co-operation with the exhibitors of ther territories:

Atlanta—E. L. Byers, representative. Mr. Byers is known throughout South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, which states comprise his territory.

Albany—H. R. Wimsatt, representative. Mr. Wimsatt has had charge of both the Albany and Buffalo territories, but now covers the Albany territory exclusively.

Buffalo—H. LaMott LeVay, representative. Mr. LeVay, formerly a member of the Goldwyn Boston organization, and is well known to many Northern New York exhibitors.

Boston—W. H. Dunbar, representative. Mr. Durbar was identified with the initial Triangle organization, and will have charge of the entire Hodkinson New England field.

Detroit—D. Leo Dennison, representative. Mr. Dennison is a former Paramount man, and for the past year manager of the General Film office in Detroit.

Indianapolis—J. C. Mack, representative. Mr. Mack is the newly named head of this office for Hodkinson, the office previously having been handled through the Cincinnati representative.

Salt Lake City—D. E. Schayer, representative. His appointment places the Salt Lake territory on its own footing, being formerly under the Hodkinson Denver office.

Washington—Rudolph Berger, representative. Mr. Berger enjoys the friendship of exhibitors through Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia.

The Hodkinson offices in Philadelphia are controlled by Charles E. Henschel; Pittsburgh by C. E. Moore; Chicago by E. C. Field, assisted by E. S. Rowley. Mr. Fielder also has jurisdiction over Cleveland, with D. W. Phillips as assistant. Kansas City is handled by P. C. Wreath, who previously had jurisdiction over St. Louis. This latter office is now placed upon an independent footing.

Most of the men named are experienced sales executives in the territories to which they have been assigned.

Haynes Gives His Opinion on Star vs Story

Lloyd C. Haynes, president of Brentwood Film corporation takes an oar in the Star vs. Story controversy.

In his opinion the story is the light which brings out the points of a player. If that player has talent and magnetism, his rise to stardom will be in exact proportion to the grade and fitness of light which the story sheds upon him. Without considering the influence of the director—which would entirely change the situation—Mr. Haynes gives it as his observation that rapid advance to great film popularity have invariably followed a series of picturizations of stories which strongly brought out the very best of which the players were capable. And conversely that a star's popularity has rapidly waned if the vehicles in which he appeared did not continue strong and fitting.

Deprecating the too prevalent habit of weakening a good story by warping it to fit a star or, by subordinating to that of the star, parts of others in which the story calls for srength and prominence, Mr. Haynes suggests that star and story be placed on a fifty-fifty basis. The star, once arrived through the combined strength of stories and force of talent, drawing the attention of the public but, the story being relied upon to hold that attention. Fortunate indeed is the producer when he occasionally strikes the bull's eye with a perfectly matched story and star! Or, failing that happy combination, when he can attract the public by the name and the theme of his picture nd hold it by the well balanced strength secured through properly fitted players regardless of their names.

"The Unknown Love"

Exhibitors who are going to show "The Unknown Love" should say to the public plainly that this is a picture with the war setting—a picture that would be impossible without the war—but still a distinctly after the war picture in its treatment. There is no reason why this should not be stated incidentally in your exploitation.

But we would not suggest that you label this "Not a war picture." Show what it really is by your selling talk. The thing that people want now to come out of the war so far as pictures is concerned are visualizations of great loves or of the lighter and humorous elements. With a romance the setting of the war brings the action right up to the moment and makes it all the more gripping.

So after we had displayed the name of the picture, those of the two stars, Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, and then the name of its director and author, Leonee Perrett who created "Lafayette, We Come" we would jump right into the selling argument and put over the appeal of the picture so convincingly that all will

NOW here is the story: It opens at the summer home of John Parker, a retired sea captain where his beautiful daughter, Doris, is entertaining a house party, one of the members of which is Capt. Jack Tims who is constantly beseeching the girl to marry him. One of the first scenes shows the arrival of the mail and the girls flocking in wearing their bathing suits to get their letters—for all of them have "adopted" a soldier in France to cheer up the American fighting men—all but Doris

One of the girls receives a letter from her particular friend which mentions Harry Townsend, who is described as a fine chap, but without a friend outside of the army and Doris is persuaded to write to him. Townsend is delighted when he is seen receiving the letter and since she has asked for his picture and he hasn't one he borrows the picture of a chum. From that time on the romance grows rapidly, both maid and soldier now firmly in the grip of their great, unknown love.

During this earlier part of the picture the director skilfully keeps the action leaping back and forth from France to America and not only do we have some glimpses of the battle scenes, but the sports and amusements of the fighters and a lot of sidelights that have not come into other pictures. In short these thrilling scenes have the psychological effect of showing how the love of the maid and the soldier grew during those strenuous days on the battlefield and the anxiety and waiting of the loyal women on this side of the water.

BUT then comes a day when Townsend is wounded. He believes that he is going to die, writes Doris his farewell letter, but later he is taken to Tours and then one of the surgeons writes to the girl, at the same time enclosing Townsend's note. Immediately on receiving it she determines that she must go to France to be at his bedside. Her father refuses to let her go, and any way there is no way to make the trip until she appeals to Capt. Tims and in his great love for her he violates all naval regulations and smuggles her aboard the government transport, Tristan.

Just as they are nearing the shores of France a submarine attacks the Tristan and Capt. Tims is killed and buried at sea and here we have a most moving situation. Then we have some scenes on the train where Doris hears the people paying tribute to the part that America has played in the war—a tribute that only increases her love for the man who now lies wounded in the hospital behind the lines. It is such incidents as this rather than any weight of the main story itself that serves to analyze the reason for such a love between two people who have never seen each other.

Doris reaches the hospital to find Townsend with his face swathed in bandages and then when he recovers sufficiently she learns that he is not the original of the picture, but that his chum died in battle. But it was not the picture that Doris had come to love, but the man that had written those wonderful letters, who had been able to stir her by the spirit that he has shown in fighting for his country, for his cheeriness in trial and in peril.

THEN we see them back in America, Townsend discharged from service because of his wounds and Doris now his wife. Then comes the news that Germany has signed the armistice and we have pictures of the wild celebration in New York street.s

After this comes an epilogue, several years still in the future. The couple now have a boy of five or six and the boy is asking his father "What's up there in the stars?" He tells his little son "In every star there lives a soldier who has gone to glory" and we see the stars spelling out the words “Stars of Glory.” Then follow a series of pageants showing Germany surrendering, then picturing the parts that the various allied nations took in the war.

At left, Doris finds her "unknown love," to whom she is writing, at the right. Center shows a scene years after the war when their son learns the story of the "stars of glory"

This rounds out the tribute to the fighting men after the vivid scenes showing the terrors of the war they went through. In short you may advertise this as:

“The screen's greatest tribute to the brave who won the war.”

WE would advise the building of the greater portion of the selling talks on “The Unknown Love” on two points: On what the war and its victory means to the women of America and as a tribute to the men who fought for the safety of the world “over there.” Weave those in as a background for the love story.

There is one thing that should be avoided in the advertising, and especially in the use of the illustration: Don't let anything get in that would in any way suggest that this is a story of a woman victim of the Hun lust, because there is nothing of that sort in the story and the only sex element that you want to get into the exploitation is the wonderful, pure love of a woman for a man she had never seen.

Now there is a most attractive one showing the two stars, after the war. Lincoln is seated in a chair and Miss Cassinelli kneeling beside, both smiling, wonderfully happy. If you make your own cuts you can get a mighty strong halftone effect from this and you can also use a line cut of the scene. Then go ahead with this selling argument:

“War over in Europe hadn't meant very much to Doris Parker, for she was so far away from it. But she did want to do something to help those American boys who were fighting abroad. All of her girl friends were writing to their sweethearts over there and cheering them up to be better soldiers, braver Americans.

“Then came her chance. A girl friend's letter told of a young soldier who knew no one outside of the army, and Doris decided to adopt him. She did and he wrote and sent a picture, not his own. She came to love him from the letters and when she heard that he was wounded she braved all the dangers and went to France and to him.

“But underneath the bandages she could see that he was not the man of the picture—but he was the man of the letters. They had written their romance in the war and after it they found their happiness—never forgetting those who had not come back, each one now a star of glory in the nation's firmament.”

YOU have to take into consideration the enormous part that the women of this country did in helping to win the war. You won't find one of them that didn't do her part, as best she could. But only a small part of them could go across, and we have had lots of pictures telling the romances of the Red Cross nurses and the French girls and all that sort of a thing, but here is the romance of a girl who had to stay on this side—until she couldn't stay any longer:

“Before the war Doris Porter would have been insulted to have been asked to write to a man she had never seen. But now she heard of a clean young fellow fighting in France who knew no one outside of the army and who was terribly lonely. Girls everywhere were ‘adopting’ soldiers to cheer them up, and so Doris did.

“A strange thing, love—and stranger still this loveborn of the strike. It came to them unknown and grew stronger as Doris could hear the shells screaming, picture the brave Americans hurling themselves over the top—only visualizations on her part, but the wonderful things that you will see pictured on the screen.

“And now Townsend has something more to fight for—love. The boys by his side were fighting for wives and mothers and sweethearts and kiddies at home; Townsend fought for love of a woman who had never seen him. It is a marvelous romance that was born of trials and terrors—a story that peace time could not have made.

“It's the love epic of the war—set against a background of heroism.”

WE believe that the exhibitor will be successful in using a selling talk that is built more directly on the creation that Mr. Perret has achieved:

“Leonce Perret, who gave the screen ‘Lafayette We Come,’ built around the statement of Gen. Pershing at the French soldier's tomb, has again used the war as a background for his master canvas—the story of a wonderful love of a girl for a man who she had never seen—of a girl here who wanted to do something to help win the war and of a boy who was offering his life over there.

“He has put the reflection of every action in the hearts of the girl and the soldier. These events will mean more to you now, and your heart will swell with the wonderful tribute to those who brought Victory to the banner of America and the Allies.

THEN here are some shorter sentences that don't go so far into the details of the picture:

“She gave up everything, left home behind for a man she had never seen—a man whom she had come to love for his letters. And now she believed he lay dying in France and no sacrifice was too great that she might go to him—and there she found the unknown love had become a most real one.

“How he fought for her—for a woman he had never seen. And how she had come to love him, for when he fell wounded nothing could keep her from France and his side. It's a great woman story against the background of the war—an epic in love and heroism that will never grow old.

“How patriotism cleanses the soul and opens the heart! Here is one of the most wonderful of romances—impossible in peace. She wanted to help by writing to this unknown soldier and he came to love her and she him. Then he felt Death approaching and instead—SHE came.

“Here is a picture of a new nobility born of the war. The story of the maid and the soldier who loved though they had never met, set against that background where men risked their lives and women offered their very souls is a tribute to every man who fought over there—to every woman who suffered and worked over here. It's the sort of picture that convinces us that it all was not in vain.”

At left, Doris begs the captain who loves her to take her to France, at right, she hears the submarine warning, and center shows the captain as its victim

Victory Loan and Woman's Appeal, Both Strong

IF "The Unknown Love" had been produced especially for the purpose of boosting the Victory Loan it couldn't have been better fitted for that purpose. Exhibitors who are going to show this during the campaign should immediately make arrangements with their local committee for the fullest cooperation and you will get it, for this film will help wonderfully in raising your district's quota.

If you cannot show the committee the picture in advance go to the members and tell them that here is a film that is not a mere war picture, but a production that shows the meaning of Victory. Tell them that it is a clear record of the patriotism of the men who fought and the women who worked over here—that it is a wonderful argument why everyone should buy Victory Bonds to their limit because it so vividly portrays what they stand for—the meaning of Victory as contrasted with mere War.

You should not have the slightest trouble in getting the fullest endorsement. It may be that you can get a number of the patriotic business men to contribute to additional advertising based on the showing of this picture because of the help that it will give the Victory Loan. This was done many times in the case of Liberty Loan showings.

We don't mean to try to get someone else to pay for your regular advertising, but for bigger, additional advertising that will attract more to the theatre and bring in more subscribers for the Loan.

FOR months yet the soldier boys will be coming home from France and if your community has a homecoming day or week this picture will fit in mighty well there. As a matter of fact it would be a good plan for you to have a "Homecoming Week" all of your own when you show this one and announce that every man who has been to France or in camp on this side will be admitted free. Every one of those boys will become a booster for the picture.

But in spite of what you may do along these lines we would suggest that the exhibitor send out a special letter to every woman in his entire territory. Let it read something like this:

"Leonce Perret, the master motion picture director, has given us the woman's side of Victory that came out of the great war in 'The Unknown Love,' in which Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln are starred and which will be shown at the Empire theatre all next week.

"It is a story of a woman who saw the struggle through the eyes of a man she had never met, but whom she loved—the story of a great love that made her leave all behind when he fell wounded in France—the story of what Victory meant to one woman and through her to all the women of the world. Painted against the canvas of the world conflict, it is a woman's epic—a picture that will live in every heart in which there is love and the joy of life.

"We are not stopping to tell you of the lavishness of the production and the thrills. What we want most is to tell you, as a woman, that here is a picture that will make you glad for the part you had in bringing Victory to the world."

IN your lobby display there should be nothing of the ordinary war display. There may be a Victory display if you are coupling this up with the Victory Loan or the Homecoming Week idea, but unless you are trying to put over that sort of a wallop stay away from the tricks that have been tried with so many war pictures.

You can get an interesting effect here through borrowing a model of a handsome woman from one of the department stores and having her facing a curtained frame with one hand about to draw the curtains aside. On these have lettered the title of the picture and then a huge question mark. This will serve to arouse curiosity, especially on the part of the women to whom you are making the special appeal. The display should be fenced off so that it would not be interfered with.

Use pictures of the two stars and their names prominently in your lobby.

AT the same time we would avoid anything of the war setting in the presentation of the picture except the incidental music. We would use one of the old time love songs just before the picture is shown, for that carries a suggestion that love is eternal through the ages. "Love's Old Sweet Song" is mighty hard to beat here.

Titles throughout the picture are unusually suggestive of the picture. There is one place where the negro band is seen playing "Oh, Oh, Frenchy," and of course this should be used there. Then with the title, "Each Day Our Armies," "Over There" should be brought in and then the chorus repeated with the close-up of the soldier and his pipe.

There is still another scene where the boys are singing "Home, Sweet Home" and a few lines of this can be rendered by a quartet from behind scene or simply played by the orchestra or organ.

On numerous occasions there are places where bugle calls are used and once where taps should be employed. We want to caution exhibitors against trying to reproduce effects too strong during the fighting stuff. We would a good deal rather get the cannonading effects with the dull rumble of the drums and omit the louder matter.

With the exception of "Over There" the only time that we would bring in patriotic music is with the showing of the tableau at the end, and here "Le Pere de la Victoire" or "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" can be used. If you want to avoid that touch altogether try "Pomp and Circumstance."

You should try to make your presentation of this picture a very high class one and we suggest that comedy and high class music of the more melodious sort—the old songs the better—will make it all the more enjoyable.

Sees Money In Feature Stories

Joseph Franklin Poland Thinks, However, Magazine Writer Rates Higher Than Scenarioist—Explains Reason for This

JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND, author of many current screen stories, told a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week how he came to enter the picture industry, after spending some time at fiction writing, and declared that he does and does not regret deserting the fiction field for the silent drama.

In explanation of this Mr. Poland said: "I have made more money writing photoplays than I should have earned as a beginner in the magazine field. But I think that the status of a fiction writer is higher than that of a scenario writer. This may be unfair, but it is unfortunately true. A writer who has furnished dozens of plots for the screen does not get anywhere near the respect that is shown to a writer who may have had two or three frivolous tales printed in a magazine. Motion picture companies are in a measure responsible for this lack of respect shown to writers who are giving their best efforts to the screen; some companies have an absolute veneration for the printed word, preferring to pay high prices for a plotless magazine story that will need reconstruction, rather than to pay a fair price for an original synopsis, written direct for the screen and teeming with picture possibilities. Fortunately, this day is passing. If it didn't pass—."

"Well? Would something dreadful happen?"

"Well, it would simply drive every screen-writer of the younger generation to the fiction field. For, he would argue, he could sell his stuff to the magazines, and then, by holding on to the picture rights, obtain much higher prices and better treatment from movie producers. Not only that, but he would be less likely to exhaust his plotting ability. No less an authority than Rex Beach claims that nothing is a greater test of invention than writing for the movies, or more quickly depletes a stock of ideas. A screen story of feature length must have as much material as a novel or play.

"This brings us to the most important phase of writing for the screen to-day.

"The younger generation of writers of screen features to-day are those who, like myself, are trained writers—writers who, therefore, would have taken to fiction if motion pictures had not existed to invite us. And so we are sending our brain-children to the screen direct, instead of to the screen via the publishing house. We are writing screen novels. And let me tell you, fervently, there is no harder work in the whole field of writing! When I write a motion picture feature, in detailed synopsis form, I have produced a condensed novel or play with careful characterization, dramatic intensity, polished comedy-relief, and logical development of climax and denouement; all this must be combined with a perfect idea of continuity and picture possibilities. Now—contrary to the statements of disgruntled writers who have 'flivvered'—it is easy enough to sell such a story when written. The real difficulty is in turning out a sufficient number of such photoplays to earn a good income, with the prices that manufacturers are at present offering.

"This brings us to our point. With present prices, a screen novelist cannot turn out enough stories that will measure up to the standard above described to make a good income. The consequence is that he must either let the quality slump while he turns out work in greater quantities—and this happens, mostly—or, if he has fictional ability, turn back to the magazine field. Now, most companies are coming to realize that to-day is the day of the man who is writing direct for the screen. With the 'special production' coming daily into greater favor, they perceive that they must have bigger, finer screen material than they can obtain from 'reconstructed' fiction stories of flimsy structure. And so they must turn to the screen novelist.

"He is to be found in increasing numbers. The screen has developed him in the last two or three years. He has a plot ability that has never been surpassed, combined with the power of visualization and a fine sense of continuity. Has he been developed merely to be discouraged, so that he may turn to other fields and enrich them with the genius that he offers to the screen? Or will motion picture producers dignify him by calling him an Author, and by paying him prices that will show the laborer worthy of his hire? It is in the hands of the producers whether or not screen material will remain, in most instances, a re-hash of mediocre books and plays that have failed on the stage—or whether the day of real and distinctive screen literature is to dawn, to the great benefit of the whole industry. If there is to be anything that will cinch the claim of the movies to permanence it will be a screen literature that will make the other Arts cease to sneer."

Briggs Comedies to Famous Players-Lasky

THE new Briggs Comedies which made their premier at the Strand Theatre some weeks and ago are reported to have registered very heavily, have been contracted by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for world distribution.

Alex Yokel, vice-president and general manager of Briggs Pictures, Inc., is said to have had six contracts from the various large distributing organizations offering him attractive terms for the handling of these pictures, all of which he turned down in favor of the Famous Players-Lasky offer.

Briggs Pictures, Inc., will turn over to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, one one-reel comedy a week for distribution. Several special releases, running three reels in length, are also under consideration.

The Excel Studio in Yonkers, has been leased by the producers.

Several of the Briggs pictures, already shown at the Strand Theatre, proved big attractions. Managing Director Joseph L. Plunket, in a letter to Mr. Yokel last week, said: "The Briggs comedy, 'When a Feller Needs a Friend,' is in my estimation one of the most delightful comedies of its kind I have seen. It is so distinctly different from the comedies we have been running that it is giving our audiences a refreshing change and won over big. I congratulate you and Mr. Briggs on these splendid pictures, and hope for your continued success."

Briggs Pictures for Paramount release will be prepared in various series, under the titles, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," "The Days of Real Sport," "Married Life," "Somebody's Always Taking the Joy Out of Life" and "Aint It a Grand and Glorious Feeling."

They are staged under the direction of John J. Harvey, the well known director, the scenarios being written by Clare A. Briggs himself. Each film will be complete in itself. Bert C. Carver has been engaged as technical director, and W. A. Hutchinson as cameraman.

New Drama by Augustus Thomas Now in Production

A new drama on a vital theme in American life, written by Augustus Thomas, went into production this week at the Biograph studios. The title and theme of this drama is being kept a secret, for the present, but Mr. Thomas and Harry Raver, his producer, have admitted that the story possesses a sociological interest, and that its dealing with a problem now holding world attention is certain to carry a strong appeal to the public. Leah Baird will star in this feature and George Irving will direct.

A serialization of the drama by Mr. Thomas, will be run in not less than 100 daily papers throughout the country, it is said, and this is believed to be the first time in picture history that the story of a feature will be published by a chain of newspapers in advance of the first release.

Hodkinson Holds Showing on Baird Picture

What is said to have been one of the most largely attended trade showings ever held in New York, was that of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on the roof top of the Marcus Loew New York Theatre on April 18th, when "As a Man Thinks" was shown to no less than four hundred of the most important exhibitors of the metropolitan district. This showing was with a twenty-piece orchestra. This initial presentation was made noteworthy by the attendance of Producer Raver, Augustus Thomas, the author, Leah Baird, the star, and George Irving, the director. A private Sunday showing was also held at Pittsburgh at the Liberty Theatre.

Other trade showings are being held this week in Chicago, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Cleveland, Dallas, Seattle, Atlanta and Detroit.

DuBrey and Rich Appear with Farnum Again

Clare DuBrey and Irene Rich will again be seen as rivals in a romance of love and hate, when "The Harvest of Shame" is released as a United Production.

This is said to be Dustan Farnum's best production to date and will afford him a chance to appear in evening dress in the first part of the picture.

The play and scenario are by Thos. J. Geraghty. The cast includes Lois Wilson, Dorothy Wallace, Aggie Herring, Joseph Dowling, Wedgwood Nowell, J. Barney Sherry, Charles K. French, Harry Van Meter, Bert Appling and Betty Bouton. T. M. Heffron is director.

Appears with Farnum

Aggie Herring, who played the one-legged woman in "A Man In the Open," will again appear in support of Dustin Farnum in "The Harvest of Shame." She will enact the comedy role of Mrs. Murphy, the cook. Aggie Herring is one of the most versatile character women in pictures.

Lefty Flynn, June Caprice, Albert Capellani, Zena Keefe and Creighton Hale are responsible for "Oh, Boy," a Pathe picture from the musical comedy

Frank Lloyd Signs with Goldwyn

Frank Lloyd, one of the oldest and at once one of the youngest directors in motion pictures, known to every exhibitor throughout the country, has signed a contract with the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, and will begin work soon on a new Rex Beach production for Goldwyn. Years of successful picture production and startling effectiveness in the presentation of the screen drama have put Frank Lloyd, not yet thirty-one years old, at the very top of his profession, it is declared. By competent critics he is considered, it is said, the foremost dramatic director, both in the United States and Europe. He made his own adaptation of "Les Miserables" and "A Tale of Two Cities." In these pictures, the Bastille, of which he could find no satisfactory picture extant, was recreated.

Other pictures made by Mr. Lloyd, and familiar to those who have followed productions, are "The Price of Silence," "American Methods," 'When a Man Sees Red," "Riders of the Purple Sage," and "The Rainbow Trail."

Mildred Considine Joins Pickford Force

Mildred Considine, scenario writer, arrived in Los Angeles recently to become Mary Pickford's scenarioist. Having assisted in the titling of "Daddy Long Legs," she is now working on an original story, the idea for which was supplied by Miss Pickford.

Miss Considine has furnished most of the well-known stars with stories and recently sold an original one to Goldwyn for Madge Kennedy.

New MacLaren Film

While Mary MacLaren was spending a brief vacation at her home following the completion of her most recent Universal production, "Prairie Gold," written by Sinclair Lewis, and while Tod Browning was cutting and editing the negative, Paul Powell was going over the script submitted for the star's next picture. "The Weaker Vessel" is the title the script now bears. It is adapted from an original story by Elmer Ellsworth of the Universal authorial staff.

"Cry of the Weak" Hailed as Big Success

FANNIE WARD'S declaration before she sailed for Europe that in "The Cry of the Weak," she found her greatest dramatic medium and has done the biggest emotional work of her entire career, is being supported by the judgment of competent authorities. The private showings in the Pathe Exchanges have been productive of the warmest praise.

C. W. Stombaugh, of the Minneapolis branch, writes:

"Personally I considered it a wonderful picture and I can think of no possible criticism on it. My wife, who saw it with me, said that she thought it was a better picture than 'Common Clay' and everyone who saw it thought it was a wonderful production."

H. O. Graham, Branch Manager at Omaha, also writes:

"I had the pleasure of screening 'The Cry of the Week" at Lincoln. I consider it a release of actual super-feature quality; in fact it is almost as strong a picture in every respect as 'Common Clay.' It is one of the very best pictures ever released and where a man has played 'Common Clay,' this picture should clean up for him."

Several of the branch managers, reading of the criticism of pictures by Police Commissioner O'Grady, of New York, have declared the picture to be one hundred per cent. perfect. The feature has no sex problem, no attempt at assault and none of the bestial things of lust and passion that are sometimes shown and suggested.

Hampton's Next Production a Desert Story

THE desert always has a certain fascination in the weaving of stories of mystery, intrigue and love. For that reason Jesse D. Hampton, of the Jesse D. Hampton Productions, seeking to keep in touch with the wishes of the public, selected "The Man Who Turned White," a story of the Sahara, as the first one for his new star, H. B. Warner. This picture will be released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

H. B. Warner in the Jess Hampton production, "The Man Who Turned White," released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors-Mutual

It is the story of a white officer who has left his own army under a cloud and who has organized a band of marauders to prey upon the caravans of the desert. He had made himself up to look like one of the natives and speaks their language fluently. It is through a white girl captive that his secret becomes known, and when the great love grows between them she learns the true story of his life and brings him back once more to civilization.

The story originally was written by F. McGrew Willis and was adapted for the screen by George Elwood Jenks. It is written faithfully to the life of the roving bands of the desert. It is said to contain exciting action, unusual suspense and a wealth of scenery, sets and costumes, not to speak of the hundreds of people who appear. Playing oposite Warner is Barbara Castleton, who went west for the first time to appear in this production. She has been a star in her own right in the east.

Agnes Johnston Joins Ince

Another member has been added to the Ince scenario staff, already recognized as one of the largest and most capable group of writers in the motion picture industry, in the person of Agnes Christine Johnston. Her latest work was the writing of the continuity for Mary Pickford's picture, "Daddy Long Legs." Besides her work as a continuity writer she has to her credit a long list of original stories.

Bennison's Next Called Success

"The Road Called Straight," Star's Latest Production, to Be Released May 11

GOLDWYN is promising exhibitors everywhere that the aggregate of their success with Louis Bennison's first three star series productions, made by Betzwood Film Company, and released through Goldwyn, will be exceeded with "The Road Called Straight," the star's newest production, released May 11.

The producers of this picture set great store by what they call the fulfillment of the Bennison promise. In three previous features, "Oh, Johnny!" "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" and "Speedy Meade," the young cowboy star, has given visible evidence that a new screen luminary was in the making; in the fourth he is made, it is said. As Al Boyd, uncouth but lovable master of a great Western cattle ranch, who beats at their own game the scheming father and fiancé of the girl he loves. Bennison stands revealed as a screen actor without a superior in similar roles. This, coupled with an unusual story, splendid photography, unerring direction, capable titling and many novelties of setting and situation, insures, in the opinion of the producers, a picture wholly worth while.

Big first runs now are being booked for "The Road Called Straight," it is said, and reports from Goldwyn's twenty exchanges throughout the country show that exhibitors have arrived at the realization that in Louis Bennison they have a "box-office star"—one whose increasing popularity insures a bigger return with each successive appearance.

"The Feature," written by Wilson Bayley, author of Bennison's first motion picture, "Oh, Johnny!" and directed by Ira M. Lowry, tells an unhackneyed story of love and luck that rings true. Al Boyd owns the biggest herd on the Little Butte range. Robert Swiftmore, one of the chief figures in a big Eastern packers' trust, makes up his mind to have Boyd's cattle at a profitable price. Boyd is wary and declines to correspond with Swiftmore on the subject; Swiftmore, curious, goes to the Boyd ranch to face the owner.

Betzwood Film Company presents Louis Bennison in "The Road Called Straight," through Goldwyn

Combining pleasure with his business, the packing king takes with him on the trip his daughter, Betty, and the man she loves, Harrison Stevens. From that on the romance develops fast and furious.

Supporting Bennison in the feature is an unusually capable cast headed by Ormi Hawley. Henry Mortimer plays a difficulty role. Burton Churchill and Jane Adler play character parts, and the comedy is handled by John Daly Murphy.

Dragon Room Shown in "The Red Lantern"

A REPRODUCTION of the famous "Dragon Room" — the Emperor's throne room in old Pekin—will be one of the many scenic marvels of the colossal Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern." In fact, this screen version of Edith Wherry's famous novel, in which Nazimova is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, sets a new mark in lavish picturesque embellishment for the superb dramatic art of the Russian star.

The Dragon Room is said to be reproduced to the last detail, with its massive onyx pillars; its carved throne inlaid with precious stones; its hand-wrought filigree and dragons and all the sumptuousness that surrounded the yellow monarchs of the Manchu dynasty before their overthrow and the establishment of a republic in the ancient land of the mongols.

While the scenic environment of the Nazimova production is the last word in artistry, the story itself is one that stands out in bold relief from the beautiful background. It is the story of a girl's struggle—an Eurasian girl, Mahlee, in whom runs the blood of a Chinese mother and an Anglo-Saxon father — against an unkind fate.

Besides enacting the role of Mahlee, Nazimova does that of Blanche Sackville, natural daughter of Mahlee's English father. This part, so unlike that of the Eurasian girl, is a veritable transformation in make-up and emotional range. As Mahlee, Nazimova is darkly oriental; as Blanche Sackville she is a blonde—stately and aristocratic.

Normand Duplicates Hit

Mabel Normand's new Goldwyn picture, now nearing completion at the Culver City Studios, has the title "When Doctors Disagree." It is a small town farcical romance, in which her new director, Victor Schertzinger, excels, and the comedienne is said to give every promise of duplicating the success of "Sis Hopkins" and "The Pest." The cast includes Walter Hiers, George Nichols, Fritzie Ridgeway, William Buckley, James Gordon and Alec B. Francis.

Novel Dinner to Boys Out of Service

Four different branches of the service were represented in the last four of Metro's boys to return to the office, including light Field Artillery, Infantry, Naval Aviation, and the regular Navy.

The occasion of the discharge of the last man was observed by a novel dinner which was tendered to the boys by the Metro officials at a popular Broadway restaurant.

One of the four boys was fortunate to get overseas. He is Pvt. 1st Cl. Herbert Kaufman, who went across with the 52nd Pioneer Infantry.

The other fellows are Corporal William Theall, of the 307th Field Artillery.

John Joseph Bowen, who enlisted in the Navy at Pelham Bay, but was afterwards transferred to the Marine Basin, and Robert Ellsworth, who enlisted as second-class seamon at Pelham Bay, but was transferred to the Naval Aviation branch.

"Daddy Long Legs" Is Neilan's Latest

"It is the best picture I have ever made and I consider it is Mary Pickford's best endeavor."

This is the opinion of Director Marshal Neilan after reviewing a completed studio print of "Daddy Long Legs," first of Miss Pickford's special feature attractions to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Miss Pickford has the role of Judy, the "orphant" girl who is taken from the children's home by a wealthy man and sent to "a boarding school for young ladies." The only condition upon which this philanthropy is bestowed is that he remain unknown to Judy. This is the beginning of a romance which develops from a ridiculous homage into a serious attack of "heart trouble" both for Judy and the mysterious benefactor whom she addresses, in her letters on personal conduct, as "Daddy Long Legs."

Prominent Cast in Next Lewis Feature

"The Gulf Between," Mitchell Lewis' latest production, produced by Select Pictures, will bring Mr. Lewis on the screen for the third time as a Select star, his two other attractions being "Code of the Yukon" and "Children of Banishment." Mr. Lewis is said to have gained a national following as an actor of rugged northern and western types, and his coming attraction will introduce him again in one of his favorite portrayals.

Several actors of national prominence are listed among the members of Mr. Lewis' company. They are Murdock MacQuarrie, Fritzi Brunette, Capt. C. K. Van Auker, Edward Hearn, Nelson MacDowell and others, to be announced at a later date. Norval MacGregor, who directed Mr. Lewis' current Select attraction, "Children of Banishment," is directing the forthcoming production.

Special Service Section on

Wm. S. Hart in "The Money Corral"

BILL HART has been seen as so many different kinds of a "bad man" that if we were playing this picture we would make it plain that instead of being chased by the sheriff here he is taking the law into his own hands and foiling the shrewdest of crooks.

Of course people are looking for the action interest in Hart pictures and there is no lack of it here and the mere fact that his role is the reverse of the usual is likely to increase the desire to see "The Money Corral." Another thing worth keeping in mind is that the live interest is stronger from the start than in most of his pictures and then you have a chance to refer to him "in society."

Another point to feature is that Hart wrote this story himself. You will probably be able to plant a good newspaper story around that fact. You know that this actor has for some time been largely responsible for the direction of his own pictures but now he is branching out as a regular motion picture writer. It will interest every one of his admirers. And promise your patrons that it is a sure enough, red blooded story.

THIS is the way it runs: Lem Beason is refused permission by the ranch owner to attend the rodeo and shooting match and answers by quitting the job and going anyhow. Here we have some fine western stuff and then the revolver test in which one of the other cracks breaks the record held by Lem's father, but Lem steps in and wins the championship back for himself—with his father's gun. Which gives a good line:

"He could shoot the date out of a dime."

Gregory Collins, millionaire Chicago railroad owner, and his daughter are witnesses of the feat and as Collins has just received a telegram that his Chicago vault has been robbed for the second time he offers Lem a job as guard. But none of the city for Lem and he turns it down, much to the regret of the daughter who declares that "he'd be such fun" for her society friends.

But as he is strolling away he comes on a fleeing pet dog and rescues it much to the delight of Rose, the beautiful poor relation of the Collins. As he expresses it she's "something new in girls, and easy to look at." So after she has returned to the private car he changes his mind just in time to make the observation platform and announces to the railroad magnate that he has accepted the job.

THIS vault that he is chosen to guard he names the "money corral" and on his first rounds he finds concealed in each time punch a threat that he will be killed if he is there "on the sixteenth." But threats do not disturb him and he stays on. Then Bruler, one of the trusted employes of Collins and who is evidently the head of the gang of robbers, decides that it is better to get rid of the westerner some other way and sends him to a dive to look for a "Mr. Thompson." There a "frame up" is staged and Beason, thinking that he is rescuing a pretty girl, who is really "Chicago Kate" starts a fight which results in his cleaning up the place and incidentally dropping two of the gang off the fire escape.

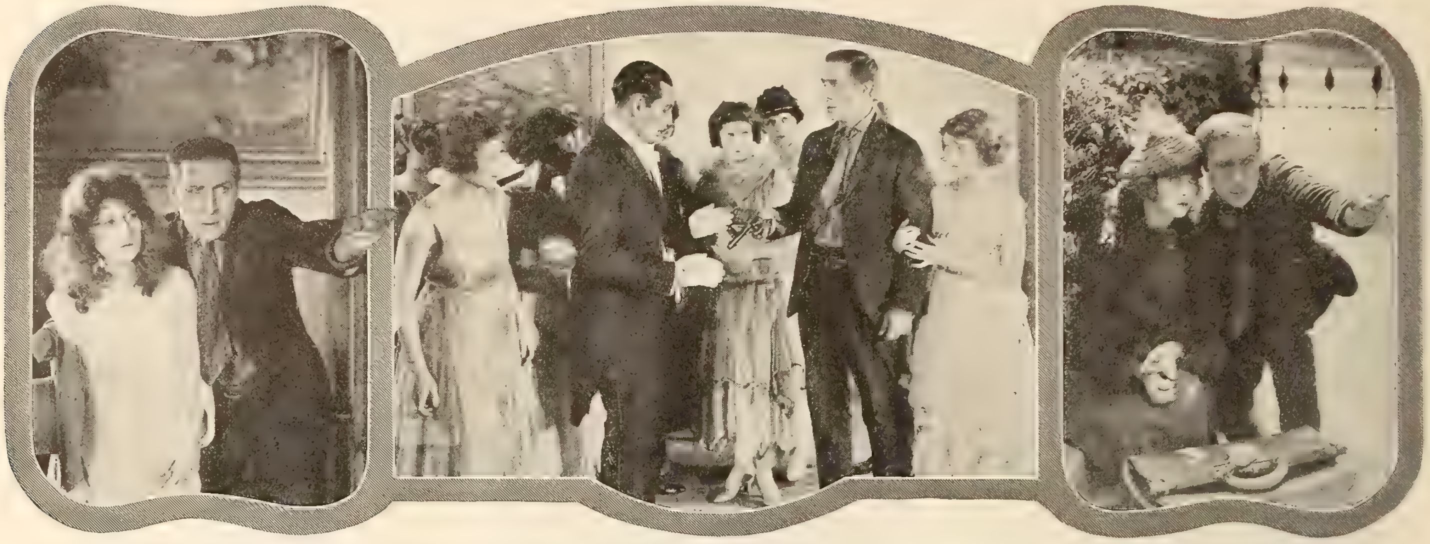
Then he makes his reappearance with the announcement that "I had an appointment with Mr. Thompson and I also came back after my watch"—which had been lifted from him. The police arrive and take him to the railroad man's home and there the matter is dropped.

JANET is giving a dance and she proceeds to carry out her plan for having a lot of fun at Lem's expense when Rose interferes with a protest only to be told by her rich cousin "You're only here because father is sorry for you. You ought to know that." This is too much for the girl who is constantly being taunted by her cousin and this leads her and Beason to come to an understanding of their love for each other. Both are tired of this life and they decide that it is the west for theirs.

The next day Lem goes to Collins to quit, just after the magnate has entrusted Bruler with very valuable papers to be placed in the safe. Lem refuses to remain on the job and gets a sneering laugh from Bruler. As he leaves he feels the bank keys still in his pocket and at the same time remembers that this is the sixteenth, the day that he was threatened with being killed. So he determines that he will do a little further investigating before he takes the train.

SO important are the papers and so watchful is Collins that he has had installed in his home a register so that the rounds of the watchman can be recorded. There is a dramatic moment as he watches

After Bill rescues "the lady in distress" at the left, he's in distress with the society women at the right, but at home in center guarding the "money corral"



Two of the dramatic scenes with his pretty women players, and in the center he "scared to death" at the dance these, but at this very time Bruler and his gang have overpowered the new watchman and are making the rounds. But Lem is on the job, too, and just as they get the safe open there comes the command "Stand still and reach for the sky." Two of the gang are shot and Bruler locked in the safe.

In the meantime opening of the safe sets sets off the alarm in Collins' home and he rushes to the office to find Lem on guard. Beeson then opens the safe, drags out Bruler and introduces him as "Mr. Thompson."

Then comes a fine ranch in the west as a reward and happiness for Lem and Rose.

IF you still have laying around the theatre that old "two gun" cut of Bill Hart, lock it up safely before you start in to exploit this picture, so that you will be sure not to use it. It is distinctly unfair to this producion o give it simply an ordinary play.

And it doesn't matter who the star is and how great his drawing power, the theatre manager is not acting squarely by the player or by his house when he expects merely label advertising with the name of the star and the title to put the production over for him. Every day your patrons are coming to want to know more and more about "the goods" that you are offering them.

Of course the action centers around the big scene at the vault at the end, and we would suggest using one showing Hart with gun in hand before the door, which we have illustrated in the center of one of these panels.

YOU have an opportunity here to bring the lighter side of the picture in as well if you will employ sufficient space in your advertising. Use the picture we have suggested for the main display, and then at the lower part of the display the scene showing Bill seated on a sofa with a couple of society girls on either side of him. Then under this the caption:

"Gee, they've got Bill Hart in society—but it is only for a moment, for, as he says in the picture, he was 'too weak to fight or run.'"

Or then you can use another scene that we have reproduced, where Hart is seated on the sofa with his arm around Rose, her cousin holding his other hand, and the railroad president and his wife at the back:

"Yes, this is Bill Hart right in the midst of happiness. It's a far cry from the sage brush and prairies of the wild west, but, believe us, Bill had to do a lot of his very best sort of fighting before he won this reward."

BUT when we come down to the main selling argument, on the one the punch should be put over strong together with all of the heart appeal that you can get into the display. Let's look over this one:

"Lem Beason could shoot the date out of a dime. And when the railroad president who was beset by a gang of thieves saw Lem win the championship of Montana, he saw just the man that he wanted. The only trouble was that Lem didn't want the job.

"But when he saw a girl 'who was good to look at' and found she was a member of the railroad man's party he changed his mind. Then his troubles started when he took charge of the 'money corral' in Chicago.

"He cleaned up the toughest joint in the town, but then they led him into the midst of a society dance and he was too scared to draw a gun or run. They laughed at him and he didn't know what to do until the girl came to his rescue. Then he bolted, quit the job.

"——but he remembered that this was the sixteenth and that the crooks had threatened to kill the vault guardian that night. Of course they didn't and when the bank president offered him any reward in his power—well, what do you think he asked for?"

HERE'S another one that tells the people that it's a "different" picture, without using that badly tired word:

"They've grabbed Bill Hart off of his own West. Along came a railroad president and saw him shoot the date off a dime. Chicago needed him. Bill didn't think so until he saw——

"But he went—and WHAT DID HE DO IN CHICAGO?"

"He got all mixed up with tall buildings and had to ride on trolley cars. He hadn't left the 'six gun' at home, and it came in mighty handy.

"Night after night he waited around the bank, but the robbers he was looking for didn't come and then he was lured to a dance hall dive. He went to the rescue of 'a lady in distress.' He didn't know that it was 'framed' on him, but he cleaned up the place in true Western fashion.

"That night the police reports said: 'He's just about cleaned up the Chicago underworld,' and they appreciated his work so well that instead of sending him to jail they took him to his millionaire employer.

"But, Oh, Bill! They shoved him out on the ballroom floor in the midst of a bunch of society Janes and he didn't have nerve enough to run or fight. It was back to the prairies for him.

"Then he remembered that this was the night the crooks had promised to kill him, and he was too much of a regular fellow not to give them a chance. He landed the bunch—and a ranch in Montana—and some one to cook for him.

"That's what Bill did in Chicago."

THAT one is long, but we believe it's worth while. With the combination cut arrangement that we have suggested, it could be very nicely used in ten inches, across three columns. But here are a few shorter ones:

"Threats and thugs couldn't weaken Bill in his determination to guard the vault of wealth, but he couldn't stand for the teasing of the society women. So he set about to flee back to his own west—until he remembered that was the day the crooks had threatened to kill him. Can you guess what he did then?"

"Names of towns don't mean anything to Bill Hart; he can fight as well in the cities as on the prairies. You've seen him clean up about all the 'bad men' in the wild West; now come and see the way he takes the safe robbers into camp in Chicago."

"If he can love like he can fight—well, you know how Bill Hart fights. This time he cleans up a Chicago dive and then captures the cleverest of safe-robbers.

"You know already how Bill can fight. Come and see this one and see how Bill can LOVE."

At left he captures the leader of the crooks, and at right his reward. Bill's a regular "family man" in the center

Love Element Will Attract Attention to the Lobby

LET'S have one lobby display here on a Hart picture without the wild west stuff in it. You will find that you can arouse a lot of curiosity by making the appeal largely along the love lines. Of course it is nothing new for Bill or any other screen hero to marry the girl in the end, but here the element of romance is particularly strong.

On one of the three sheets you will find the figure of Hart with a gun in his hand, but pointed toward the ground, his attitude somewhat listless and half a smile on his face. Your artist can supply the rest of the figure. Then to the right of this figure have Cupid, armed with a "six-shooter" instead of the usual bow and arrow pointed at Hart. Then underneath it run the line, prominently:

"Somebody's got Bill Hart covered for keeps at last."

This should be the central decoration of the lobby and the rest can be carried out effectively with a large number of red hearts hanging from the ceiling. Now if you want to adorn these be careful of the picture of the girl that you use. There are two girls shown in the paper, but neither of these is the girl with whom Bill is in love. However, there is one of the stills which shows Jane Novak in his arms with her face upturned and an appealing expression. A cut-out of this pasted on some of the red hearts and his head on the others will vary the display.

SINCE "The Money Corral" was shown at the Rialto theatre during anniversary week and special unpublished music was used for the larger part of it, including the theme, we are unable to pass along those suggestions here. However there is so much of this action that it will largely have to be descriptive music to conform.

We would suggest as the theme "Mighty Like a Rose," since that happens to fit in with the name of the girl. This can be rendered as a solo immediately before the screening and then this should be introduced by the orchestra or organ when the girl comes on the screen for the first time. It should be played as a violin solo when the violinist is seen on the screen and then with the full orchestra when the girl and Hart go into the library.

FOR THE BOYS

THERE is a simple plan by which you can attract unusual attention of the younger generation, and through them, their parents to "The Money Trail."

One of the results of the war has been for the various patriotic organizations, especially the Boy Scouts, to encourage target shooting. The shooting galleries, which had died out to a considerable extent, have now sprung up in most communities and many of these have the small pasteboard targets on which to record individual marksmanship.

Anyway, it will cost a very small amount to have some of these printed with the advertising of the picture on the back. Then offer to give a picture of Wm. S. Hart to every boy under a certain age who makes a certain score. It'll attract attention and probably get you a newspaper story.

And there's not a boy in the world who doesn't want a picture of Bill Hart all for himself.

Naturally the jazz music effects in the duve dance hall and the orchestra at the society dance will be carried out with appropriate music. Where the title comes in saying that Hart is too weak to run or fight you can get a laugh by using just enough of "If He Can Fight Like He Can Love" to carry the action. Another clever musical effect can be introduced at the point where Hart announces to the crooks that he has come back after his watch when "When You Come Back" should be played with a burlesque touch. Still another element of comedy can be introduced when Bill pulls Bruler out of the safe and here the orchestra can use "After the Ball" of Tosti's "Goodbye," the latter burlesqued.

THERE is enough of almost all elements in this so that you can arrange the balance of your program with a free hand. There are mighty few exteriors here so that anything in the way of a scenic will not conflict. But to have the bill a fast moving one all the way through we would advise a slap-stick comedy or at least one with plenty of action to it.

For the same reasons the appeal on this picture should be made general all the way through and that is all the more reason why, as we advised you from the start, that you should get away from the "two gun" angle and make everyone who likes good pictures with interesting stories and competent acting come to see this one. Because it will have an unusual appeal to women, it would be a good plan to play especial attention to developing your matinee business. There isn't the slightest hint of any of the sex stuff here and the children will understand every portion of the story.

YOU have selling talks, too, in the members of the supporting cast. There are three popular actresses included.

Jane Novak, one of the most beautiful of the younger school, is the leading woman. She has appeared with Charles Ray and many of the other stars and doubtless has a considerable following in your section.

Rhea Mitchell has the role of the millionaire's daughter. She is well known from the days of American films while Patricia Palmer, an unusually pretty girl is seen as the girl in the underworld dance hall.

Elsie Ferguson is presented by Artcraft in "Eyes of the Soul"

Salvation Army Picture Excites Attention

Charles E. Whittaker, who has been responsible for the original stories or the adaptations of many Paramount and Artcraft pictures, is the author and Edward Jose was the director of "Fires of Faith," the big special production made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in co-operation with the Salvation Army, which is shortly to be released. Beulah Marie Dix prepared the scenario. In some of the scenes filmed in California nearly a thousand people were used and the effects obtained are said to be astonishingly realistic. Three cameramen worked on the production. C. Edward Shoenbaum and Alvin Wyckoff photographing the exteriors in California and Hal Young doing the interior work in New York.

Legislature Adjourns to See Picture

The Montana State Legislature adjourned for a few hours recently in order that the Salons, the attaches of both Houses, the stenographers, clerks, and everybody could attend the "picture show" as the guests of Senator John C. Kinney. The production shown was "The Light of Western Stars," a United Picture Theatres production featuring Dustin Farnum.

The reason Senator Kinney bought out a Helena, Mont., theatre for the Legislative members is that the drama was enacted on his ranch, and also because he played a minor part in the picture.

Another Ingenue Joins Thomas Ince

Miss Jane "Snooksie" Taylor the young singing ingenue now appearing in the Strand Roof Revue in New York, has been signed for a number of pictures by Thomas Ince and will begin work under his direction when her contract with the Roof management expires.

About New Pictures

Joseph F. Dowling, who appears in "The Harvest of Shame," in support of Dustin Farnum, played with Booth, Barrett and Maggie Mitchell, and once toured England as star of his company.

A private view of Cecil B. DeMille's new Artcraft special, "For Better, For Worse," by Edgar Selwyn and Jeanie Macpherson, was given for a half dozen officials and others the other night at the Lasky studio.

"A Nameless Story" is the working title of a five-part drama, starring Frank Keenan, on which Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., has started work at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles.

A wealth of screen entertainment is said to be provided in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, release of April 20, which contains three of the most novel and entertaining subjects seen in some time.

Helene Chadwick, the ingenue who has recently been playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, interprets the title role of "Caleb Piper's Girl," a five-act comedy-drama produced by Astra, which will be released by Pathe on May 18.

Having completed eight successive Paramount pictures with hardly a moment's rest between productions, Enid Bennett, the Thomas H. Ince star, has decided to take a rest and has started on a tour of the beauty spots of Southern California.

An exact reproduction of a portion of California's penitentiary at San Quentin, near San Francisco, was erected at Universal City for use in several scenes from Priscilla Dean's next Universal attraction, written by Bayard Veiller and bearing the temporary title of "The Chatterbox."

In connection with Vitagraph's release of its latest Corinne Griffith picture, "The Unknown Quantity," which is an O. Henry story, Vitagraph is urging its exhibitors to take full advantage of the value of O. Henry's name by playing up the author in their exploitation of the picture.

"A story of much charm, unusual beauty, great tenderness and high romanticality," is what the Los Angeles Times called "A Midnight Romance," released by First National and starring Anita Stewart, when it opened at Tally's Broadway theatre, where it ran from March 31 to April 6.

Tsuru Aoki, the Hon. Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa, is again seen in a featured part with her Hon. Husband in "The Courageous Coward," produced by the Haworth Pictures Corporation and released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

What is said to be a most unusual character and one that has never before been seen in a motion picture drama is that enacted by Jack Mac Donald in "The Boomerang," a Pioneer Production.

Nazimova will delineate three personalities in "The Red Lantern," her newest production, following "Eye for Eye," "Ception Shoals" and "Toys of Fate."

Allan Edwards has been engaged by World Pictures to take the place of Arthur Ashley as leading man for June Elvidge in her new feature, "The Social Pirate," which is now in course of production with Dell Henderson directing.

An old-fashioned ferry across a narrow river supplies much of the novelty in "The Pest," newest of Mabel Normand's Goldwyn pictures.

An illustration of the fidelity to detail and the great care used in producing "The Jungle Trail," the stupendous African jungle picture starring William Farnum, is the introduction of wild lions, tigers and other jungle beasts in their native haunts.

Scenes showing Travers and Douglas, the well-known golf professionals, in a championship match, are an interesting feature of "The Amateur Liar," the Paramount-Drew comedy released on April 20.

One of the spectacular moments in "Virtuous Men," the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, is the launching of one of the biggest American ships made in the past year.

Some big scenes are promised in the new Broadwest production, "In the Gloaming." For the purpose of obtaining the correct atmosphere for several exterior and interior scenes, it was necessary to procure the use of a liner.

Tom Moore's most recent Goldwyn production is called "One of the Finest"

Dalton in New York to Make Feature

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince's Paramount star, reached New York Tuesday.

Mr. Ince sent Miss Dalton to New York to do what, it is said, will be the most sensational picture of her career.

The new feature is to be a de luxe production, it is said, and will have as locales New York and Paris. It is to be highly dramatic, dealing with the Apaches of the French capital and with people in the higher strata of both cities.

The story was written by an author heretofore unknown, who has since been added to the Ince scenario staff. She is Adele Buffington, formerly a ticket seller at the California Theatre, Los Angeles. The story was adapted by John Lynch and scenarized by R. Cecil Smith.

Pathe Exploitation on "Topics of Day"

Following the announcement that, beginning May 4 Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release weekly "Topics of the Day," selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest, and produced by Timely Film Production Co., the Funk & Wagnalls Co. come forward with another imposing detail in their national campaign of motion and publicity. A daily newspaper campaign is being planned, it is said, which will appear in the most important of the 4,000 newspapers to be utilized to carry the heading, "Two Million Twinkling Eyes." It will exploit the periodical and set forward the screen series as an important feature.

Lillian Hall Signs with Fox

Lillian Hall has signed with William Fox to play the ingenue lead opposite Evelyn Nesbit in her latest Fox picture now being produced at Fox's Fort Lee studio under the direction of Keenan Buel. Miss Hall completed recently, engagements with Taylor Holmes as leading woman in "Taxi" and as lead for Johnnie Dooley in "The Office Force."

Special Service Section on

Lila Lee in "Rustling a Bride"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show Lila Lee in "Rustling a Bride" will do well to give the romantic turns of the story a good play, but they should not forget the comedy angle. An appeal can be made to the whole family by some suggestions of the story, and, though, no one will feel quite sure that this is a story of actual happenings, it is easy to make the appeal straight to the heart.

Lila Lee herself is best known in the larger cities where she has appeared in stage offerings, but there is no reason in the world why you should not get over the spirit of youth which she typifies. This is the season to exploit just such an actress, and if you will keep this pretty girl's picture dominant in your advertising and the breeziness of the picture strong the appeal should be equal to all ages.

This is a western story and there are some thrilling scenes, but every time you put the impress upon this action be sure to mention that a little girl has a whole lot to do with it. That will appeal to the women, and we don't believe that you can find a man in the country who wouldn't rather see a woman—especially if she's pretty—winning out than one of his own sex.

THIS is the way the plot goes: Out on the Alamo ranch there is a new school and a box of books have been sent there from another town. On the fly-leaf of one of them Nick McCredie, a cowboy, finds the inscription: "Emily, you're the prettiest girl in school." Nick conceived the idea that it would be a good thing to write to her, but he fears that he is not good looking enough, and so he borrows a photograph of his friend, Pen Walton, the handsomest man in the outfit.

Then we are introduced to Emily, and the first flash of her shows her feeding her chickens and living alone with her grandmother. It is plain that the grandmother, who has entrusted his affairs to Ezry, a neighbor, wishes Emily to marry this man much older than the girl, and that Ezry is banking on that event, especially since the will names him as her guardian. The only bit of sunshine comes into her life with this letter from the cowboy.

In the meantime there has been an increase in horse stealing around Alamo ranch, and Nick is astounded to come across his friend, Walton, and a Mexican leading away two of the stolen animals. Walton insists that this is the first offense, and promises that he will go straight from that time on if Nick will keep the secret. But the cowboys are growing suspicious, and they promise prompt action when they learn who is guilty.

EMILY'S grandmother dies and Ezry comes in to press his advantage, determined to win the girl and the farm that she has inherited. She loathes the man and appeals to her only friend—Nick, writing him her story and getting an immediate invitation to come to Coyotte Junction and marry him. With the inference that she is going to marry her "guardęen," she gets a hundred dollars from him and then starts on her trip to the west. She is told that "Andy" is going to meet her at the station, for Nick has now become worried because he sent the picture of Walton and he is afraid that she will be disappointed.

So as "Andy," Nick goes to meet the girl, and while they are having lunch together at the little railroad station he asks whether she would be disappointed if Nick was not as handsome as his picture. She would, and therefore Nick decides to put her on the stage, and to make it on horseback to the ranch, little knowing that Walton has been making his final haul of horses preparatory to his escape to the Mexican border, and that he has "planted" one of Nick's gloves to leave the suspicion that he is the thief. Leaving this at the adobe hut, he hies back to the ranch pretending to be wounded and, apparently reluctantly, confesses that his "partner" Nick, is the guilty one.

THEN Walton holds up the stage and seizes the girl taking her to his adobe inn, where he has the horse hidden. Although he tells her that he is the man who wrote to her, and she recognizes him as the original of the photo, she feels an immediate revulsion. There faced with the leering Mexican hireling she manages to escape, and turning the horses out of the corral she mounts one of them and the freed animals start for the ranch.

And their arrival is just in time, for Nick has returned and the cowboys sure that he is the horsethief are about to administer lynch law when the news comes that the horses have returned and the girl with them. She tells her story, of the man who captured her and explains that it was "Nick," as she had recognized from the photo. Then come quick explanation, and a marriage, with Ezry arriving on the scene just in time to get a spurred heel in his face, when the minister asks whether there is any one who knows why the two should not be married.

Romance With Capital "R" Should Be Next

THERE is nothing "great" in "Rustling a Bride," but just because of that reason there is all the more opportunity to sell a delightful sort of a picture to your patrons if you will get into the spirit of it before you do the very first thing. Now just think that this comes to you as we are getting into the warm weather, when it is a good thing to get out under a big tree, stretch one's self on the grass and dream dreams. And there may have been a few people who never had a tinge or romance or who never dreamed of wonderful adventures, but they are mighty few and far between.

You've got to be intensely human here. If you lose the spirit that we have already mentioned you are going to pass up a lot of possible admissions. You should make this appeal to the spirit of the child of eight, to the romance of the girl of eighteen and to the spirit of youth that still finds at least its echo in the man of eighty.

You have the advantage of a sixteen year old star and we would strongly advise playing her picture strong in the advertising.

NOW suppose we take for the main illustration one of the scene pictures showing the star herself. There is young girlhood very evident, a smiling face and innocence radiating. Let's look at some of the selling talks:

"Emily was the prettiest girl in school. She didn't realize it herself and she didn't know that one of the boys had written that statement and her address in his book, and that it was to be one of a box that was sent to a western school. Then a cowboy got hold of the book.

"Nick, the cowboy, had no one in the world, and Emily only her aged cowboy. It was her first romance. What a thrill she got when the letter came from the Western ranch. Gee! And the man—wasn't he the handsomest thing ever, with his spurs and sombrero and everythin'?

"Then her grandmother died and left her alone. Her old 'Guardeen' wanted to marry her and she loathed him—and her cowboy wanted her. So she ran away to him and there her adventure started, with a horse thief, a stage coach robber, villainous Mexicans and lynch mobs and——

HAPPINESS DAY

It's a Good Scheme to Get Regular Attendants For You

NOT long ago an exhibitor in the middle west who changes programs each day set upon the idea of having a "Happiness Day" once a week. He picked Friday night and he made up his mind to have a picture that would delight everyone, with love and romance dominating.

The same idea could be worked for longer runs and here is a chance to try the idea. Inaugurate your first "Happiness Day" or week as the occasion may be with this and see if you cannot get out a lot of people who are seeking pure enjoyment and who don't want any problems to worry over.

"Well, if you're a girl she's just the sort of a girl you'd envy. And if you're a man she's just the sort of a girl that you'd want."

Then this one:

"If you've never dreamed dreams of adventure and romance——

"If you've forgotten youth and the thrills and the warm blood doesn't run through your veins——

"If your heart doesn't still reach out and long for the action of the open and you don't love the hearts that are true——

"Then, and then only, you won't like 'Rustling a Bride.'"

"But if you want to smile a lot and grip your chair a little while—and all the time be delightfully amused, we have but one thing to say:

"COME."

HERE are a couple more that we are suggesting for specific illustrations. Take the one where Lila Lee is seated across the table from the cowboy and is showing him the picture of the man that she had come to marry. If this is used we would advise cutting out at least most of the background to bring the figures out the more prominently:

"Of course she knew whom she had come to marry. And wasn't he the handsomest thing? Well, he was, but she didn't know that the man who sat opposite her was the man who had written the love notes and invited her to be his wife and then had sent another's picture because he feared he was too 'ornery looking.'

"He lost his nerve for a moment and left her. Then she got held up kidnapped and held a prisoner in a Mexican hut by a bunch of horse thieves—and the man whose picture she carried in her bosom. Slam, bang, went romance on the rocks, but one thing that Emily knew was action—and she acted.

"A horse—and she dashed to the ranch—just in time to stop a lynching of the man she loved—though he didn't look like the picture she had. But she was mighty glad—and mighty lucky. And you'll be mighty sorry if you miss her comic opera adventure."

Then here is one that may be used especially well with the picture of the girl and the Mexican and the gun, or, for that matter, with any of the stock cuts or scenes:

"She'd never had a gun in her hands before. But neither had she ever been held up and kidnapped while she was on her way to marry the handsome man whose photograph she loved.

"Emily's romances had been all in her dreams—she had thought out her adventures and she was ready to act when they came. She didn't lose a minute's time. She pulled a lot of Douglas Fairbanks stuff and got away with it to a finish with a thrill and a big laugh.

"Its Romance—with a capital 'R.'"

Emily has all sorts of adventures escaping the horse thieves

Smiles Belong in the Lobby Display and the Music

THERE is no call for either stunt stuff or teaser advertising with this picture We would a great deal rather devote that money to making the newspaper displays just a little larger and the illustrations a trifle more attractive than usual. It is well worth all the space that you will take to put over your selling arguments and to make romance and cheeriness radiate.

This is not a stunt, in the accepted sense, but it is one that will make you money if you are running the picture long enough and will bring a lot of sunshine into the lives of little ones who miss it. Get the cooperation of your local newspaper and arrange for the showing of the picture at a special matinee or morning performance to as many of the orphans of the city as you can accommodate.

Make it plain in these newspaper stories that the reason that you are picking this picture is because it is the sort that will bring a thrill and laughter into every heart.

We would not for the moment advise any fake stuff at the expense of the little unfortunates, but here is a picture that you can look at yourself and make sure that they will enjoy it. If the newspaper writer is clever there can be a mighty big heart appeal put into the way that the kiddies enjoyed the film at the special showing. You see, Emily was a little orphan girl herself, left all alone in the world, and it was a great, big, kind Fate that brought her happiness.

WE would center the lobby display largely about pictures of the star. There is a three sheet that shows her with her arm entwined in that of the cowboy, a delighted expression on both their faces that is bound to carry its appeal. Then from one of the one sheets you can get an attractive picture of the star that will serve for cut-outs. There need be no fear of using too many of these if the cut-out work is carefully done and they are hung so that they can be viewed from all angles.

Be sure to use a full set of scenes from the picture well displayed. In this case we would try a little novelty of using each one of these separately. Mount them on heavy white cardboard and then have the lettering nicely done giving something of the action of the picture, if possible putting the words into the mouth of either the girl or the cowboy. Then under the bottom of each one of these runs such lines as these:

"The happiest picture you ever saw."

"A laugh for every thrill—and lots of 'em."

"Romance—with a capital 'R.'"

"O-o-oh, highwaymen and robbers—and a brave girl—and a laugh and love."

GETTING TALK

Try This for Increased Word of Mouth Advertising

WE are pretty sure that your audiences will like Monte Blue who has the leading male role in this picture. This is the second chance that he has had to show since he left the navy. In "Pettigrew's Girl" opposite Ethel Clayton he was a hit in New York.

So why not run a special slide or send out a special card, reading:

"Say, girls, we are going to introduce a new screen hero to you. His name's Monte Blue, which doesn't sound so heroic, but we are sure that you'll like his smile and his manliness. We want to know—so won't you send us a few lines to tell us what you really think of him."

IF you have the space in your lobby you can get a clever effect through the use of compo board in building on either side of the lobby or the outside of a building. These need extend no further than to show the effect. On the left have the exterior of a country school with a single window and through this let the face of Lila Lee, which can be taken from one of the one sheets, be seen. Then label this with the name of the school.

On the opposite side there should be a reproduction of the "Honeymoon Cottage" which figures slightly in the story, more to give a laugh than anything else. Have another window in this, but instead of having the window transparent use a silhouette effect of the cowboy and girl kissing. This can be improved a great deal by a light effect, through an ordinary alternater, or better still, with the flash first appearing in the schoolhouse window and then running across the lobby above the heads of the patrons and then flashing in the cabin to bring out the silhouette.

MUSIC should be kept light all the way through it. There are times in the action where it must be carried out to the music, but except for the scenes in the adobe cabin stay away from the mysterioso stuff. Better keep up the happiness sway all the way through the screening.

The picture opens with a scene of the boys at Alamao ranch inspecting a box of schoolbooks that have just arrived, and here "Schooldays" can be used with excellent effect. It is enough to set your audiences humming and start them off happy. Then when the cowboy is seen substituting the "handsome man's" picture there can be a little piece of burlesque brought in with "Oh, You Beautiful Doll." When the girl is first introduced she is feeding the chickens and here you can use either "Chicken Reel" or "This Is the Life."

Friml's "Romance" is a good theme here, but we would not introduce this until the scene where the girl and cowboy are seated together in the little restaurant, and then it ought to be brought back as their love is evidenced and finally at the end. In the scenes where Ezry is shown on the floor with the cowboy's spur in his face there is another chance for burlesque with "Cure of an Aching Heart."

This is strikingly a feature for a happy bill and there should be comedy all the way through it. Use one of the lighter love songs if you want a prelude. If you can get four or more girls, dress them up in short skirts and school girl costumes and let them sing "Schooldays" and then carry the music into the feature as we have already suggested.

Mayer Introduces Some Novelties

No Expense to Be Spared in Supplying Exhibitor with Means to Exploit Stewart Productions

IN the relations between producer and exhibitor, service is that indefinable something which the exhibitor thinks he has paid for but does not receive, and the producer just as firmly believes he supplies without compensation, declared Louis V. Mayer in an interview with MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The producer in most cases is honest in his belief that a plentiful supply of service commodity has been shipped gratis to the exhibitor and because it is lost in the shuffle of exchanges and distributors, the exhibitor is just as honest in his belief that he does not get what he pays for.

There is one producer who is going to be over generous in supplying service, and absolutely certain that the exhibitor receives every ounce of it. That producer is myself, said Mr. Mayer, who controls the destinies of Anita Stewart.

On the second release of "A Midnight Romance," I included a song written around the picture by the star herself. I figured that this song would prove helpful because both having the same name, "A Midnight Romance," the pushing of one must necessarily push the other. Added to this, the fact that Miss Stewart had written the song, was in itself a rather unusual feat among movie stars. My first impulse was to publish the song myself, exploit it in a country-wide fashion, arrange for window displays, and tie it up in every possible way with the production in order to give the exhibitor the best possible results. I soon realized that my business was motion picture production and not song publishing. Therefore I engaged a music publisher who could carry out my suggestions for the benefit of exhibitors.

In talking with him recently I asked what had become of the illustrated song idea.

He explained that he was at a loss to say just why illustrated songs had gone into discard, unless it was because the public had decided it wanted something new. This corresponded with my idea. "They wanted something new and they got it in illustrated songs with moving pictures. Just as they graduated from the penny arcade to the motion picture theatre, so they graduated from the still illustrated song to the moving illustrated song.

"Now I maintain that if motion pictures had proven a failure the public would have gone back to the penny arcade with its still pictures shown in slot machines. And for the same reason I believe that the people will be glad to welcome back the still pictures for illustrated songs because the moving pictures have failed. I am going to have these still pictures specially posed by Miss Stewart and the all-star cast of "A Midnight Romance," and I shall include some actual scenes from the picture.

"In this way the exhibitor will not only be able to entertain his audience with illustrated songs, but he will be able to show them the cast and scenes from his forthcoming Stewart picture, which should prove a valuable advertising asset. I want to do this without any expense to the exhibitor and I intend to get enough sets of slides to supply every exhibitor who wants one. I also want an orchestration supplied to every orchestra and band in the country, so that the song can be played in each town, before the picture is presented there, and am going to arrange for free distribution of orchestrations to every exhibitor who expects to use my Stewart productions, and I want him to have a chorus slide of the song.

"I also intend to secure one hundred windows in prominent stores in as many different cities and put an attract-o-scope in each window, to throw slides which will each night tell its song story to countless people the country over.

Alice Brady Completes Select Contract

Alice Brady, it was announced this week, has completed her contract with Select Pictures. This contract, according to advices from Miss Brady, will not be renewed. The star's plans for the immediate future, in regard to motion picture work, have not been determined.

Miss Brady, of course, continues her stage work and is approaching her 300th performance in "Forever After" at the Playhouse, New York.

In her work as a legitimate star, she has won a degree of popularity comparable to that which is hers as a star of the screen. Alice Brady's success in "Forever After," in addition to the popularity which already was hers through the medium of the screen, has made her name a box-office magnet of great power. This fact, coupled with the announcement that this week will mark the conclusion of her contract with the Select Pictures Corporation, makes Miss Brady's future activities in motion pictures a matter of unusual interest.

Dr. Green Departs for South America

Dr. William Green, director, and George Haynes, Prizma photographer, have departed for an extended trip through South and Central America to secure subject matter for a new series of Prizma Master Pictures in nature's colors.

Dr. Green has spent many years as a traveler throughout the world. He is also an actor of note, having played many parts with road and stock companies.

Abrams Successful in Booking Feature

Hiram Abrams, who has been successful in disposing of a large number of the state rights for George Beban's "Hearts of Men," received a telegram this week from Clyde Elliott, of the Greater Stars Productions, Inc., of Chicago, who have purchased the rights for Indiana and Illinois, showing conclusively that the purchasers of the picture are having remarkable success with the enormous bookings it is said they are obtaining.

Mr. Elliott's telegram was as follows:

"Sold Harry Miller on Madison street, four days repeating on the Band Box Theatre, which gives us twenty-five days in all in the Loop. This is without doubt the best representation a legitimate picture, devoid of cheapness and sensationalism the Loop has ever enjoyed."

Mr. Elliott also advised Mr. Abrams that the picture is booked for the entire circuit of Lubliner and Trintz Theatres and also for the entire circuit of the Asher Brothers' theatres.

Exhibitors of "Our Teddy" Receive Publicity

In line with its new policy of supplying exhibitors of "Our Teddy," the authorized Roosevelt picture, with feature stories tying up scenes in the picture with striking events of the day, the special service department of McClure Productions, Inc., is preparing for bookers of the Roosevelt film, a story called "The Home-Coming Atlantic Fleet Foreshadowed in 'Our Teddy,'" in connection with the arrival of 103 warships in the port of New Zora.

In "Our Teddy" Roosevelt is pictured in an impressive scene giving the orders that sent the fleet around the world. In another scene he is portrayed in conversation with Admiral, then Lieutenant Sims.

The popularity and usefulness of this special McClure feature story service among exhibitors is attested by the numerous requests for reprints and additional stories that come into the McClure office.

Crandall Likes Hodkinson Plan

Washington Exhibitor Contracts For First New Production Released Through Open Booking Policy

THERE is said to have been two immediately recognizable results of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's policy of wide open booking, which not only permits but prefers to sell all of its productions past and present singly on the basis of their individual merits.

First, exhibitors large and small are reported to have welcomed this decision with the larger exhibitors of the country for the first new production released through the Hodkinson mechanism, the Artco-Harry Raver-Augustus Thomas production, "As a Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird, and directed by George Irving.

In closing for a booking of his solid Washington, D. C. chain of theatres, Harry M. Crandall, the big Washington exhibitor said: "If you were offering me 'As a Man Thinks' as a part of a series of pictures, I would find it difficult and perhaps impossible to play this big production, not because I do not want it, but because my previous and existing contracts would not permit my taking on at this period of the year a volume of additional pictures.

"I do not mean by this that I am committing myself to a full-fledged approval of wide open bookings, for there are many conditions within the trade that must be adjusted before I would wish to wholly approve."

"As a Man Thinks" has been booked for immediate playing dates at the Crandall Metropolitan, Knickerbocker, Ninth and E. streets Theatre, Savoy, Apollo and Avenue Grand.

Talbot's America Theatre, Denver, on the heels of a liberal advertising campaign leads off in the Denver territory with the heaviest exploitation on "As a Man Thinks" that its proprietor has given any picture in the past six months, and at the same time, Talbot gives an unequivocal indorsement of the policy of open booking that permits him to take big productions singly in the most conspicuously successful motion picture theatre in Colorado at the present time.

Pathe Plans Heavy Advertising Campaign

PATHE Exchange, announces that, beginning Sunday, May 4th it will release weekly the famous "Topics of the Day," selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest. Negotiations have been in progress for several weeks and upon their completion was perfected what is estimated to be the broadest, biggest and most minutely worked out campaigns of promotion and publicity, it is said, ever shaped in the history of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager says:

"I am especially happy in making the announcement of Pathe releasing 'Topics of the Day.' Impressed with the originality of the feature and the strength of its popular appeal, we have carefully watched the growth of it, its bookings in first run houses, the nature of its reception and the manner in which it 'went over.' These brightest short sayings from newspapers of the world, selected by the editors of the Literary Digest and transcribed to the screen, immediately took a strong hold on public appreciation. Audiences were quick in their responses to the lively humor, keen satire and trenchant criticisms on the social, political and other foibles of the day. As an addition to our list of short subject releases, I believe this to be the very best that could be secured. The weekly release is of 350 foot length and I am of the firm opinion that "Topics of the Day," in conjunction with our serials, Pathe News, Pathe Review and the Lloyd's comedies, gives us the most perfect short subject program on the screen today.

"It is a perfect supplement of the Pathe News which 'sees all; knows all' and places the world before your eyes.

Billboards for Vitagraph Serial

Inaugurates Big Twenty-four Sheet Campaign to Exploit "Perils of Thunder Mountain"

VITAGRAPH has perfected its plans for one of the largest billboard campaigns in its history, it is declared, in connection with the releases of the Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain."

Eight 24-sheet sketches by as many different artists were submitted and from these the selection for he stand was made. The 24-sheet pictures one of the big thrills in the serial, a novelty not only in the matter of billboarding, but likewise a thrill which is expected to earn for itself the reputation of the most sensational spectacle that the screen has so far witnessed.

The hero and heroine are shown on the roof of a shack being swept away by a mountain torrent toward a waterfall that is sure to annihilate them. The poster is being printed in striking colors and within a few weeks, it is stated, will cover stands throughout the country.

Vitagraph's billboard campaigns on its serials heretofore have been potent aids in launching these chapter thrillers and the stand of "Perils of Thunder Mountain" is heralded as the most enticing of all of Vitagraph's series of 24-sheet smashes.

"Perils of Thunder Mountain" was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. The serial is in fifteen episodes and is now well under production. Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are the stars and R. N. Bradbury and William Baumann are the directors.

The production is described as a real snow serial. The greater part of the action takes place in the midst of vast reaches of snow. The serial company worked for weeks in Truckee, California and secured some of the most wonderful snow scenes they ever filmed.

Vitagraph counts specially on the snow element in the serial as a summer attraction for it is felt that during the hot months, "Perils of Thunder Mountain," with its shots of great snow drifts is expected to be a welcome spectacle for screen followers.

Norma Talmadge Breaks More House Rcords

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Probation Wife," according to recent announcements from Select Pictures Corporation is said to have broken the house record at Loew's Stillman theatre in Cleveland as she has done consistently at Lowe's New York theatre with each consecutive picture since first she came under Select banner.

"The Probation Wife," which is said to have brought in more business than the "Heart of Wetona" which preceded it, is breaking all records, it is claimed for Marcus Loew's Metropolitan circuit. At the Avenue B theatre on the lower East Side and at the 116th street theatre, in Harlem, "The Heart of Humanity," had established house records which seemed insurmountable until Norma Talmadge came along with "The Probation Wife" and at the same fifteen cent price climbed beyond the established mark and set a new house record for these theatres. It is said, the public came in such large numbers to the 116th street theatre that the management was forced to give additional night showings of "The Probation Wife," running from eleven to fifteen minutes past midnight.

At Loew's Metropolitan theatre in Brooklyn, which is said to be the largest motion picture theatre in the world, with its four thousand one hundred and fifty seats, the existing house record had been set by a variety bill which was topped by a well known vaudeville act. On a recent holiday this record was also broken by Norma Talmadge in "The Probation Wife."

Abel Sails for Europe to Assist Fox

Another indication of the magnitude of the plans which William Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan have formulated for the extension of the Fox Film Corporation's producing and distributing activities in Europe was given this week when Sydney Abel, head of the corporation's contract department, sailed on the Caronia for England. He will meet Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan in London. It is thought likely that his work will be that of assisting Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan in establishing new branch offices.

Mr. Abel has been in the distribution branch of the film industry for twelve years, as salesman, branch manager and executive of the Fox and other companies.

Margaret Turnbull Joins Lasky Forces

Margaret Turnbull, scenario writer and author of many Paramount pictures, was scheduled to arrive at the Lasky studio in Hollywood last week to begin work in Frank E. Woods' department. Her first scenario will be an adaptation of "It Pays to Advertise," the former stage success, which it is understood will be used as a Paramount starring vehicle for Bryant Washburn.

Other recent acquisitions to the personnel at the Lasky studio are Walter Woods, scenario writer, and Major Wallace, an expert mechanical and electrical engineer, who has been engaged to conduuct a serious of experiments in special lightings for pictures.

Arbuckle Changes Plans

Owing to weather conditions, which have held up work on the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Bank Clerk," and also because the script will need revision, "Fatty" Arbuckle has decided to temporarily suspend work on this particular film and make a Western subject for his next comedy release.

Does Big Business With Murray Feature

Following a week of exceptional business it is said with Mae Murray's most recent Universal Special Attraction, "The Delicious Little Devil" the Broadway Theatre, New York, began a week's showing of Harry Carey's latest Universal release, "Bare Fists" on Sunday April 20.

Manager Kashin reported that no production, with the exception of "The Heart of Humanity," has attracted such crowds during the past eight months as "The Delicious Little Devil."

"Bare Fists" opened its run to capacity business it is said and continued to play to splendid business throughout the week.

"Help! Help! Police!" Walsh's Latest

George Walsh's latest picture, "Help! Help! Police!" produced by William Fox, is said to be full of thrills and unusual stunts and is pronounced his best, by the Fox offices.

It was directed by Edward Dillon, who staged the last two George Walsh successes.

In this picture George is seen as the son of a millionaire manufacture of safety razors, who is engaged in an industrial war with a rival manufacturer. He becomes the center of financial plots, kidnappings, midnight rescues, police court scenes and a pretty romance.

Vitagraph Announces Williams' Next

Earle Williams' next release, "The Usurper," which Vitagraph has scheduled for release the end of April, was originally produced on the stage by the late Nat Goodwin. It was written by I. N. Morris and the screen version has been directed by James Young.

Mr. Williams' support includes Louise Lovely, Bessie Eyton, Bob Russell, Frank Leigh, Billie Elmer, Jay Morley, Audrey Chapman, and Lillian Langdon.

Coming Program Offerings

Wehlen Makes First of Romantic Comedies

First of Emmy Wehlen's new series ot romantic comedies, to be produced under her new contract with Metro, will be released May 5.

"The Amateur Adventuress" is the title of the play, Metro having retained the name of the original novelette by Thomas Edgelow.

June Mathias, head of Metro's scenario department and Luther A. Reed collaborated on the story.

The story discloses the interesting adventures of little Norma Wood, a stenographer in the employ of William Claxtonbury, president of the Working Girls' Welfare Association. She has been in his employ over six months and has already discovered that his kindness is fathered by an ulterior motive which will sooner or later force her to sever business relations with the old hypocrite.

Norma's lover is a poor clerk, who has peculiar ideas of life and expects Norma to share them. He will never earn more than twenty-five dollars a week but informs Norma that he has decided they can marry at once and she may continue to work. Norma becomes disgusted and determines to break away and see life as others see it. One obstacle before Norma is lack of pretty clothes. She finds a way to obtain them, however, which entangles the life and marital happiness of her deceitful employer. She becomes an adventuress but only in a half-hearted sort of way. It is a fight against her finer nature. However, she finally strikes the right road, which leads her to better life and the right man.

Emmy Wehlen, star in Metro Pictures

The production is said to be a masterpiece, as far as settings and locations go. Miss Wehlen while playing the part of the adventuress, will wear a number of stunning gowns.

In the cast are Allan Sears (leading man), Gene Pallatte, William V. Mong, Marion Skinner, Lucille Ward, Bonnie Hill and Victor Potel, all of them capable players and most of them acknowledged comedy artists.

"The Eternal Magdalene" Makes Record

GOLDWYN Distributing Corporation announces the receipt of more than 300 contracts on "The Eternal Magdalene," the big Goldwyn extra, within the last ten days. The success achieved by the drama at pre-release showings in Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and in several large cities of the East has stimulated bookings, and Goldwyn executives confidently predict "The Eternal Magdalene" will even eclipse the record distribution mark set by "For the Freedom of the World," which has proved one of the greatest money-getters the industry has ever known, it is declared.

Aside from its box-office attractiveness, "The Eternal Magdalene" in its picture form it is said is certain to be hailed as a greater artistic triumph than Robert H. McLaughlin's stage version, the reigning hit of two seasons in the larger cities of the country. Based on a theme that touches almost every man, woman and child in the world, this Goldwyn presentation becomes a startling panorama picture, exceeding in novelty and completeness anything ever done for the screen, it is said.

"'The Eternal Magdalene' opened to capacity business," was the report by wire from John Keane, manager of the Bandbox theatre, Chicago.

A recent trade showing of the picture in the Minneapolis Goldwyn office resulted in immediate bookings it is said by prominent exhibitors in the Northwest.

Trade showings at the Pittsburgh, Dallas and Atlanta Goldwyn exchanges were also productive of many immediate bookings on "The Eternal Magdalene," according to reports from those localities.

World Film Schedules "Unwritten Code"

World Pictures will number among its May releases "The Unwritten Code," a five-reel picture in which Shirley Mason is the star. Prominent in her support are Matt Moore and Ormi Hawley. The picture was written and directed by Bernard Durning.

The scenes are laid in Japan and the story has to do with the utter impossibility of the two civilizations meeting in common so far as the equality of race is concerned.

Miss Mason plays a Japanese girl while Mr. Moore represents the American man who momentarily is fascinated by her. Ormi Hawley represents the Caucasian girl.

"As a Man Thinks" stars Leah Baird. The production is a Raver picture through W. W. Hodkinson, Inc.

Public Anxious for Chaplin Releases

A letter recently written by J. B. Stout, owner of Stout's theatre, in Danville, Ky., regarding Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" illustrates how the public appetite for this star has been whetted by the slowness of his releases.

Recently Mr. Stout was induced by Lee L. Goldberg, of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, to play "Shoulder Arms" for a return engagement.

Mr. Stout wrote: "For your information when we repeated 'Shoulder Arms' we did some business. As you know I don't like return dates, but this one went over, and I want 'A Dog's Life' for Saturday, April 12. I will take my hat off to 'Shoulder Arms.' I made more money on that picture than on lots of those so-called big pictures for which I paid fabulous prices. A man that can't make money on 'Shoulder Arms' ought to quit the game."

MacLean Appears with Dorothy Dalton

Douglas MacLean is slated to support Dorothy Dalton in her newest Paramount picture, "The Homebreaker," produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. This story is said to be one of the cleverest conceptions of John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith did the scenario with accustomed skill. Miss Dalton appears as a traveling saleswoman who breaks up the scheme of two crooks to mulct her employers. Others in the cast are Edwin Stevens, Frank Leigh, Beverly Travis, Nora Johnson and Mollie McConnell.

New Joyce Feature

The release of Vitagraph's latest Alice Joyce picture, "The Cambric Mask," marks the fourth Robert W. Chambers story that Miss Joyce has brought to the screen. Miss Joyce has so far appeared in "The Business of Life," "The Woman Between Friends," "The Fettered Woman," and "The Cambric Mask," all from the pen of Robert W. Chambers, and all directed by Tom Terriss.

Madge Kennedy Completes Another Goldwyn

Madge Kennedy has completed her latest Goldwyn picture, "Leave It to Susan." The picture is said to be unlike anything she has attempted before. She is seen as the daughter of an Eastern capitalist who goes West on business. In some way she is left on the desert with her dog as her only companion, and while seeking habitation meets with strange and perilous adventures.

The cast includes Wallace MacDonald, Alfred Hollingsworth, George Kunkle, Anna Hernandez and Walter Heirs.

Three Drew Comedies

The first of the three Paramount-Drew comedies made by the late Sidney Drew and Mrs. Drew and yet to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is scheduled for April 20. This is "The Amateur Liar," by Albert Payson Terhune.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew are seen as Henry and Polly Minor.

The comedy is said to have many funny situations and is handled in the usual Drew manner.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, to be presented in their own comedies by National through Goldwyn Distributing Corp.

Pathe Program for April Strong in Features

Pathe program for April 27 is announced as especially strong in feature, serial comedy and miscellaneous interest and is headed by the widely exploited, romantic production of Leonce Perrett, "The Unknown Love," starring Dolores Cassinelli with E. K. Lincoln. It is released as a Pathe special and it is said, should make a profund appeal to the hearts of women.

"The Glowing Eyes," episode No. 2 of "The Tiger's Trail," also released April 27, opens as the heroine, Belle Boyd, Ruth Roland, agrees to tell the Tiger Wirshippers where she has hidden her portion of the Pact of Three in order to escape from the the Tiger's cage, where they have imprisoned her.

A rollicking, keen satire on life around the modern stage is "Ring Up the Curtain," the Rolin comedy starring Harold Lloyd, with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard. There are pretty girls in it and some pretty strenuous knockabout work—but it is clean, wholesome and full of laughs.

Pathe Review No. 8 has been called a "wonder issue," for, with a combination of the microscope and motion picture camera, it shows the circulation of the blood. Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars has studies of the chimpanzee; the Pathe color travel views are of Japan; the Novagraph slow-motion pictures show lariat throwing and cowboy stunts.

Pathe News No. 36 is released on April 20 and No. 37 on Saturday, May 3.

Novelizes Houdini Serial

The novelized version of "The Master Mystery," B. A. Rolfe's super serial featuring Houdini has been placed on the bookstands and is acting as a helpful advertising aid to exhibitors playing the serial.

In order that the book may be of service to the exhibitor as an advertising accessory, a sample window display has been prepared, a reproduction of which will be furnished to every book dealer putting in a supply of the "Master Mystery." These displays can only be obtained by the book dealer from the local exhibitor.

Four New Christies for Release

The Christie Comedy company announces the following releases:

"Marrying Molly," a college story, in which Bobby Vernon and Dorothy DeVore appear, directed by Wm. Beaudine.

"Apartment Twenty-Three" follows, with Ethel Lynne and Earl Rodney in an amusing situation of love and business, directed by Wm. Beaudine.

"Lost—a Bridegroom," featuring Bobby Vernon and Dorothy DeVore, a comedy written around the "flu," and directed by Scott Sidney and

"Stop-Look-and Listen," presenting Ethel Lynne, Jay Belasco and Earl Rodney, a comedy in which a strong man is arrested several times, but finally gets the girl, also directed by Wm. Beaudine.

Two Universal Westerns

"The Last Outlaw" and "Wanted for Murder" are temporary titles of the Universal Western dramas now being produced at Universal City. The first is being made by Jack Ford and will feature Ed. Jones and Lucille Hutton and will also introduce to the screen Princess Neola May, a full-blooded Indian from Arizona, who has shown ability for screen work. Magda Lane and Pete Morrison are to be the featured players of the second production, which George Holt is preparing.

Cassinelli Begins Work for Capellani

Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian star, has begun work in the first of a series of features in which she will be starred under the supervision of Albert Capellani, for release through the Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

Mr. Capellani announces that the story is founded on a widely-advertised American stage attraction, the title of which he is not yet in a position to divulge.

The supporting company numbers some of the most prominent players in films.

Mayflower Picture to Be Made

British Company Announces They Have Decided to Make Big Feature Under Jenks' Direction

The Harma Company of Great Britain announces that it has decided to take advantage of the tercentenary of the sailing of the Mayflower, and produce a pictorial representation of that epoch-making event which shall prove a worthy example of what the British producer is capable of accomplishing, and give the world a film the like of which it believes has never previously been seen.

The film will be produced under the direction of H. M. Jenks, the Rev. J. Marchant assisting him. No expense will be spared in regard to scenario or staging to make the Mayflower film a worthy example of British production, and a permanent record of the part played by our forefathers in the founding of America.

It is believed that exhibitors will show great interest in this picture for the reason that President Wilson and the Prime Minister of England, Lloyd George, it is said, have voiced their approval of it, thus creating an interest in the people of both countries to witness the picture on its completion.

This, it is thought, will give an added impetus to the British film in England and foster that feeling of reciprocity which is so absolutely essential for the success of British productions in America.

If the expectations of the Harma Company are realized, as it confidently expects they will be, Mr. Jenks will indeed have done something to be proud of. Mr. Jenks' name should be handed down to posterity as a benefactor to the picture industry.

President Wilson in sanctioning the undertaking, it is said, described the Mayflower expedition as the first movement of the shuttle that has woven so strong a fabric of intimacy between the people on two sides of the water.

Lloyd George, the Prime Minister, is said to have declared that the picture will do much to show the people of both America and England what both countries owe to their forefathers, to quicken their love of liberty and to establish that peace for which the descendants of the men of the Mayflower have fought and died side by side with the British boys.

An exact replica of the Mayflower is to be constructed, and a special visit will be made by the company to Holland, where part of the story is to be enacted in order to secure local environment. The cast, it is said, will be a capable one, and accuracy even in the most minute details, it is claimed, will be the keynote of the production.

Screen Magazine Features Bohemian Quarter

Glimpses of New York's famous Bohemian quarter, Greenwich Village, make up one of the features of the New Screen Magazine No. 10, released through Universal exchanges the last week of April.

Views of Seminole Indians, a humorous episode, entitled "Sinking an Iron Kelly," a railroad journey to the summit of the Schynigge Platte, an underground winter resort, "Children's Paradise." Abe Martin's bits of philosophy and humor and Willie Hopkins' "Miracles in Mud," complete the issue.

Vitagraph Closes Contracts in Akron

It is announced that one day last week saw contracts closed for Vitagraph's Big "V" Special Comedies by the Garden theatre, the Palace theatre and the Arcade, all in Akron, Ohio. Vitagraph feels that this is a rather complimentary day's work in one city and on one unit of its service.

Vitagraph releases its Big "V" Special Comedies, each consisting of two reels, every other week.

The Independent Field

E. W. Hammons Goes to Europe

General Manager of Educational Makes Four Weeks' Trip Abroad in Search of Short Reels—Deal Awaits Closing

E. W. HAMMONS, Vice-President and General Manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, sails Monday on the Adriatic for London to begin a four weeks' trip through European cities in search of new things in single-reel film attractions. An important international business arrangement is in prospect and Mr. Hammons is planning the trip with the idea of closing up the matter in person.

The necessities of business will be combined with pleasure in the sense that the ocean voyage will mark the first occasion in five years when Mr. Hammons has permitted himself to be absent from his desk for any such length of time. Mr. Hammons is one of the youngest executives in the motion picture field, and since 1914 has seen his organization build up from an idea to its present enviable position in the motion picture industry of today.

At the present time the Educational organization is declared to be the largest in the field devoted exclusively to production and distribution of short-length films, and is operating sixteen exchanges in the United States, with a foreign sale for its product in every corner of the globe. The "Robert C. Bruce Scenics," the "International Cartoon Comedies," "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," George D. Wright's Series on "Mexico Today" and the Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature" are the principal features of the Educational program at the moment, and are augmented by the release of numerous special productions and feature subjects of single-reel length.

While abroad Mr. Hammons intends to make a thorough study of the reception of Educational short-length subjects for European audiences. The exceptional foreign sale for the Robert C. Bruce pictures of American scenery, and the International cartoon comedies, in particular, has been remarkable in extent and wonderfully interesting, from a viewpoint of the taste of European people. In the opinion of Mr. Hammons, the whole status of film exportation has changed in recent months. The day has passed when "junk film" was automatically consigned to foreign markets, and the worth-while American producer of today tries as hard to please his patrons in Patagonia and Peru as he does his first-run customers on Broadway.

Tallman of Montana Buys Rights to "Boomerang"

F. D. Tallman, of Montana, called at the offices of the Pioneer Film Corporation last week and asked to see "The Boomerang."

After the seven reels had been run off Mr. Tallman asked the price of the Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana territories. He was told and at once signed contracts and made out a check to the order of the Pioneer Film Corporation.

This was simply an instance of a real live showman seeing at once the possibilities of "The Boomerang" as an out of the ordinary motion picture.

Supreme Pictures Organizes to Buy and Sell

Supreme Pictures, Inc., with temporary headquarters at 116 West 39th St., has organized for the purpose of buying and selling features produced by independent manufacturers and distributing such productions of merit as will appeal to the independent exchanges of the United States and Canada, and at the same time afford such productions proper distribution in the foreign markes.

The corporation has a number of subjects under consideration for world wide distribution, and will shortly make announcement of its first offering.

Announces Distribution of Houdini Serial

Octagon Films announce that through an arrangement made last week with World Film, whereby that organization will distribute "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, in thirteen states and half of another, all the territory has been sold.

The distribution of the film throughout the world is being handled by twenty-six exchanges, twenty-four of them in the United States, one in Canada and one selling the foreign rights. They are:

Criterion Film Service, Atlanta, Ga.; Federal Feature Film Co., Boston; Day Film Corporation, Pittsburgh; Arrow Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Southwestern Film Corporation, Dallas, Texas; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago; Effano Film Exchange, New York; Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.; Mid-West Distributing Co., Milwaukee; New Jersey Metro Film Service, New York; Star Feature Film Service, Cleveland; Joseph Goodstein, Denver; Criterion Film Service, New Orleans; and Goyette Productions, Detroit. Independent exchanges are: World Film, Kansas City, San Francisco, Omaha, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Denver, Seattle, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Chicago.

Regal Films, Ltd., controls the Canadian territory, while Export and Import Film Co. is selling foreign rights.

Gale Henry Comedies Sell Rapidly

The Bulls Eye Film Corporation announces the rapid sale of territory on the Gale Henry subjects.

The territories sold are as follows:

Standard Film Service, for Ohio and Michigan; Interstate Films, Inc., for New York State; R. D. Marson Attraction Co., for Boston and Massachusetts; Masterpiece Film Corp., for eastern Pennsylvania; Bee Hive Exchange, for southern Illinois and Indiana; Canadian Film Service, for western Canada; E. & H. Film Distributing Co., for Georgia, Tennessee, North and South Carolina; Capital Film Service, Inc., for Washington, D. C., Maryland, Delaware and Virginia; Liberty Film Renting Company, western Pennsylvania.

Rothapfel's Jump from the Camp Chair

Exhibitor-Producer's Efforts During Seven Years of Application Result in Artistry and Originality of Unit Program —First Step Taken in This Direction

IT is a long jump from a camp chair, one of two dozen rented from the local undertaker to form the seating capacity of a makeshift motion picture theatre, to the director's chair of two of the world's leading theatres and the producer of the first complete program of picture entertainment, but that is cited as just what Samuel L. Rothapfel has done in the short space of eleven years.

"To Samuel L. Rothapfel," said an announcement this week, "the public owes much for the advancement of its one big entertainment. To him should go the credit for raising this form of amusement to a plane on level with opera and the drama, for it is he who has made the music vie with the picture for its popularity."

Starts in Baseball

Mr. Rothapfel's managerial ability first asserted itself in the town of Carbondale, Pa., as the promoter and manager of the champion baseball team of that section. This was before "Roxie," as he was known then to his friends, had entered the motion picture business. It was during the year 1907 that he "put over" his champion team and a short time thereafter journeyed to Forest City, another Pennsylvania town, and opened his first picture theatre, if the combination bar-room and improvised place of amusement that he opened could be called a theatre. Here is where "Roxie" really started on his road to success in the motion picture business. A road so rough and difficult and so filled with obstacles that a man of less courage would have given up in despair.

Samuel L. Rothapfel had his entire future of success marking the time that he held forth in the so-called theatre in the rear of a full-fledged bar-room in Pennsylvania. It may be safely assumed that Mr. Rothapfel is the only one out of the many who saw his shows who took the matter as anything but a plaything, a huge joke. But this same Rothapfel, as events have proved, was even then working toward the goal that he has now attained.

The "dean of the motion picture impresarios," as he has been termed, is not only a student of psychology but a firm believer in its effect. He plays on the psychological mind. This has never been better illustrated than his belief in the psychology of music in heightening the entertainment value of the silent drama. He made the music speak for the picture, and with the two combined he embellished a real art—one that took its place on Broadway and held it against all opposition, and one that is now recognized with the opera and the drama as distinctive.

Those "Filler" Days

Until the Rothapfel program at, first, the Regent Theatre, later the Strand and more recently the Rialto and Rivoli theatres were presented to the public, the musical phase of a motion picture theatre's program was serving simply as a filler. Any old tune was played and, with but a few exceptions, a player piano was the only instrument to furnish the music at a theatre. Mr. Rothapfel gave music its place in the silent drama and with it he gave the public an art.

Samuel L. Rothapfel studying a script preparatory to shooting a scene

Mr. Rothapfel sends the following statement to the press:

"While managing director of a theatre I was compelled to take the other fellow's picture, whereas, Now I can go back to the root of things, and while having my picture under production, I can at the same time take under consideration the musical phase of the program, with the result that when completed the musical accompaniment and the production will have sprung from the same creative mind and will necessarily present more of the unified continuity than is represented in the program that necessitates adaptability in the picture lending itself to the music in return.

Raised with Care

"In short, my program will be likened to a well regulated family, in this respect. Each of the eight features of the Rothapfel Unit Program will be "reared" under the same roof, by the same hand, in the same atmosphere, the same environment and springing from the same creative mind.

"By this reasoning I feel that I make no false boasts or promises when I say that the musical settings for the Rothapfel Unit Program will be an improvement, artistically, upon any program presented by me at any of my theatres in the past.

"It has been proved that music in the motion pictures themselves. Before music was accorded its rightful place in the motion picture theatre, there was a certain class of people who went rarely to the theatre presenting a program of pictures. These same people enjoyed the silent drama, but the incentive offered by the picture alone, was not strong enough to attract them excepting on rare occasions.

"With the advent of music as a feature of the picture program, thousands were won over to the silent drama because with the local accompaniment, the presentation of pictures was raised to a higher art, akin to the opera and rising above the opera in this respect—viz., that the drama and opera are now combined or will be in my program.

"Not very long ago I visited every important city from here to the Coast, and made observations of the methods employed by different managers in putting on their programs. I have visited some of the country's biggest and best theatres. One thing, in particular, I noticed and it has proved of priceless value to me in the building of my first Unit Program.

"How easy it is to have one's whole show ruined by an incongruous musical selection or overture. It is always natural to judge any performance from its weak spots or spot. Even though the major portion of the program is excellent, the little weakness in this or that part, stands out.

"That is what I mean by my statement concerning the importance of music in the motion picture. That is the phase I am seeking to make an art. Music will be given just as careful attention as production. It will be made to speak the sentiments conveyed by the production. It will combine the opera with the drama."

"Eagle and Fawn" Claims Indian Cast

"The Eagle and the Fawn," which was a recent scenic feature at the Rialto Theater, New York, is the first of several single-reel attractions with an all-Indian cast, according to the statement of Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

"The Eagle and the Fawn" is considered one of those rare scenic offerings that presents an ideal combination of fine scenery, characters and story, without losing sight of the fact that the subject is essentially a scenic picture. The pictorial romance of the Indian girl and the handsome brave, and the introduction of the Indian types that appear as supporting character, in no way detracts from the beauty of the Wyoming scenery.

Change in Newspaper Attitude

Bert Adler, of Interocean Visits Washington and Finds Exhibitors and Press Working in Harmony

"THE newspapers used to be the natural enemy of the films. I know that back in the old Thanhouser days we had company news thrown back on us with all sorts of sarcastic editorial comment," said Bert Adler, just returned from the Washington, D. C., opening of "The Better 'Ole."

"Nor were these throw-backs due to poor news value of copy submitted, or to a prevalency of 'press agent bunk' in the stories. The fact of the matter is it was very simple to write genuine news in those days. There were but few producers operating and there were tons of sources to work—sources that are exhausted today.

"The hostile attitude was due to the newspaper sentiment of the time. The difference in that sentiment is one of the interesting changes in matters relating to the motion picture. Ask Arthur James, John Flinn, Ben Schulberg, Joe Brandt or the others who had to do with movie publicity in the old days."

In Washington, Mr. Adler found what he calls "unexpected sympathy" with the better motion picture on the part of the papers. And he says one reason is that the exhibitors have come to fully realize the necessity of their advertising support of the local press, in line with the editorial recommendations of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for over three years. The picture men no longer hesitate to buy space liberally according to the occasion.

Walter Coates, advertising manager of the Washington Star, said to the "Better 'Ole" representative: "There is a city nearby wherein the leading newspaper, which carried little or no picture house advertising, started a directory of daily film attractions. To get the theatres accustomed to regular newspaper advertising this sheet got the rate down to 45 cents per day per exhibitor. Think of it—45 cents a day! And could interest only a few of 'em on that basis!

"But it's different here in Washington. The exhibitor welcomes us and we welcome their news. No branch of news is given more prominence than movie theatre news. We are proud of our fine, new picture houses and glad to bring them to the attention of our readers as much as space requirements possibly allow."

Other Washington newspaper men comment as follows:

Ernest Johnson, advertising manager, Washington Post: "The Washington picture houses receive fullest press support; we of the press look upon them as an important local business interest and treat them accordingly. I appreciate that it was not always thus—however, it shall always so remain."

W. G. Bryant, business manager, Washington Herald: "We are the only American city publishing a mid-week as well as Sunday amusement supplement. And 70 per cent of the news columns of this supplement are given to motion pictures. Such a fact speaks for itself."

John Claire, advertising manager, Washington Times: "The sort of pictures that are being shown today and the class of theatre in which they are being projected gives the picture industry a position locally that cannot be gainsaid. We recognize this new standing of the films. The newspapers of Washington are the friends of the films."

The result is, says Adler, that Sunday closing agitations never get started in the capital. And it seems there is no shortage of cranks there, as elsewhere, who would view with delight an anti-movement and would work to move it along. At present Sunday is the great "opening" day of films in Washington and when "The Better 'Ole" commenced its two-week run a Sunday was the start-off day. Can the absence of all anti-movements—developed ones—be due to the spirit of understanding existing between press and picture today? The reader is permitted one guess.

Gray Seal Announces Future Plans For Films

JOHN L. McCUTCHEON, for Gray Seal Productions, announces that their first picture is completed. This picture is in one reel and will be known as "A Pocket Romance," featuring Wheeler Dryden. The second production, "Wake Up," featuring the same star, is now being made and both subjects will be shown to the trade in the near future.

The company believe that they have a good comedian in Mr. Dryden because they think he has the ability of putting over laughs without resorting to slap-stick. Mr. Dryden, is said to have a very pleasing personality and although still in his twenties, has had a long theatrical career, making his first appearance on the English stage when five years old. It is said that Dryden is the George M. Cohan of England, his fame brought about in a similar way, through a number of popular songs written and composed by him.

Mr. Dryden, it is said, signed a five-year contract with Julian Houtain of the Gray Seal Productions, after considering a number of excellent offers from other prominent producers.

In speaking of the plans of the organization, Mr. McCutcheon said that no definite idea of distribution had been decided on, although they had enough attractive offers to guarantee a world-wide distribution of their products. It was also stated that a general publicity campaign would be lanuched to make their stars and productions leaders in this industry. The Dryden comedies are said to be excellent from both the picture and box office standpoint.

John L. McCutcheon, who is acting as production manager, will also supervise the Myrtle Stedman features, which he will start filming in about five weeks. Mr. McCutcheon's long experience in studio work, will be very helpful to him in carrying out the plans of the organization which are outlined as being very ambitious.

Buffalo Company Releases First Feature

Buffalo-Local film fans this week saw the first picture released by the Buffalo Motion Picture corporation. It was shown at the Strand theatre under the title of "The Price of Innocence," and featured Stella K. Talbot, daughter of the president of the corporation Frank L. Talbot, who has offices at 338 Ellicott square. The officers of the local producing company are Frank L. Talbot, president; Frank B. Caldwell, vice president; J. William Prouse, second vice president; James M. Sparks, secretary. The board of directors has the following personnel—Peter Ernst, Andrew J. Keller, Louis J. Moschell, Edward A. Jones and William Atkinson. Among the prominent local stockholders are Maxwell M. Nowak, George E. Pierce, Joseph Snyder and Mathew D. Mann. The first production was shown for three days at the Strand and Manager Earl L. Crabb reports excellent business.

Sam Aronowitz Buys Two

After spending a week around New York City, viewing special productions available for his territory, Sam Aronowitz purchased two special features from M. H. Hoffman of the Pioneer Film Corporation, and returned to Des Moines to exploit them from his offices there.

He secured "Virtuous Sinners" for Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. "The Boomerang" was bought for the states of Iowa and Nebraska, and Mr. Aronowitz has an option on the other Mid-West states.

"Triumph of Venus"

The Victory Film Manufacturing Company announces the sale of their feature film, "The Triumph of Venus" for Iowa and Nebraska to Mr. Phil. Goldstone of the Sterling Film Corporation of Omaha, Nebraska.

Manager Weiss Eulogizes "Mary Regan"

Harry Weiss, manager of the Central Film Service of Chicago, saw the studio print of "Mary Regan," third of the Anita Stewart special feature attractions to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, screened in the projection room of the Rothacker plant there, before the work of conforming the negative started, and sent the following wire to the home office in New York:

"You can take it from me that 'Mary Regan' is some picture as I saw it. It is undoubtedly the best production we have released so far. Mr Mayer's telegram commending it was modest."

The story of "Mary Regan" is from the novel by Le Roy Scott, writer of detective and mystery fiction. It describes the romance of Mary Regan, a young and beautiful denizen of the aristocracy of the shadow world and Robert Clifford, a New York detective.

Arrow Film Sells Rights to "Fools' Gold"

"Fools' Gold," the new Mitchell Lewis production which has been secured for the state right market by the Arrow Film Corporation, has been sold for the New England territory to the Premier Feature Film Company of Boston, who will distribute it as a big special through their offices.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, is pleased with the way "Fools' Gold" is being sold by his company. The announcement was made only last Saturday and so far nearly a dozen buyers have looked at the picture. It is said to be the kind of picture that buyers like to purchase. It is a six-reel special production made in the Northwest.

Buy Two Features

Bech, Van Siclen & Company announce that they have bought Edgar Lewis's production, "Calibre 38," starring Mitchell Lewis and "Wild Honey," starring Doris Kenyon.

Educational Announces Fourth Supplement

VICE-PRESIDENT E. W. HAMMONS, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has received the sample print of the fourth issue of the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," which is to be released May 1, and announces the table of contents as it will be seen in the theatres.

The subject opens with scenes at the Brunton studios, in Los Angeles, and shows, by photographic skill, the building of a huge glass studio building, in a few seconds. Frank Keenan is seen hanging around, and later, making up as a Kentucky Colonel. Sessue Hayakawa directs a few scenes of his own in the new studio, and the little stage is shown on which the illustrated art titles are filmed.

Ben Alexander is then seen kidding Bessie Barriscale and Howard Hickman. Jim Corbett arrives at Universal City, and is greeted by the choicest gang of rough-necks that could be assembled around the studio on such short notice.

Then comes the reason that the messenger service in Los Angeles was so completely demoralized recently. All the boys are seen perched high on the board fence that surrounds the Christie studios, with "Rush" messages serving only to show their excess of emotion. On the center stage Al Christie is "shooting" a Winter Garden set, with a chorus of chickens behind the footlights and on the runway. Mollie Malone, the leading lady, comes in for the closeup at the finish.

In conclusion, there is a regular little drama called "A Movie of Movieland," staged at the Hollywood home of Viola Dana and Shirley Mason and their mother. The action of the play runs true to form, with suspense and a happy ending, the aim and purpose being to show the sister stars in some genuine "at home" stuff that will make interesting entertainment.

Guinan Completes First Two Westerns

The Frohman Amusement Corporation have received word from their West Coast Studio that "South of Santa Fe" and "The She Wolf," the first of the twenty-six two-reel Western dramas, featuring Texas Guinan, have been finished, and that work is now progressing on the third picture, the title of which is yet undecided.

Work has also begun on the Mack Swain Comedies, known as Poppy Comedies. The first of these is now in the hands of the cutter and Mr. Swain is at work on his second picture.

Kaplan and Hanover Join Tyrad Forces

Matthias Radin, president and general manager of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., distributors of "Your Wife and Mine," and "And the Children Pay," announces the appointments of Jack Kaplan as sales manager for New York territory and Irving Hanover as sales manager for New Jersey territory. Both men are well known in film circles in the East, Kaplan having been formerly with the Universal and Hanover with the First National.

Tyrad Pictures, Inc., under the supervision of Jacque Tyrol, secretary-treasurer and director-general, is already completing plans for a new super-feature work on which will be started in New York shortly. Tyrol returned to New York this week after a flying trip to Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia in the interests of the new production.

Announces Rights to "Birth of a Race"

W. S. Butterfield, of Battle Creek, Michigan, announces that he recently acquired the State Rights for Michigan for "The Birth of a Race" and he will soon announce his booking arrangements for this stupendous photoplay spectacle.

Mr. Butterfield is confident that this is one of the best box office winners that has ever been offered to the exhibitors and every exhibitor should keep an open date on his booking sheet for this masterpiece.

"Stolen Orders" Going Big Says Brady Office

William A. Brady announces the sale of "Stolen Orders" for Illinois to Jones, Linick and Schaefer. The acquisition of "Stolen Orders" for Illinois by this firm is further indicative of the fact it is said that the Brady picture is today one of the strongest state right propositions on the market. Recent advices from widely separated parts of the country it is declared disclose the fact that this feature continues to roll up remarkable box-office records. Not only in this country, but also in foreign territories, particularly England and South America, the Brady picture is proving a strong attraction it is said.

It is announced that Jones, Linick and Schaefer will shortly inaugurate an extensive campaign of exploitation on behalf of "Stolen Orders," secure in the conviction it is declared that the Brady picture will equal or better in Illinois the remarkable business it is doing in Ohio, New England and the country over.

Brockliss Buys Foreign Rights to Grey Productions

Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockliss Company, has purchased the entire foreign rights of "Desert Gold," the special production now being made of Zane Grey's popular novel, together with the rights of all other books by this writer, according to an announcement made this week by C. A. Weeks, treasurer and secretary of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc.

The acquisition of the foreign rights of this series is in line with the recently announced policy of the Brockliss Company to eliminate star and program pictures from their offerings, and handle only productions of special merit and magnitude.

Zion Films Announces New Plans

An announcement of interest to exhibitors throughout the country, in relation to the future policy and plans of Zion Films, will soon be made public by that organization, it is promised. This announcement is being kept secret, for the present, because all plans have not been completed as yet. The plans are said to contain something new and novel.

The Zion Films, Inc., has completed the first of the series of Sholon Aleichem, Jewish Mark Twain stories, "Khavah," in which Alice Hastings is the star. A private showing of the picture will soon be held at a Broadway playhouse, according to a Zion announcement.

Exclusive Buys Rights on Tom Mix Feature

Exclusive Features, Inc., has purchased from Wm. N. Selig, the world's rights on a six reel negative, featuring Tom Mix, entitled "The Heart of Texas Ryan."

It will be distributed on a State Right basis, as soon as titling and editing on the production will be completed.

Tells Why "Photoplay" is Successful

The "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" would not be a possibility if it were not for the absolute independence of the organization behind it," says Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, this week. The Supplement is breaking all records for single-reel bookings, both in volume of sales, and in the amount of rentals, and yet we are convinced that only a small fraction of the exhibitors of the country realize the possibilities they have for profit in the single reel, or have an inkling of how difficult it is to secure this type of material.

"Every scene for "The Supplement" is produced under the direction of James R. Quirk and Julian Johnson, respectively managing director and editor of Photoplay Magazine, and the nation-wide distribution is handled exclusively by our organization. Both "Photoplay Magazine" and the Educational Films Corporation are absolutely independent of any outside interests whatsoever, and it is this very essential factor that makes possible "The Supplement." About seventy-five of the better known stars will appear in the twelve issues of the single-reel, and exhibitors can realize the tangle of contracts that is involved in securing this amount of film.

Exhibitors are warned against any advertising of the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" that might tend to make the subject appear as more than a single reel.

Buffalo Manager Praises 10-20-30 Series

Max Lewis, manager of the Frontier theatre, Buffalo, after running the 10-20-30 release, "Life's Greatest Problem," starring Mitchell Lewis, wrote the following letter to Independent Sales Corporation's Buffalo branch manager, C. P. Saunders:

"Yesterday I played one of your pictures, 'Life's Greatest Problem,' and I am pleased to say that it is one of the best pictures I have ever seen. My patrons congratulated me on my judgment in selecting such pictures as this one and if all of your 10-20-30 series are in line with this one, I am glad to know that I have your contract for the remainder. I would like to be able to procure pictures like this every day in the week, as believe me, it is the kind that satisfies."

First National Film Buys Feature Rights

N. J. Flynn and Chas. W. Harden, of The First National Film company, Kansas City, Mo., have returned from New York after having spent ten days in looking over the market of state rights pictures. They succeeded in closing contracts for the following productions for Kansas and Missouri:

Maurice Tourneur's production "Woman" and "Tempest and Sunshine" bought from Hiller & Wilk, "Wives of Men," featuring Florence Reed and "The Still Alarm" from Pioneer Film Corp., "Once To Every Man" from the Frohman Co., "When the Desert Smiled," featuring Neal Hart, "The Fires of Hope," "The Web of Intrigue," "Human Schuttles," "The Shadow of Fear," all featuring Harold Lockwood, from Arrow Film Company. Forty single reel Western subjects featuring Tom Mix from Jans Distributing Corporation and fourteen single reel Western subjects featuring Tom Mix from Exclusive Film Company.

Miller Starts First Special Next Week

Charles Miller who signed, recently, with Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation to produce a series of special productions for Independent's program of special releases, will commence work on the first of the series at the Bacon-Backer studio, next week. Mr. Miller has under consideration three novels, all by well known authors, the screen rights to one of which he will purchase within the week.

Albert Cowles, who will assist Mr. Miller will start casting at the studio, as soon as one of the scripts under consideration, is decided upon.

Houdini Buys Business of Martinka and Company

Houdini, star of "The Master Mystery," produced by B. K. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., became a commercial magnate this week when he concluded a deal for the purchase of the business of Martinka & Co., of New York, dealers in magical goods, and formed a new corporation with himself as principal shareholder to continue the business. Martinka & Co. is said to be the largest magical supply house in the country.

Alexander Is Engaged for "Josselyn's Wife"

Ben Alexander, small of stature but large of reputation, one of the most lovable children in screen annals, comes back after his decided success in "The Turn in the Road" with another prominent part in a Robertson-Cole feature for release through Exhibitors Mutual.

This time little Ben will be associated with Bessie Barriscale, starring in B. B. Features, in her newest production at the Brunton Studio "Josselyn's Wife."

Meeting of Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE spring meeting of the Society was held in Philadelphia on April 14, 15 and 16.

This meeting was the best attended and most interesting thus far held. There were in all thirty-three members on hand and ten invited guests.

These members included representatives from the General Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, National Lamp Works, Edison Lamp Works, Westinghouse Lamp Works, Nicholas Power Company, Enterprise Optical Company, Eastman Kodak Company, Hertner Electric Company, Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, National Carbon Company, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Corning Glass Works, Victor Animatograph Company, De Vry Corporation, Pathescope Company, Argus Lamp Company, Prizma Inc., Domestic Engineering Company, M. J. Wohl Company, Rembusch Screen Company and others.

The progress which is being made by the Society and its actual accomplishments are most satisfactory. The effect of its recommendations are now being felt by the industry as a whole, and it will not be long before a decided improvement will be seen in several branches of motion picture production, and exhibition, due to the progressive policy and the recommendations of the Society.

The general topics taken up in papers presented and discussed at the meeting in Philadelphia were as follows:

1. "White Light for Motion Picture Photography," prepared and presented by Dr. Wm. Roy Mott. This paper dealt with the white light carbon in studio work and its photographic values.

2. "Attachments to Professional Cinematographic Cameras," by Mr. Carl L. Gregory.

3. "Some Phases of the Optical System," by Mr. J. H. Richardson. Dr. Kellner, Dr. Story and Dr. Gage supplemented this paper with additional data which had been prepared by them in order to bring out certain facts which they wished to set before the Society.

4. "Adding Color to Motion," by Mr. Wm. V. D. Kelley. This paper dealt with colored motion pictures and was supplemented by the showing of certain films which had been made by the addative process. These films were received with great enthusiasm, and were repeated after the banquet held Tuesday night.

5. "The Motion Picture Screen," by Mr. Frank J. Rembusch, was in the form of a talk covering his experiences and experiments on various screen surfaces.

6. Mr. George Blair gave a short talk on the general conditions surrounding the production of raw stock. Among other things he stated that the production of non-inflammable film was more difficult than that of inflammable film. The ingredients entering into its manufacture are more expensive and are far more difficult to obtain. He stated that a universal shift from inflammable stock to non-inflammable stock would be absolutely impossible, and other facts equally interesting and important to the industry.

7. Mr. Pierce of the Underwriters' Laboratories spoke at some length concerning film as a fire risk. He brought out the following classification and the danger in each:

a. The use of inflammable film in the theatre—where there is little actual danger, the protection here being adequate.

b. The handling of inflammable film in the exchanges where there is the gravest danger because of lack of protection and gross carelessness in handling.

c. The use of inflammable film in portable machines outside the theatre—in homes, churches, clubs, etc. This, he said, is a most serious menace and anyone showing films under these circumstances is an enemy to the public safety.

He went on to say that any man who sells a miniature machine to use inflammable film is a menace to society and there is no use of the industry conniving with this condition.

He dealt further with the various ways of handling the situation both through greater protection and by the use of non-inflammable film.

Mr. Washington Devereux, of Philadelphia, took up this subject and concurred with Mr. Pierce, giving examples of the dangers with which he is familiar.

Dr. Ancona went into the subject still further from the film manufacturers' angle.

Mr. Murphy spoke of the fire hazard in the studio and how he is meeting it.

8. Mr. C. Francis Jenkins (Past President of the Society) expressed his views of the situation, and stated how he should combat it. He said in brief that this Society should adopt and own a patented perforation, the manufacturing license on which should only be granted to those who would perforate their film in non-inflammable stock.

This led to a lengthy and most enlightening discussion as to the narrow width standard adopted a year ago and the general use of non-inflammable film stock.

This finally resulted in passing a resolution recommending to the Federal, State and Municipal governments of this country and Canada that in future they print all film produced and distributed by them on non-inflammable stock and so label it.

These papers will be printed in full in the NEWS as soon as they have been published in the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The next meeting of the Society will be held in Pittsburgh some time in October. The date will be announced later.

Equipment Operating Projection, Questions Answered

Trouble with Carbons and Speed Control

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

We are using "Simplex Machines" about two years old with 6½ inch and 7½ inch condensers, with Gundlach lenses. Current from the arc is drawn through a separate meter, on which is marked 75 amperes, 110 volts, 60 cycles, 2-wire system. The economizers we are using are Sterling economizers of 110 volts, 60 amperes and 60 cycles. They are open as far as possible, and have been in use for about five years.

The lamp house is of the large size with a carbon holder adjustment of not more than 75 amperes. We are using a good grade of National carbon, but it is almost impossible to keep the carbons from burning crooked.

Up to six months or a year ago, we got a fine light on A. C., and it is just lately that we have been getting a poor light. The light is not even very bright on the heat resistance plate or when the door of the lamp house is open..

Question No. 2. The rubber driving disc that works on the speed control is not working right. The oil must be kept away from this, so that the machine will run, but when all of the oil is wiped off the disc wears away and forms a substance like sand on the disc. This is worse than oil, and must be cleaned off about three times to a reel. This trouble is also just recent. Can you tell me how to fix it?

(Signed) "C. P."

Answer:

No. 1. Your trouble is either in your carbon setting or in your current supply, probably the latter. Alternating current is difficult to handle at best so there is all the more reason why care should be taken with all adjustments.

First, see if your carbons are lined up on all sides to remove one possible source of crooked burning. Examine every connection between economizer and carbons and if condition of wire appears doubtful at any place renew it. An oxidized wire makes a fine rheostat, but a mighty poor conductor. If this does not improve your light proceed as follows:

Borrow a 75 ampere ammeter from your local lighting company (every projection room should have one, but unhappily very few do) and measure the current going to your arc. With your economizer wide open the meter should approximate 60 amperes. If it doesn't, then there is a fault somewhere in your economizer, in which case we would advise you to return it to the makers for the necessary inspection and repair.

No. 2. If your machines are about two years old it is probable that you have the old style Simplex feed control, with broad discs. This design has been changed so that in the present type the discs are of fibre, which eliminates the trouble which is frequently met with in the style you have. Your best move is to send the control to the nearest Simplex distributor, and have the discs changed to the up-to-date form. If this is not possible, you should try letting up on the tension of the spring, as there is nothing to be gained by having the spring tightened up more than enough to hold the discs against each other without slipping. We believe, however, that the slight expense involved in having the discs changed would more than repay you when it is considered to what trouble you are now being placed by having to clean off the discs so frequently.

American Projection Society Drops Cares and Worries to Dance and Dine

It will be some time before the ball-room of the new Hotel Pennsylvania holds as genial a gathering as was seen there on April 12 when the American Projection Society held its annual dance and banquet.

The committee in charge was on its toes every minute of the evening in an endeavor to make all those present feel at home. The Toastmaster, Mr. G. W. Landon of the Nicholas Power Co., after being introduced by the president, Mr. Benny Turner, proceeded to carry out his duties to the highest point of perfection.

Dr. Riesenfeld of the Rialto and Rivoli, made the principal address of the evening. Other speakers were Mr. Will C. Smith, General Manager of the Nicholas Power Co., and Mr. W. F. Francke of the Precision Machine Co.

The Society has grown within a very few years from a small group to a membership of 60, all of whom are closely connected with the various phases of projection.

The A. R. Bullock Electric Products Co.

MADE up of men with wide and successful experience in the electrical and motion picture equipment industries, for the purpose of distributing some new and vital products designed by A. R. Bullock, one of the world's greatest engineers and inventors of electrical and mechanical apparatus and appliances.

Of particular interest to those in the Motion Picture Industry is a Current Rectifier, designed on an entirely new principle and possessing greater possibilities with fewer limitations, for converting Alternating Current line voltage to Direct Current voltage needed at the projection machine.

This important invention promises to revolutionize and greatly improve projection. The Bullock Rectifier will insure high-efficiency service, and is much more compact, simple, foolproof, and less costly than present types of equipment.

There are other new Bullock Inventions which are equally valuable.

Watch for further announcements in this publication.

Local 306 Initiation Fee Goes Up Again

NOTICE has gone out from the office of Local 306 that its initiation fee is to be raised again. Beginning June 5, the cost will be $100 instead of the $75 fee now in force, and which will be continued until midnight of June 4.

Projectionists who come under the jurisdiction of this local, but who are not already members, will find it decidedly to their advantage to take out the necessary papers before the fee is raised.

An Answer for Montana

H. R. King, Judith Gap, Mont., sends in these questions:

I am using a Compensarc with A. C. current, 110 volts, 60 cycles and burning special A. C. carbons. Can you tell me if I could better my light by using a Ft. Wayne rectifier, and would it reduce the cost of the light bill? The rectifier I mention is built similar to compensarc. Would I use A. C. carbons or D. C. carbons with this?

Reply: There are two main types of compensarcs. One is constructed similar to a transformer, and the other resembles a motor-generator set. We assume that you are using the transformer type of Compensarc.

A rectifier is commonly considered as being an electro-chemical or mechanical device for changing alternating current to direct current or vice versa, and when used in connection with motion picture work usually means a mercury arc rectifier. When the change-over is brought about electrically it is more common to refer to the device as a converter.

As far as we know there is no rectifier built similar in construction to a Compensarc, so that we are unable to state whether the resultant current would be alternating or direct.

A direct current arc has always been considered an easier arc to handle than one on alternating current. Unless the d. c. voltage had to be greatly reduced through rheostats, a. c. operation is considerably more expensive since to secure the same light intensity from alternating current requires a higher amperage at the arc.

If you will write us again, explaining just what you mean by a "Fort Wayne rectifier built similar to a compensarc," we will look up the matter and answer you in detail.

Vibration Troubles

GILBERT HEATWOLE of Clifton Forge, Va., says:

"Film is coming in in very good condition due to a great extent, I think, to the N. A. M. L.

"I have one question to ask. I was called to a small town a short distance from here to look at two Simplex machines recently returned from the factory. There was a little jump, straight up and down, in both machines. The tension shoes, intermittent spocket, and framing carrier are all right. The vibration in both machines started at the same time. The only thing I could think of was vibration."

Reply:

You answered your own letter with the suggestion of vibration. If the jumps in the two pictures are similar it is very probable that the construction of the booth is not stiff enough for projection purposes. The floor particularly, of a projection booth must be rock steady or a perfect picture is a practical impossibility. In a case where the booth sways due to improper bracing the picture would jump up and down as yours does.

Have a carpenter or contractor examine the construction of the booth in question and decide on the changes that are necessary. It may be that a simple brace or a column will correct the whole trouble.

Over the Thousand Mark

JUST as all projects have a definite aim at their start so did the National Anti-Misframe League. Since the month it was commenced the thought has been "A thousand members by January, 1919." The thousandth member has now been taken in, and although this is April instead of January the showing is truly remarkable, for we had figured that the war-time activities of projectionists would adversely affect the League and its membership much more than it has.

Now that we have reached one goal we should not be satisfied but rather should increase our pace, so that by January, 1920, the card file here in the office of the Motion Picture News will contain 2,000 N. A. M. L. names.

The labels which you stick on returning films cans are, to a certain extent, a kind of advertising to call attention to the League. The greater the number of these labels, therefore, that are noticed by exchanges the greater will be the recognition given the League. For this reason never forget to stick a label on a film can if you have inspected the film. Get your friend projectionists to join and use the labels. And whenever you get the chance boost the League, because of what it does and what it will do.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

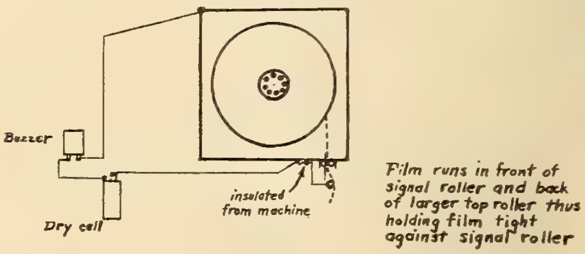
Another Change-Over Signal

D. P. Leach of Swift Current, Sask., says:

On reading the questions and answers in the Projection Department of the NEWS, March 29th issue, I noticed the signalling device of Geo. W. Carson, Hannibal, Mo., and as I have been using one for about six months with entire satisfaction I will send a sketch of the one I use. As I am not much of an architect you will have to excuse my drawings.



Buzzer
Dry cell insulated from machine
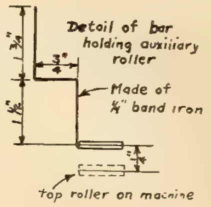
Film runs in front of signal roller and back of larger top roller thus holding film tight against signal roller



This device has caused me no trouble in threading up and saves a lot of steps. Besides, it never lets the screen go white in case I am busy with something else. Enclosed you will find a piece of film with the tinsel on it. I get the tinsel from cigarette packages. The tinsel is always pasted on the shiny side of the films as that is the side that goes next to the roller and closes the circuit.

I use two signals, one about one minute from the end and another at "change-over." I never let leader or tails between feature reels run through so that with this signalling device the feature is run as one large reel so far as the patrons know.

Reply:

The use of tinsel on film as a change-over signal has been suggested several times in this department. It works without trouble providing the tinsel is as thin as can be secured. Although pasted directly over the perforations the spocket teeth will easily penetrate the tinsel.

A detailed drawing of Mr. Leach's device is shown here so that any others who are interested may try out his scheme.

The last mail brought a bunch of projection inquiries which will be answered next issue

American Home Songs Used in the Orchestra

Editor,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

In reading over your valuable columns every week, I find much that is good in them. I try at all times to improve my co-workers and myself in presenting pictures to my public. Until about two years ago I used to play regular concert programs with the pictures including all the classic works, also symphonies, but I saw the handwriting on the wall, which meant better music for the film (appropriate music). I worked very hard to get things in shape, and now I find setting up music for my shows a real pleasure, because the picture game has no limit for opportunities, as there is something new budding up all the time. From the opening to the exit march, it all has my personal attention, including the lighting effects which the operator and myself scheme out to harmonize to the best of our ability.

There is a favor I'm going to ask you, and that is, where can I get a book of old timers, that is old American Home Songs. I find such great opportunities to use them, such as "Just a Song at Twilight," "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," etc. It must be arranged for orchestra. There must be a folio printed of what I mentioned for I came across a set some years back, but I don't remember the publisher. I think every leader ought to play those old-time melodies to educate our young Americans into singing them, those real melodies. Every time I use one of the old-time melodies it reads success. Hoping you will be able to give me the name of the publisher who puts out a folio of old-time songs for orchestras, believe me,

Yours for the Upbuilding of Music and Pictures,
(Signed) Arthur Keller,

The above letter has been received by the editor, and the following reply is herewith given because this is a subject which may also interest others.

It is an established fact and beyond any doubt that our American Home Songs, known and endeared by our forefathers are melodies creating an atmosphere of happiness and contentment. They are the tunes we have so often heard in our childhood.

Any musician who possess judgment enough to properly employ such old-timers in conjunction with the film is bound to make friends in his audience, and give the theatre the character of a peaceful and happy home.

There are three collections known to the Music Editor of these columns, containing a great variety of American Home Songs, but the only bad feature with such collections is that their contents do not consist solely of such songs, but of a mixture of international patriotic melodies. The editor knows of the "Mammoth Collection," comprising about six hundred different melodies, such as old-time home songs and patriotic tunes of international character. The price of this collection is exorbitant, considering the fact that at least seventy-five per cent of the contents of same are of no absolute value to the musician playing for the film. Such national melodies as those of Abyssinia, Algeria, Armenia, Bolivia, Hungary, Germany, although of no value at all, are in the collection, and have to be bought along with the little percentage of songs which can be effectively used. The price of this collection, as mentioned above, is about $7.00 for small orchestra and piano, and about $2.00 for piano.

The editor is also acquainted with another collection published by G. Schirmer, which again, to a certain extent, does not live up to the value of its size. Most of the songs contained therein are of a national character, and there is very little in that book which can be identified as our old American Home Ballads.

However, the editor knows of many small medley selections containing such songs, and would at any time gladly furnish names of publishers of such selections to any one of our readers sufficiently interested in this subject.

The editor also desires to commend Mr. Keller upon his consistent efforts to elevate music for the film to the highest possible attainment.—The Editors.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"My Desert Fantasy," by Robert Reid. Fox trot and one-step. New dance craze. (A. J. Stasny Music Co., 56 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

2—"Chinese Lullaby," by Robert Hood Bowers. Featured by Fay Bainter in William Harris, Jr.'s production, "East Is West." The hit of hits. Everybody's singing and playing it. (G. Schirmer, 3 E. 43d St., N. Y.)

3—"Pride of the Caravan." The phenomenal fox-trot hit, by W. C. Polla. (Joe Morris Music Co., 145 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

4—"Mother Love." The big hit. Greatest fox trot ever printed. It's a positive riot everywhere. By Gold & West. (Chas. K. Harris, Columbia Theatre Bldg., N. Y.)

5—"Egyptian Nights." The class of all instrumental waltzes destined to be another "Missouri" waltz. Don't fail to have this in your library. (Al. Piantadosi & Co., 234 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

6—"Johnny's in Town." One-step by George W. Meyer and Abe Opman. Just think of it, Clarie—he spent two months in Paris. Welcome him home with this rousing good tune. (Leo Feist, 249 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

7—"Heart-Breaking Baby-Doll." One-step, by Sidney D. Mitchell. "Please play it again," the dancing boys and girls will say every time you play this corking number. (Leo Feist.)

8—"Alabama Lullaby." Waltz by Cal De Voll. A wonderful crooning waltz melody that is soon going to be heard everywhere. (Leo Feist.)

9—"I'm the Boy and I'm the Girl." One-step. The song hit from "Good Morning, Judge," as sung by Mollie and Charles King. (Jerome Remick, 217 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

10—"You Cannot Shake That Shimmie Here." Here's the original "Shimmie" song, arranged for dance. (Jerome Remick.)

11—"Tragic Suite." What greater composers than Mozart or Gottschalk could be offered as a combination in a classic suite? "Adagio" and "Cradle Song" contained in "The Tragic Suite" have never been published before. Orchestra and musicians will find these two numbers musical gems. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

12—"Forest Suite." Here in the forest, with no shelter but the giant oaks, the impending storm, terrific in its magnitude; followed by the rainbow, the covenant between God and man, closing with Nature's joy in the returning sunshine. Such miracles are depicted in the Forest Suite. (Belwin, Inc.)

13—"Fluffy Ruffles." One-step by Geo. H. Green. This is the new one-step hit from the house of Fox. Its clever rhythm and a whistling melody make an immediate hit with the dancers, and the number itself looks like one of the best one-step hits we have ever issued. (Sam Fox Pub. Co., Cleveland, Ohio.)

14—"Moon Glow." A quaint little melody suggesting the soft, silvery light of the moon. Bewitching and serene—a dainty orchestra number. (Sam Fox.)

Vandersloot Publishes a Hit

THE latest publication and hit from the house of Vandersloot, of Williamsport, Pa., is "Shadows," a beautifully melodious, slow, dreamy waltz, by Howard Lutter. When listening to this delightful, charming composition, one can almost in imagination perceive the falling shadows, heralding the close of a summer's day.

This composition is particularly adapted for use in conjunction with the silent drama, as a THEME for a society picture, or light love story, or for garden or reception scenes.

The Vandersloot Music Company have an extensive and varied catalogue of excellent publications, which would be welcome additions to any musician's library, and especially to those playing for the film.

The Complete Plan Book

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under his heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

"Those Foolish Days"

(Paramount-Mack Sennett—Two Reels)

WHEN "Those Foolish Days" was shown on Broadway one of the daily papers made the mistake of calling it "another chase and scramble picture." It is not that at all. Whereas, that description implies sameness and even inferiority, the picture deserves considerable praise. That it contains chases and scrambles is a statement of fact, but these things are done with new business and original twists in the action. Mack Sennett hardly ever repeats, at least not noticeably so to the eye of the average mortal. And his chases and scrambles of "Those Foolish Days" are put on in such a way as to keep an audience in gales of merriment.

Chester Conklin, a true comedy artist, is seen as the blacksmith as he was in "The Village Smithy," and Louise Fazenda is the girl. The plot concerns rivalry for the fair Louise's hand, rivalry that becomes riotous when she inherits a fortune. One of the funniest moments in the two reels comes when the sextet from "Lucia" is announced with Conklin wielding the baton. The curtains part and reveal six of Sennett's fun-makers, including the nervous-eyed Ben Turpin and his side partner, Charles Moran. What Ben does to the high notes in the way of flirting with them with his eyes can easily be appreciated by those familiar with his work.

"Those Foolish Days" keeps moving from start to finish and every scene of it is worthy.—Peter Milne.

"The Birth of a Race"

(Russell—Produced by John W. Noble)

IT is quite difficult to define properly the character of "The Birth of a Race." It purports to tell the history of mankind from Genesis down through the Crucifixion of the Saviour and gives one the impression that it is a dramatization of the bible. Behind this animated revelation is the message that only through universal brotherhood and peace can the races of the earth fulfill their destinies. And this message is driven home by a series of word pictures, literal translations from the bible, that appear in conjunction with spectacular humanizations of the most dramatic scenes and figures from its chapters.

It is a stupendous theme and quite impossible to be brought down to a material plane or camera-flaged in other words. It may be that it will be accepted (we are talking of the visualized messsge) in all sincerity as it seems like a thing honestly striven for. Nothing that has ever been attempted along this line has really succeeded, due, no doubt, to its very stupendousness. Spirituality cannot be focussed even though some of its sparks seem solid enough.

But Mr. Noble, the director, switched from his task, dropped his biblical burden, perhaps because it was overwhelming him, and became extremely materialistic in his outlook. "The Birth of a Race" ended at five reels. It was nothing but a prologue for a trite and unconvincing story of the lately deceased war which took up feature space before the good and bad characters found their respective places.

So from the two angles, the prologue and the story proper, it is problematical how it will be received. The earth is continuing its mad flight through space and the war is over. The biblical pictures are conceived on a grandiose scale though they are episodic, and Mr. Noble has shown intelligence and taste in his groupings, types, and settings. One felt transported at times so lifelike were his conceptions.

The director should have remained on one theme or the other, for spiritual messages and those the kaiser gave out do not harmonize. A good cast and a veritable army of "extras" have been assembled. The technical matter has been carefully arranged, the lighting, photography, et al, being entirely acceptable.—Length 10 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

Educational Releases

(Two Half-Reel Subjects on Tad's Cartoons)

PRESENTED as "The Silk Hat Harry Live Stock Company," the humorous characters of Tad's cartoons cavort and caper in two Educational subjects entitled "Twinkle, Twinkle" and "Sweet Pickle." The first is a humorous conception of a prize fight with all the tricks of the animated cartoonist brought into play, while the second shows Harry and the Judge operating a grocery store. The comedy in each of the pictures is practically sure-fire. The gags are clever and the animation smooth and quite perfect insofar as modern technique will permit perfection. Both of the subjects should make admirable subjects for any theatre's program.

"THE LOVE THAT DARES"—FOX

Madlaine Traverse in New Version of Eternal Triangle—Effectively Produced

MADLAINE TRAVERSE is carrying a heavy burden on her emotional shoulders in the subjects which William Fox has supplied her with of late. Take "The Love That Dares," for instance. Here is a pretty big theme based upon the eternal triangle and it calls for unusually good characterization to keep its several heightened situations and climaxes always dominant. A false note sounded anywhere in the subject and it would topple over and obliterate the star and Thomas Santschi, who plays the husband.

The remainder of the cast do not matter so much and their work could be really indifferent (which it isn't) and the story would not suffer to any extent. The two players mentioned above act with such authority, and with such a grasp upon the import of the subject that it seems like a page from life and not a leaf from a theatrical scrapbook.

What is the love that dares? In this case it is the dangers that a woman will brave for her husband. The incidents that bring them into play are worked out logically and with the idea that the title must live up to its meaning. Which it does and more. Grant that the climax is theatrical, that it introduces a lot of arbitrary action and highfalutin coincidences, it cannot be said that it doesn't entertain. Indeed, the picture offers a genuine dramatic hour—an hour that should satisfy any audience—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Laurence Reid.

The Love That Dares is often misinterpreted by the very person to whom it is given—see "The Love That Dares."

Would you make any sacrifice, no matter how great, for the person you loved, and no matter what the consequences? Olive Risdon was ready to in "The Love That Dares"—see it at the ——— theatre.

She dared face a hell on earth that her husband might succeed.

The story of a woman who would make the supreme sacrifice for the man she loved.

PRESS NOTICE

Madlaine Traverse, William Fox's great emotional actress, apears at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay entitled "The Love That Dares." This is the story of an extravagant wife and a hard working husband. Olive, the wife, spends money recklessly, quite unaware of the fact that her husband is all but unable to foot her enormous bills. And while he is busy working, Olive continues her friendship with Beckwith, a millionaire, who had courted her before her marriage. And as Beckwith is a rascally fellow besides being a millionaire it is only natural that his first move should be, of course, when the time is ripe, to call in a loan he had made through a bank to Olive's husband!

It is then that the Love That Dares gets in its play. Olive, at last realizing the desperate straits into which she has plunged her husband through her thoughtless extravagance, determines to save him from financial ruin whatever the cost—and naturally she turns to Beckwith—which is, of course, just what Beckwith wanted her to do!

How she proves herself one woman in a thousand, how Beckwith meets with his just deserts and how Olive comes to a better understanding with her husband, are events which go to make the entire picture one of singular dramatic force. The theme is as old as the ages, but, strange enough, it never seems to grow old. Miss Traverse receives excellent support from Thomas Santschi and Frank Elliott. The picture was directed by Harry Millarde from a scenario by Denison Clift.

THE STORY

Olive is the very extravagant wife of Perry Risdon, a man unable to support her various expenditures. Ned Beckwith, a previous suitor, still professes his love for Olive. Beckwith is a millionaire and would have been able to grant Olive's every desire if she had but accepted him. Perry does not interfere with his wife's continued friendship for Beckwith—in fact his time is altogether occupied in his business. But at a time when he needs every penny in his possession Olive, apparently caring little about his predicament, goes off to an expensive summer resort.

At the same time Beckwith, who has been watching his chance, calls his loan on Perry. And so it is imperative that Perry secure the amount of the loan elsewhere—$80,000. Olive, now realizing the situation, pawns her jewels, but these bring only thirty thousand. Knowing her husband's desperate financial straits, Olive appeals to Beckwith, who says that he will supply the balance of the money—and all he asks as security is Olive herself! The woman departs in high scorn, but, returning to her home, discovers that all will be lost unless this money is secured.

So she returns to Beckwith resolving to get the money at all costs. While she is there Beckwith's mistress calls Perry and tells him. He visits Beckwith and demands that he produce his wife. The other woman has come to the house also and Beckwith shows her to Perry, saying that she is the woman—that he was mistaken about his wife. Olive follows Perry home and hands him Beckwith's check! He is denouncing her when the telephone rings and the other woman says that she has killed Beckwith. He had ruined her life and would have ruined Olive's, too, she says.

PROGRAM READER

Is your love the kind that dares? How far would you go to prove it when the only person you loved in the world depended on that love for very existence? Would you make any sacrifice that that person might go on living—or is your love a selfish thing? These are the questions raised by the latest William Fox picture entitled "The Love That Dares," and which will shortly be seen at this theatre. The star is Madlaine Traverse and as Olive Risdon she appears as the woman who dares face a hell on earth that her husband may succeed! The whole story is powerfully told in the five reels of "The Love That Dares," five of the strongest reels of photodramatic entertainment that it has ever been our pleasure to offer. Miss Traverse appeared under the direction of Harry Millarde, who worked on a story by Denison Clift. Tom Santschi and Frank Elliott, two very able actors, have the other principal roles, while in the supporting cast are Mae Gaston, Thomas Guise and George B. Williams.

SUGGESTIONS

The central situation of this picture, created when the wife goes to sell herself to the other man to save her husband from financial ruin, is the strongest one of the story. It is a situation that has been done many times before on the screen and yet it will always appeal if presented properly. Write arguments about it that will bring out its strength in the strongest possible way you can.

Miss Traverse deserves to be featured as a leading emotional actress of the day. Don't overlook Tom Santschi as the husband. He is a well known and popular actor and his performance here is of the usual fine stuff of all his characterizations.

"AS A MAN THINKS"—RAVER-HODKINSON

New Four-Star Combination Steps Over the Line with a Winner

THE Thomas-Irving-Baird-Raver combination certainly made good its word on "As a Man Thinks." The exhibitor who books it is signing up for a week of prosperity (at least he ought to sign up for a week) and his audiences are going to talk and thank him for handing out a piece of pictorial drama that is as unusual as a holiday in August.

The strength of Mr. Thomas' play, dealing as it does with the double standard, time honored, but never time worn, is to be measured in superlatives only. Mr. Irving has seen to it that the production is lavish in every sense of the word. His Four Arts Ball was a delight. And at the same time he has kept the drama continuous and has brought out the force of it with a degree of skill that—indeed, one would expect from Mr. Irving.

Miss Baird shows a warmth that certainly some never expected of her and plays the role of the wife with good effect. Henry Clive's husband is excellent, and a cast supporting these two contains a number of skilful players—players who get the most from their parts.

"As a Man Thinks" looks good from every angle; if there are flaws in it the present reviewer never noticed one.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

A combination entirely new in the picture field is responsible for the piece de resistance of the ——— theatre's entertainment which will first be shown on ——— of ——— week. The picture is called "As a Man Thinks," the adaptation of a play that scored a success on the stage two or three seasons ago. It was written by Augustus Thomas, sometimes called the greatest living American playwright. It was produced under the direction of George Irving and stars Leah Baird while the presentation is left to Harry Raver, one of the first picture men in the business, the man who had the distinction of promoting the feature "Cabiria" when it was first shown in this country.

The producers are, therefore, altogether justified in terming the picture "a four-star" affair. Certainly a better combination of talent from the four branches of the art would be a difficult thing to find. "As a Man Thinks" is a play of vital interest in that it deals with the double standard of morals, that standard which has been the insoluble conundrum of the human race ever since man can remember. Should society forgive in a man what it condemns in a woman? That is the all-absorbing question, and although Mr. Thomas makes no attempt to answer it in his play, he has woven a drama of the most intense interest around it.

The production furnished the picture by Mr. Irving is lavish. Miss Baird makes an effective figure of the wife while the supporting cast, including such skilled players as Henry Clive, Warburton Gamble, Mlle. Elaine Amazar, Betty Howe, Bobby Ward, Joseph Smiley and Charles C. Brandt, renders assistance of a telling variety.

THE STORY

In Paris, Frank Clayton, a magazine publisher, meets Mimi Chardenet, an artist's model, and enters upon a flirtation with her which develops into something a little more than a flirtation when he attends the Four Arts Ball with her. Mimi enters the room riding on the back of a bull and clothed in scanty draperies. The next day, while walking in one of the parks with Mimi, Clayton meets his wife and child. He explains the situation by introducing Mimi as a contributor to his magazine. When the Claytons leave Paris the publisher puts Mimi out of his mind, presumably forever, but such is not the case for matters take a peculiar turn.

The sculptor for whom Mimi posed visits America and Elinor Clayton buys two of his figurines. From him she learns Mimi's true identity and takes Clayton to task for his association with her. In a spirit of something more than mere pique she then encourages the friendship of Benjamin De Lota, a man she knew before her marriage with Clayton, he, however, being unaware of this. Through a chain of circumstances in which she plays an entirely innocent part, Elinor is discovered by her husband in De Lota's apartments. He is outraged and decides that then and there he and Elinor must part. He even goes so far as to doubt that he is the father of Elinor's son!

Intervention of friends proves a means of reconciliation, however. De Lota eventually clears the situation by proving his whereabouts previous to the birth of Elinor's son. And then their common love for the boy proves too strong to resist and husband and wife again come together.

SUGGESTIONS

The possibilities of this picture, possibilities that take shape and form in the way of unusual advertising channels, can not easily be overestimated. In the first place you have a title that has been pretty well popularized through the long production of the play—in the second you have an author to name whom is probably to name the best known American playwright of the day. Here are two big bets for you, right at the start. And then you have George Irving, the director, and Leah Baird, the star. As to the popularity of their work in your house, you alone know best.

But to the biggest point of all. The matter in the picture itself. It is based on the double standard of morals, the same old double standard that has been present in stage plays and in pictures from the time of their beginning and which will probably remain in them until some age dim and distant. But it is this same double standard that, coupled with the name of the premier playwright of the times, will give you the best publicity in the world.

Your people, if they are intelligent, will know the instant you have mentioned Thomas' name that you have something worth while and when you say the double standard they will readily realize that such a theme under the treatment of such a skilled playwright will present dramatic possibilities that have long since remained hidden. Drive home these facts. Use forceful, telling catch lines, catch lines that present the argument of the picture in a frank yet decent manner. We're a long way off if you won't have the crowds coming if you follow this course.

CATCH LINES

Should society forgive in a man what it condemns in a woman? That is the question of the ages—the insoluble conundrum of the double standard. It forms the basis of Augustus Thomas' powerful drama, "As a Man Thinks," which you will see at the ——— theatre.

Frank Clayton doubted his wife—his doubt grew until it assumed the proportions of a great fear—and the question that kept recurring in his mind with maddening frequency was: "Is Dick Clayton my own child?" There was no way for him to find out—but he learned the greatest lesson of his life. See "As a Man Thinks."

Written by Augustus Thomas, dean of American playwrights, produced under the direction of George Irving and presented by Harry Raver with Leah Baird as the star—a wonderful quadruple-star combination—the best that each branch of the picture art could produce. See "As a Man Thinks."

He condemned the very same actions of his wife which he excused in himself! He believed in a double standard of morals for men and women! Do you? See "As a Man Thinks."

On woman rests the purity—the very welfare of the human race! And so there must be a double standard of morals that this purity and welfare be assured! Do you think so? See Augustus Thomas' great play, "As a Man Thinks."

PROGRAM READER

Do you hold an opinion on the double standard of morals? Do you excuse in a man what you condemn in a woman? And if you do, why? Why should a man's actions, actions which he himself is ashamed of in broad daylight, be tolerated whereas a woman's actions in the same, direction, actions which she is NOT ashamed of, be condemned? Is this justice, equality; is it RIGHT?

All these questions are questions that have remained unanswered since the pendulum of Time

"THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL"—UNIVERSAL

A Highly Pleasing Comedy with Mae Murray Starred

THE authors of this comedy-drama, Harvey Thew and John Clymer, have done a fine job. And so has Robert Leonard, the director, and last, but not least in any sense of the word, has Mae Murray, the star. While the criticism of a few too many and slightly too long closeups might apply, the picture on the whole is such good, amusing entertainment that to pick minor flaws is altogether unfair.

The plot has a freshing originality, an originality which, by the way, is a wonderful basis for unusual advertising; it carries through swiftly, is filled with interesting incident, and the comedy situations are scattered generously.

Miss Murray appears as a little Irish girl who decides to become a dancer when half the situation presents itself, and who provides the other half herself by hatching up a wonderful past for publicity's sake. And one might also think that she had had the past when one sees her dancing in a gown that might pass as mosquito netting in a pinch!—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Mary McGuire	MAY MURRAY
Patrick McGuire	Harry Rattenbury
Uncle Barnly	Richard Cummings
Jimmie Calhoun	Rudolpho De Valintine
Percy	Ivor McFadden
Duke de Sauterne	Bertram Grasby
Michael Calhoun	Edward Jobson

By Harvey F. Thew and John B. Clymer.
Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE

Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil," her latest Universal picture, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Murray's last appearance here was in "What Am I Bid"—and it is said that "The Delicious Little Devil" is even better than this fine offering. It provides her with the role of Mary McGuire, the daughter of a mother who takes in washing and a father who takes in liquor. But if they haven't given Mary all the social position in the world her parents have at least passed on a good lot of Irish blood to her and doubtless it is this same blood which leads Mary to take the bold step she does in order that money will be hers.

On the outskirts of the city there is a cafe that is undergoing renovating and all modern improvements. A hostess is called for, one who knows the ropes, the wines, the men and the latest steps and Mary lands the job! Not because she was ever a professional dancer or entertainer, but merely because of her pluck and her lie—for she calls herself a queer sounding Spanish name, a name that the whole world knows owing to its real owner's relations with a certain Duke de Sauterne, a fellow named after wine and who is constantly running after it.

And so Mary, transparently clad makes her terpsicorean debut and wins the heart of Jimmie Calhoun, a fellow who also has a little Irish blood in him. And all is going nicely until the Duke himself appears. Then, well a bomb might have been thrown. There is a grand mixup which piles one comedy situation after another on top of each other until finally the virtue of Mary and the love of Jimmie are the things apparent.

THE STORY

Mary McGuire is another one of those heroines before whom life opens up just a succession of weary days. Her mother takes in washing, her father and uncle sit around the house and take in divers drinks and sundry foodstuffs. Mary takes in coats at a restaurant but gets fired one day when the check-room manager finds her waltzing around with a patron's robe of ermine. So she must, perforce, seek another job. It so happens that at a cafe, a short distance from the city (such cafes are known as road houses) a process of renovation is going on. The management is dusting off the old furniture and installing a cabaret and an add goes in the paper asking for the services of a young lady, boasting a large acquaintance of wine buyers and able to trip the light fantastic without tripping anyone else.

And Mary, her Irish dominating as usual, applies for the job. Furthermore she lands it by posing as the late sensation of Europe, a dancer who has had quite an affair with a certain Duke de Sauterne, an affair which has had considerable publicity. It is Mary's Irish that enables her to get away with a grand bluff until, of course, the Duke himself puts in an appearance! The Duke becomes muchly infatuated with the gay little poseur and starts in pursuing her. He has a dangerous rival in the person of Jimmie Calhoun (you know his name and so are aware that he is the hero). There is a grand mixup in which the Duke, Jimmie, Mary herself, her father, uncle and the butcher boy, all participate in, and eventually Mary proves to Jimmie that she wore a transparent gown only because her mother needed the money and not to please any de Duke.

CATCH LINES

"A Good Future for a Woman with a Past" —ran the advertisement. And Mary McGuire applied for the job. Mary didn't have a past but she manufactured one—and that's where the fun comes in—see "The Delicious Little Devil."

She was trying to live down her past—on every side she met obstacles, would cruel, cruel, men never stop tormenting her—they were bound to find out though—but supposing, just supposing that HE should discover that she had been lying! Oh, well, all this sounds like mild melodrama doesn't it? It's not exactly. Mary McGuire wanted to live down her past because it was a perfectly innocent past! She wanted to MAKE it bad! Laughs, Laughs, Laughs. See "The Delicious Little Devil."

Anyone could see through the game she was playing as easily as they could see through the gown she wore—see "The Delicious Little Devil."

She posed as the girl who broke the Duke's heart until the Duke appeared himself—see "The Delicious Little Devil."

Her mother took in washing, her father took in liquor and she took in all of New York—see "The Delicious Little Devil."

SUGGESTIONS

You ought to be able to have a lot of fun with your advertising on this picture. The comedy lends itself very well to advertising. The situation, for instance, of a girl not wanting her past to be known for fear her virtuousness will lose her her job is one around which any number of clever advertisements could be written. It could be straight copy, with a comedy touch, copy that gently "kids" the picture, or burlesque on the usual "woman-with-a-past" advertising copy. In fact you could lay your whole campaign out around this single situation.

Tell the people also that they will see Mae Murray as a dancer—memory is not so short that they have forgotten that a few years ago she was known throughout the country as such.

Mention should be made of Miss Murray's previous Universal hits, the immediately previous one being "What Am I Bid?" She has scored successfully in a number of recent productions. Also let Robert Leonard, the director, have a good play.

And don't forget that title with all the star and the story. Its another good one—Universal can pick them—and you can make money on them if you go about it correctly.

PROGRAM READER

Most of our best screen heroines are desirous of concealing their pasts from their screen admirers. Time and again you have seen a lady in distress trying desperately to conceal some misstep she made ten years before—she wants to appear as the epitome of virtue before her husband. But the old order changeth, in fact is reversed altogether in the latest Universal picture featuring Mae Murray which will be shown here shortly. Miss Murray has the role of Mary McGuire, a perfectly virtuous and respectable young lady with nothing in her past that couldn't stand being held up to the sun or the sun's only rival. But, lo and behold! What does Mary McGuire go and do but concoct up a wild and desperate and woolly and wicked past for herself and when she sees that her virtuous ways just will insist on coming to the surface she is desperate! It sounds funny, doesn't it? Well, it is. "The Delicious Little Devil" is one of the fastest feature comedies that has come to this theatre in some time. The story by Harvey Thew and John Clymer is delightfully original while the cast assembled to support the star is of the highest order.

"FALSE EVIDENCE"—METRO

" Rebellious Heroine Finds Expression in the Woods "

ALTHOUGH the title of Viola Dana's latest offering suggests a journey into the well-known courtroom with a criminal case as the piece de resistance, it really is far removed from any such idea. The author takes the spectator to the pine-scented atmosphere of a lumber camp, where there is a considerable breadth of outline, but a very narrow outlook upon life.

Children must obey their fathers in all things, even on the question of matrimony. They must abide by the parental decision whether the marital selections are acceptable or not. The heroine of this tale naturally rebels, for her father's choice turns out to be a worthless scamp. She consents, however, to go through the ceremony to release her lover from jail, the latter having assumed her guilt when she stabbed her would-be husband. The sunlight scatters the clouds eventually when the unworthy suitor is conveniently killed.

Rather a simple idea, but developed with enough dramatic twists as to make the suspensive element dominant throughout. It is quite logical except for the arbitrary conclusion.

Miss Dana plays the part of the heroine with authority and charm, while her assistants give a good account of themselves. The picture is marked by a wealth of photographic display that fits the story nicely. Edwin Carewe directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 21.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Viola Dana, who has been accomplishing great things on the screen of late as a gifted comedienne, scores again, though in a different type of role, in the latest Metro production entitled " False Evidence." Probably no better selection could have been found to test her versatility than this visualization of Mary E. Wilkins' story. It is quite a dramatic part that she has here and somewhat exacting in its demands, but the star manages to emerge with flying colors.

The story is a pine-scented romance of the redwoods with the central character an unspoiled child of nature. Old-fashioned theories furnish the bonds of her environment for she is brought up in a stern and rigid atmosphere. The children of these strange people who inhabit the desert woods are pledged in infancy to marriages and intermarriages, and woe to the one who dares to disobey when the call of love is heard. How the story is evolved from this idea, and taking the characters through a series of tense situations, makes an entertainment remarkably emphasized with the qualities of vigor and vitality. The scenic investiture is praiseworthy, as the story is framed against a background of giant redwoods.

Wheeler Oakman is seen as Miss Dana's leading man and he appears to good advantage. Joe King, long identified in character roles upon the screen, is in the cast and gives a good account of himself, while others are Edward Connelly, Patrick O'Malley and Peggy Pearce. The picture was produced under the direction of Edwin Carewe from an adaptation by Finis Fox. "False Evidence" comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

THE STORY

Sandy MacTavish has always been known as a man whose word is as good as his bond. Therefore when he betrothed his infant daughter, Madelon, to Lot Gordon he had to keep his promise when she became of age. Sandy lived in a region where the custom was to marry and intermarry without any questions being raised as to its propriety. Hardy Scots all, they wanted no mixture of other races coursing through their veins. So the day came when Sandy must keep his pledge to Lot despite the fact that the latter's character wasn't anything to boast about. Lot's brother, Burr, was the object of Madelon's affection, and he reciprocated her love, though he, too, was pledged to another.

During a drunken moment Lot attempted to embrace the girl and she stabbed him not knowing his identity. Burr happened upon the scene and assumed her guilt, though with the knowledge that if his brother died he would be put to death. But the wounded man lived and to give her lover his freedom Madelon consented to carry out her father's pledge. The wedding day arrived and found the girl desperately unhappy since she realized that a MacTavish must keep her word. With the guests assembled, Lot failed to turn up for the ceremony. The next morning disclosed the fact that he had been killed by a falling tree. With the pledge broken in his death Madelon was free to become the wife of Burr. Thus she found her happiness at last.

PROGRAM READER

It mattered a great deal to the girl whether she could find happiness with the man her father had selected for a husband. That he may not have been a good choice was of no consequence since she was pledged in infancy and a MacTavish was never known to break his word. The girl had her own love affair and her own idea of what constituted a perfect husband. And Lot Gordon was not her ideal even if her father did look favorably upon him. But she was an obedient girl, was Madelon, and she kept her father's pledge, though he did not know that her real reason for being dutiful was to liberate her lover. The parents' choice had been stabbed by the girl and she had consented to marry him if he would free his brother, who had assumed her guilt. A stirring tale indeed, and one calculated to interest you immensely. We have no doubt that you will follow the trials and tribulations of Madelon with keen attention, so wrought is the story with tense situations and climaxes. Viola Dana is the star of " False Evidence "—an adaptation of Mary E. Wilkins' novel of the same name, and Metro has produced it under the direction of Edwin Carewe. Come to the ——— theatre next ———. We feel sure you will go away satisfied.

CATCH LINES

Her father had promised her in marriage to a man she didn't love. The law of her community held that the settlers should marry and intermarry regardless of their own desires in the matter. So she was promised when a baby, for her father's word meant everything to him and a promise must be kept. Did she rebel or follow out the doctrines of her forefathers? See " False Evidence " and discover the solution.

She stabbed the man she had promised to marry. His brother, the man she really loved, assumed the guilt. To assure his freedom the girl was compelled to keep her promise. You will follow the situation with interest when " False Evidence " comes to the ——— theatre.

The story of a girl whose life looked black indeed until she burst the bonds of her narrow environment. Her father didn't care about her happiness for his honor was at stake as a man who kept his word. See " False Evidence."

Viola Dana in one of Mary E. Wilkins' greatest stories. A stirring tale of a lumber camp where men brought up their children to marry and intermarry. Promised in infancy by their fathers these children were forced into marriage against their consent. And promises must be kept.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have had good box-office results with the previous Dana pictures there is no reason why you should not clean up with the present one too, as it is a worthy successor to the previous offerings that Metro has given her. Feature the star and neglect no opportunity to impress your audience that she has the field quite to herself in roles of a frolicsome character. Remember how she stood all the other people on their heads in " Satan, Junior," and " A Parisian Tigress? " Well, she is quite as wilful and mischievous here. Everyone admires a spunky girl—at least secretly—and Miss Dana has surely come to the top in interpreting her.

Also advertise the author. Mary E. Wilkins is one of the most widely known novelists in current fiction, and doubtless many patrons have an acquaintance with her " False Evidence." You have lots of good material in the story for exploitation. Bring out that it is based upon the obedience of a girl to her father in a matter of matrimony—that the people who form her environment conduct their lives with stern measures. The situations in which she rebels have a

"A STITCH IN TIME"—VITAGRAPH

Gladys Leslie Simulates Gladness in Appealing Story

AN appealing little story of love's awakening is Gladys Leslie's newest Vitagraph release, "A Stitch in Time"—appealing not only in the sense of its humna touches, but in the way it creeps under the skin and stays there. There are no plot uncertainties, for the idea is woven from a single situation—a situation that generates a happy philosophy and faith in mankind.

From the time that the heroine comes into the young man's life he changes his entire viewpoint on matters of love, business and deportment. He is living a mad pace until the devoted girl warns him that "a stitch in time will rest the mind." And then it is all over.

Quite a few dramatic details are worked out before the hero is sure of himself. Other loves must be cast aside along with his bibulous friends, and their elimination holds the audience to strict accountability. Let it be said that "A Stitch in Time" is quite able to take care of itself despite the flimsy character of its title.

It is not a big story, but it has a good plot well supplied with interesting detail. The obvious note never comes to the surface so prominent are the elements of heart interest and human man appeal. Love and sympathy are its keynotes, generated through the spirit of gladness that belongs to Miss Leslie on the screen. She is given adequate support.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 5.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Gladys Leslie, the charming little Vitagraph player, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, in her latest picture entitled "A Stitch in Time." This is an adaptation from a play which ran with success in New York, and it affords the dainty little star the role of the caretaker of a Washington Square studio. The tenant of the studio is one Worthington Bryce, a wealthy dabbler in artistic fields. He has dabled a little in writing and a little in painting; but to tell the truth his writing consists chiefly of penning notes to his father requesting cash and his painting of smearing up Broadway and sundry points with the red pigment.

However when Phoebe takes charge of the studio a change comes over him. Worthy thinks it exercised by the girl he loves, Lela Trevor, a young flapper who loves money and so seeks Worthy. The man she loves wears other shoes, however. But success comes to Worthy in the writing line and Phoebe gets none of the credit. Then one night the little caretaker makes a startling discovery as to Lela's unfaithfulness to Worthy. She acts on her first impulse which is to raise a racket and show the girl up before Worthy and then she acts on her second which is to straighten things out so Worthy's feelings wont be hurt.

However things come out to Phoebe's benefit in the end and Worthy at last tells her the words that she has been longing to hear. Miss Leslie is supported by Eugene Strong, Charles Walton, Cecil Chichester, Earl Schenck, Agnes Ayres and others while the direction of the piece was in charge of Ralph Ince.

THE STORY

Phoebe-Ann assumes her ill mother's duties as caretaker in the studio of Worthington Bryce and is appreciated by the worthy gentleman for the great care she exercises in looking after the place. On her mother's death Phoebe is given the vacant position and is brought to the studio to live. Room is found for her and Worthy begins her education. It is at her suggestion that he stops painting Broadway and looks after his art to some extent. Worthy, be it known, has a rich male parent who wants him to enter business, but the youthful fellow believes he has a talent for wielding the brush.

And Worthy is also much in love with Lela Trevor, a young woman who loves his money more than she does his self. This sort of makes Phoebe's heart ache a little bit but she stifles the aches and the sobs and goes about her work smiling. Hard times hit the studio and it is Phoebe who sends out some old manuscripts prepared by Worthy. She sends them out with a little prayer and back comes a check.

Then Worthy becomes a prominent author, rising to fame over night as it were and little Phoebe gets none of the credit at all-at-all. The rise to fame is celebrated by a midnight supper after which Lela, her mother and a certain Dick Moreland return to the studio to spend the night. Phoebe surprises Lela and Dick in each others arms and raises something of a rumpus. But when Worthy appears she thrusts Lela back of the cortuans and takes her position in the intruder's arms. The next morning as she prepares to leave, Worthy's servant, who knows the whole story locks her in a closet and then gives Worthy a good talking to after which his eyes are opened as to Phoebe's worth.

PROGRAM READER

Another adaptation of a Broadway play comes to this theatre on ———— when Vitagraph's "A Stitch in Time" with Gladys Leslie starred is presented here. It is a certainty that picture houses receives as many Broadway plays as does Broadway itself. Many of them are heralded with glaring superlatives when they are adaptations of works which hardly ran the week out on the speaking stage. But whatever the case with "A Stitch in Time," that is, however long it ran on the stage, it certainly makes one of the most charming and winsome plays in which Miss Leslie has ever appeared. It tells the story of a girl's love for a rich young artist and how he finally discovered her true worth as compared with the girl he thought he loved. Miss Leslie makes an attractive and appealing appearance in the role of the girl while Eugene Strong endows the part of the hero with manly qualities. The supporting cast is of unusual excellence while the direction was in charge of Ralph Ince.

SUGGESTIONS

You should make the Gladys Leslie pictures advertise themselves as soon as you flash her name on the screen. All of them afford her roles of sunshine and sadness, all of them are light pieces of entertainment but entertaining because of their simplicity and the charm of the star. When you flash the name of Gladys Leslie across your theatre your public ought to know that the picture you have to offer contains all those ingredients. If they don't know it now, start in on this picture, "A Stitch in Time" and begin educating them into knowing what a Gladys Leslie picture stands for. Use colorful, descriptive language in your advertising, get it up as prettily as possible, both with respect to words and pictures.

Ralph Ince's name means considerable on any film. He directed this. Mention him. Look over those in the supporting cast, there are a number of Vitagraph favorites there and there may be some of your public particularly well liked players among them.

"EYES OF THE SOUL"—ARTCRAFT

A Beautiful Story Presented in a Beautiful Way

"EYES OF THE SOUL" plays on the strings of the heart with the skill that Heifetz exercises over the violin. And like the music from the instrument, the impression made by its drama is lasting; something that penetrates and goes beyond the superficial emotions. The narrator of the drama and his figures, brought to life so realistically on the screen, hold their audience in a grasp sure and unerring. They call for tears; call for smiles, and the response is intantaneous. A false note never intrudes to mar the exquisite harmony of the sweeping symphony of drama; one might almost say musical drama.

The plot deals with a cabaret entertainer who refuses wealth that she may care for, and in caring for find happiness and love with, a blind soldier. Elsie Ferguson's characterization of the leading part is marked with sincerity and depth of feeling. Wyndham Standing as the sightless hero creates one of the most human characters the screen has ever seen. His performance is quiet, restrained and yet always tremendously effective.

Excellent direction by Emile Chautard finishes the picture off with the final touch of beauty. Here is a real story, a story that is beautiful and which is presented in a beautiful way.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

The latest Artcraft picture starring Elsie Ferguson entitled "Eyes of the Soul," will be the main attraction on the bill of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— next week. This is based on the novel "The Salt of the Earth," by George Weston, and is said to be one of the most dramatic of the many pictures in which Miss Ferguson has appeared. It gives her the role of Gloria Swann, an entertainer in a southern restaurant largely patronized by the old families of the section. It is Gloria's voice and her dancing that nightly entrance the patrons of the place, and one of them, Judge Malvin, is quite hopelessly at her feet.

Judge Malvin offers her money and position and these things appeal to Gloria strongly, for she has had to work for a wage all her life. She realizes that as far as her own personal comforts are concerned she would never have to work again if she allowed the judge to make her Mrs. Malvin. And just as she is about to accept a new influence enters into her life. It comes in the person of Larry Gibson, a blinded soldier. He does not solicit her care, her love, but these she finds herself lavishing on him without restraint. How the love story is brought to an end, when all three of the principals realize that there is something far greater in the world than mere bodily comfort, forms a picture of an unusually appealing character.

Miss Ferguson appears to radiant advantage in the stellar role. The support is notable, particularly with the case of Wyndham Standing, who carries the role of the soldier. The picture was produced under the direction of Emile Chautard.

THE STORY

Gloria Swann sings and dances in a southern restaurant and cafe. She is not like the other girls of the place in that she is not always looking out for number one. Judge Malvin, of one of the old families of the south, admires her greatly and introduces her to his sisters, an evidence of the fact that he intends to marry her, according to all the other girls in the place. But Gloria is not so easily won. Of love she has none for the old judge. She realizes, however, that with the wealth that the position of his wife would bring her she need never work again, never dance for a living and tenant a cheap boarding house.

One day while out rdiing with the judge, the machine knocks a wheel-chair, in which sits a convalescent Canadian soldier, off the road. He is not hurt by the accident, only shaken up a bit, and Gloria is rather sorry to hear him say that it was too bad the car didn't make a thorough job of finishing him off. For Larry Gibson is blind. A war hero, after heroes have been more or less forgotten. He is, as the judge says, the salt of the earth scattered to the four winds—that's war! In the days that follow Gloria sees much of Larry and does a thousand and one little things to comfort him. She grows to love him and to make him overcome his prejudice against himself.

So Gloria turns the judge down, she prefers serving for love and happiness to being served merely for selfish reasons. In time a child comes to bless the union of Gloria and Larry, and it is then that Larry's loss of sight is largely recompensed by another sight, that sight which lies in the eyes of the soul.

PROGRAM READER

Gloria Swann was the idol of the Palm Garden restaurant in the south. It was a restaurant patronized by the very best families of the old city in which it was located, and Gloria acme in contact with them all. Many were the proposals of marriage lavished on her, but none did she take seriously until Judge Malvin, one of the wealthiest residents of the old district, became a nightly visitor to the place, always managing to see her. He was a kind old man, Judge Malvin. And what made a big impression on Gloria was that she had all the wealth that any mortal could want. She realized that if she accepted this man she would have it easy for the rest of her days. And she was on the point of accepting him when a new influence entered her life—this influence came in the shape of one Larry Gibson, a young man who moved about in a wheel chair and who was blind! How Harry Gibson changed the whole course of Gloria's life is the story that is told in Elsie Ferguson's latest Artcraft picture entitled "Eyes of the Soul." It is an adaptation from the novel "Salt of the Earth," by George Weston, and is considered one of the most deeply appealing pictures in which the star has appeared. It will be shown here shortly.

CATCH LINES

There were two men in her life—one was rich, a man who could grant her every desire—the other was a soldier, blinded in the war, and poor! And she had worked hard all her life. Riches and the luxury they would bring appealed strongly to her. Which should she choose? See "Eyes of the Soul."

A picture that plays on the strings of your heart with the skill of a violinist.

The blind man's eyes are eyes of the soul.

He had come back from the war broken. He was blind—his athletic frame was wasted. He wanted to die—he wanted to quit! But he found that that wasn't the way the game was played. See "Eyes of the Soul."

SUGGESTIONS

Your advertising on this subject should be dignified. It deals with a most sympathetic story—the love story of a blind soldier and a cabaret singer who was different and it tells this story beautifuly. It may not come under the regular routine of suggestions to state here that the whole Rivoli orchestra was sniffling and laughing by turns when this picture was on. There are more sniffles than laughs in it too—but they are sniffles for something that goes deep beneath the surface. So let your advertising tell of these two characters and their romance—a simple statement to this effect and you will be presenting the picture properly and attractively.

You can't pay too much attention to your music in presenting the film. Music is a good part of every picture and it adds wonders to this one. By all means see it before your public does and arrange appropriate tunes for its many phases. These will suggest themselves to you as you see it. We would say that a theme such as a sad melody would create would be the best thing. You may not like this idea—but be sure to get this point—the picture is sad, but it sends the people away HAPPY and feeling BETTER for it. So its not one of those depressing pictures. And get that over in your advertisements too.

"THE PEST"—GOLDWYN

The Eccentric Mabel of Olden Days in a Good Comedy

TO relate the bare outline of this plot would be a gross misrepresentation of the picture. Really the plot is just about bare nothing, the merest sort of inconsequential stuff. On the other hand, however, the complete picture reveals an amusing series of incidents admirably held together by an eccentric characterization rendered by Mabel Normand that is, indeed, reminiscent of her old Keystone days. Her clothes, her business and her expressions all recall the times when Chaplin and Conklin used to buffet her about.

And it is Miss Normand who puts "The Pest" over. When she falls down in an ecstasy on receiving her first kiss, when she takes a bath in the water barrel and when she enters the ballroom dressed in a gown that doesn't hang correctly on any one of her curves, she is the ridiculously funny Mabel, a Mabel that makes it impossible for even a reviewer to call her Miss Normand.

What support she receives from John Bowers, Alec Francis and Leota Lorraine is entirely acceptable, while W. Christy Cabanne's direction is quite suitable. — Length, 5 reels. — Released April 20. — Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Rags may be royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake, but the Pest didn't think so—she decided that only the best finery would suit her, and she got it—in the most humorous way you can imagine—see "The Pest."

It's the old eccentric, joyous, foolish, awkward Mabel Normand that you will see in "The Pest." The Mabel Normand you enjoyed and admired in countless Mack Sennett comedies of old—right in her own element. See "The Pest."

The only bath tub she knew was the water barrel—the only home a dirty garret. But love and happiness sought her out even in these miserable surroundings. See "The Pest."

The first kiss the Pest ever received made her fall down—she went right over backwards! But even so she had spunk enough to come forward for another! You can't beat "The Pest."

The Pest has YOU on her list. If you don't see her you'll regret the day you decided not to. See Mabel Normand in "The Pest."

PRESS NOTICE

Mabel Normand, the comedienne without an equal, will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Goldwyn picture entitled "The Pest." "The Pest" is said to provide Miss Normand with a role similar to those in which she first gained her nation-wide popularity under the direction of Mack Sennett. In the title part of this picture she appears as the little drudge of the Blodgetts, a slovenly couple who live in a village by the river and operate the ferry from the mainland to the island. It is one of the Pest's many tasks to crank this ferry back and forth over the river, and on one of the trips she has as passengers a number of city folk, bound to spend a few days at Judge Fisher's house up on the hill.

When the Pest gets her first look at fine millinery and good clothes she then and there aspires to a higher social position than that offered in her rather hateful existence with the Blodgetts. How this position she one day achieves is told in a story fraught with any number of humorous moments and containing a sustaining quality of melodrama so that the interest is never lost.

Miss Normand is constantly the center of attention in "The Pest." Her tricks and her business are refreshing and amusing and she carries the action through to a most successful finish. Her companion funmakers in "The Pest" are John Bowers, as her suitor, and Alec Francis, Charles Gerrard and Leota Lorraine in other prominent roles. "The Pest" was written by Melville W. Brown and produced under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne.

SUGGESTIONS

The Normand personality, tricks, etc., predominate throughout the five reels of this feature, so it would be appropriate if you devoted the major portion of your advertising space to the talents of the star in the way of eccentric comedy. Recall some of her past successes under the old Keystone banner, dwell on her success in the special production of "Mickey," and then go on to say that she has a similar role in "The Pest." You will not be misleading your patrons by such statements, for frankly "The Pest" is the nearest approach to her old-time pictures that has been made.

Feature the star and her role and let the story go—it isn't much any way—and it's the one character that is the central figure from first reel to last.

Mention of W. Christy Cabanne as the director and of John Bowers, leading man, and Charles Gerrard, leading heavy, might help specially if your crowd is the kind that follows pictures closely.

THE STORY

The Pest has few friends in the little village by the river. The Blodgetts, a slovenly couple, with whom she makes her home, mistreat her day and night. But she has fine ideas, has the Pest. One day when she is obliged to deliver eggs to the home of Judge Fisher up on the hill she wears two turkey feathers in her old, knocked in straw hat. She knows this is the style for she has seen a lady from the city wear two such feathers—only they didn't come from a turkey. Judge Fisher takes a kindly interest in the girl and invites her to his daughter's party that night. Blanche despises the Pest but lets her wear one of her gowns. When she walks awkwardly on to the floor every one ignores her. At this the Pest's heart is broken but she bravely resists crying and, instead, fights!..She is finally rescued from the melee, or rather her tormentors are rescued by the judge and his secretary, Giles. The judge sees a ring on her finger that arouses old memories.

When the Pest returns without this ring she is locked up by the Blodgetts and Harland, Blanche's fiance, is called into consultation. The Pest overhears their plot; it is to kill the judge! Awaiting the opportunity she makes her escape and goes to warn him. In the meantime Harland has contrived to throw suspicion on Giles for attempting to rob the judge's safe, this so he may the easier take charge of the judge's affairs after his death! But Harland is somewhat premature. Warned by the Pest, the conspirators are captured, Giles is proven innocent, while the ring shows that the Pest is really the Judge's daughter, Blanche holding this position through an exchange of babies long ago. And of course the Pest finds happiness with Giles.

PROGRAM READER

Remember Keystone Mabel? The Mabel of the olden days who used to cavort about with Charlie Chaplin and Mack Swain and Chester Conklin and all those wild comedians. You usually saw her in a bathing suit then with not much of a part and just a lot of good looks to help her along. In "The Pest," the Goldwyn picture which is shortly to be shown at this theatre you'll have the opportunity of seeing Mabel Normand, the same Keystone Mabel of the olden days, in a good part with the same good looks to stand her by. Mabel appears in the title part of this feature and romps gaily through five reels of film that will make your sides shake with laughter. Her eccentric manner, her ability to put original comedy over and her understanding of human nature which comes to the surface even through all the load of farcical tricks she has at her finger's ends, make her role in "The Pest" stand out as one of the most enjoyable she has ever contributed to the screen. All in all it's a five reel comedy of the cheeriest sort, one which, if you are fortunate enough to see it, will long be remembered by you. It was produced by W. "THE ETERNAL MAGDALENE"—GOLDWYN

Long Heralded Picture Largely an Allegory

THE much advertised, made and remade "The Eternal Magdalene" proves to be a feature demonstrating how a certain leading citizen changes his ideas toward the magdalenes and other fallen members of the community when he learns that even his own daughter has erred and when he is escorted through an impressive array of allegorical scenes by the Eternal Magdalene herself.

The allegory shows in a series of what may justly be described as "quick scenes," a term akin to the "quick change" of the vaudeville artist, the horror that the leading citizen would bring on his municipality if he held to a rigid course of cleanup methods. And this quickness that enters into the picture is the chief element that goes to lower its dramatic standard. The action is so choppy that the interest never multiplies after the approved accumulative formulae.

The picture was produced under Arthur Hopkins' direction. The allegory is enacted against backgrounds of black and would be effective had not the composition of its various scenes shown a curious mixture of artistry and the utterly commonplace. Charles Dalton as the leading citizen and Margaret Marsh as his erring daughter perform with feeling. The title part is taken by Maxine Elliott, who brings out the spirit of the character with impressiveness.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Eternal Magdalene," an adaptation of Robert H. McLaughlin's stage success of the same name, will be presented in motion picture form at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a Goldwyn production and is said to be one of the most impressive pictures ever released. It tells the story of Elijah Bradshaw, the leading citizen of a modern city of average size. Together with other influential citizens Bradshaw extends an invitation to a revivalist, who employs circus methods, to visit the city and institute a moral and religious clean-up of the place. The town must be purged of the bad element, these men believe.

But it is little that they know about the correct manner to eliminate vice and crime. They concern themselves only with the riddance of the present personifications of these elements. And when one of the fallen women comes to Bradshaw and says that he is going about reform in the wrong way, he pays no attention to her plea, even though she reminds him that her own past is linked rather intimately with his own. How Bradshaw comes to understand the other viewpoint through a series of most remarkable visions is subsequently revealed on the film and finally he cancels the Wainsday appointment and decides to follow a more humane and just course.

"The Eternal Magdalene" was produced under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, a stage director and producer of the highest standing. In its cast appear Maxine Elliott in the title role, Charles Dalton as Bradshaw, Margaret Marsh as his daughter, with Donald Gallaher and Charles Trowbridge holding down other important parts.

THE STORY

In a very modern and very fair-sized town, Elijah Bradshaw, the leading citizen, calls a meeting of other prominent men of the place and puts before them the proposition that Wainsday, the famous evangelist, be asked to visit there and make a moral and religious clean-up after the spectacular manner he has been employing throughout the country. Wainsday's price is $30,000, but Bradshaw and his fellows think this a small amount to pay for righteousness. That night Bradshaw is visited by one of the unfortunate women he plans to drive out of the town. She warns him that it is not the right way to go about it, that the fallen women and men too should be cared for and guided and not driven away. But Bradshaw is obdurate.

At his home a shock awaits Bradshaw. Owing to his sternness, Macey, his secretary, has been refused admittance to the house to see Elizabeth Bradshaw and so they had sought entertainment elsewhere and had gone a step too far. Bradshaw commands his daughter to leave his home and then settles down to ponder. He dreams and in his vision the Eternal Magdalene comes before him and leads him through the poor quarter of the town. Here he sees among others his daughter, leaving her baby on the doorstep of the foundling home. He sees his son murder Macey. He learns that plain religion can not drive out poverty, sickness, crime. It must have something substantial back of it. All these things are revealed to him by the Eternal Magdalene.

And when Bradshaw awakes he is a new man. He recalls his daughter and Macey appears, saying that they were secretly married, that he had been afraid to tell. And Bradshaw cancels the Wainsday invitation and decides to institute more practical reforms.

CATCH LINES

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature is instantly attention-commanding and at the same time it implies impressiveness and artistry. It certainly is the big asset you have in advertising the picture to your patrons; the title and any descriptive matter in the way of catch lines or other arguments that you may add to it to carry out its suggestion. Don't fail to make the most of it. For this one time relegate your players to positions second to it and play it up for all you're worth. It's a title that will bring the crowds.

Advertising that you do should be impressively written copy. Don't bill the picture as a sensational attraction for it would be misleading and quite out of place. Glance over the catch lines printed herewith and see if they won't suffice or if others written in the same style will not suffice. Each one of them, tied up with the title, seems to suggest something out of the ordinary and of an impressive character.

In addition to these you will find a fine array of advertising arguments in the Goldwyn advertisements on "The Eternal Magdalene" which have appeared in Motion Picture News for the past month or so. The Goldwyn exchanges are in a position to furnish you with mats of these very advertisements in the size in which they were originally printed or in larger form. These are ideal for advertising the picture to your public. It will pay you to get several of them for use in your local newspapers during the run of the picture.

Margaret Marsh is the popular picture star in the cast. Maxine Elliott in the title role carries it exceptionally well and she is a favorite of the stage. Charles Dalton's performance also deserves mention.

Don't fail to state that Robert McLaughlin's play of the same name from which the picture was adapted scored successfully on the stage and that it was produced under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, in theatrical circles one of the highest regarded producing directors of the day.

"THE LOVE CALL"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Simple Western Story Colored with Billie Rhodes' Personality

AND she killed the man who killed her father, and riding away into the night to get an "eddication," she met a sentimental shepherd and promptly fell in love. Orange blossoms? Decidedly! Thus you have the simple framework of "The Love Call," a picture which brings Billie Rhodes over the western horizon. Except for a variety of close-ups which introduce her tear ducts working overtime, the star succeeds in bringing out her vital and vibrant personality. But a pretty girl whose eyes are in a lachrymose condition does not make a pleasant sight—at least not in a close-up.

The romantic element of the picture sort of tangles itself up in a way, for the shepherd is relegated to the background in a majority of the reels in order to introduce another hero—a cowboy this time—as the girl's leading suitor. As the shepherd is as quiet as his occupation indicates, the action has to be supplied by the cowboy. When the spectator believes the latter has the inside track, lo and behold, he drops completely out of sight and the first man comes into his own again.

The feature carries a punch or two and so is made interesting in the protection given the girl by her father and the cowboy. Terrific fights take place for her sake which, coupled with good characterizations and choice locations, suffice to hold the attention. Hart Hoxie and T. Lloyd Whitlock, as the cowboy and shepherd respectively, lend a lot of animation to the picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

Have you heard the Love Call? If you have or haven't you can see "The Love Call" at the ——— theatre.

Billie Rhodes, the adorable little star of "The Lamb and the Lion" and "Hoop-La" in her latest National comedy-drama.

Because the president wouldn't let the Kid enter college, her champion proceeded to throw him around the office. The university had never seen such rough doings. It wasn't so funny to the inmates but it will be to you—see Billie Rhodes in "The Love Call."

She came from the wild country to a university and found it hard. And she heard the Love Call and returned to her real home.

PRESS NOTICE

Billie Rhodes, the piquant little star of National pictures will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture entitled, "The Love Call." This is considered by many who have seen it to be the best of her series, as it gives her a role in which she is free to exercise her ability along the lines of both comedy and drama. The picture is an adaptation of a novel by Margery Benton Cooke and was scenarioized by E. Magnus Ingleton.

Miss Rhodes takes the role of Kid Allen, the daughter of an old drunken sailor who is finally killed in a brawl. The Kid then sets out to look for a university as she remembers that her father said something about having a good education. The Kid's quest leads to a romantic meeting with Joe Emory, a sheep-herder, and later an exciting and humorous adventure with a husky, good-natured cowboy, Nick Horton, who pulls the whiskers of a college professor when the professor refused to admit the Kid into the university without some preliminary studying.

There are a couple of exciting rough-and-tumble fights in the production, one between the "Mate" and O'Keefe in the frontier saloon, and another when Nick grabs the professor by his hirsute barrage and mops up the classic floor of the college with the dignified high-brow. The photography is striking, especially the shepherd scenes showing the flocks coming down the mountain trail.

THE STORY

Kid Allen is the daughter of Old Mate, formerly a sailor before the mast, but now a congenial old drunkard. Kid's life with him isn't the happiest in the world as her nightly duty is to go to the village barroom and haul him away from his drunken cronies. One night she is insulted by one of the other men and Mate proceeds to beat this fellow up. Arrived home a knock comes on the door and Mate opens it. He is shot dead by his former antagonist. The Kid, in turn, shoots down the murderer.

After Mate's death, the Kid is left alone in the world, and, recalling her father's wish that she should receive a decent education she sets off on horseback to find the nearest university. She suffers a fall on the way and is rescued by Joe Emory, a shepherd. He takes her to his cabin and nurses her injuries. When, at last it comes time for her to go on, both the Kid and Joe discover that they love each other. But even so, they part and go their separate ways.

On her journey the Kid meets Nick Horton, who volunteers to escort her to the university. On arriving there the president refuses the Kid admittance, saying that she is not far enough advanced in her education to enter the university. Misunderstanding him, Nick starts to throw the president about his office and then a general free-for-all ensues. Finally the president relents and accepts the Kid in preference to any more bruises, but she discovers then that it will take her seven years to be educated. The discipline pales on her in time and when she gets a letter from Joe asking her to come back to him she immediately leaves. She has heard the love calls and promises never to leave Joe again.

PROGRAM READER

In "The Love Call," a photo-drama starring Billie Rhodes, which will shortly be seen here, is told the story of a whole-souled but illiterate girl of the western country, who sacrifices her opportunity to become an educated "lady" to make happy the man who loved her. A story of tragedy, pathos and humor, daring in conception and original in its unfolding, with striking scenes of the primitive life of the cattle country. Kid Allen, the heroine of the play, answered "The Love Call," for her heart was true and her mate wanted her. The production was made by William Louis Chaudet. The cast includes William Dyer, Art Hoxen, T. Lloyd Whitlock, and Harry T. Devere.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have played the other Billie Rhodes features this one ought to go well for you as it is an entirely pleasant little picture. It contains no great advertising possibilities when all is said and done, but you should be able to work up quite an interest in it in your advertisements by relating some of the incidents, the author and the star's ability as a comedienne, which ability is afforded opportunity in the picture. The episode when the Kid first reaches college (see The Story) will bear elaborating upon in advertisements, bearing in mind always that it is a good comedy situation.

The author, Marjory Benton Cooke, is quite a well known writer and deserves mention on all advertising that you do.

"A HOUSE DIVIDED"—BLACKTON-INDEPENDENT SALES

Entertaining Story with Pronounced Love Interest; Capitally Played

AN adaptation of Ruth Holt Boucicault's story, "The Substance of the House," renamed "A House Divided" for picture purposes, makes a satisfying offering, all things considered. While it suggests nothing new in plot and characterization, yet its collection of dramatic ingredients are so well emphasized that all traces of obviousness and conventionality are missing. The subject generates a goodly measure of love interest which is set off against a background of reasonable realities. Pathos and sympathy are human attributes of any story and they lift "A House Divided" away from its theatrical outline and make it plausible.

A youthful indiscretion of the hero comes back to haunt him when he is happily married. It is visualized in the person of his first wife, who had given up his name knowing that there was no love lost between them. So she has him arrested for non-support for the sake of her child. His case looks hopeless until his second wife, with noble self-sacrifice, commits perjury by declaring that she has no record of their marriage. Thus her husband is saved a prison term for bigamy. The finale carries a sentimental flourish, with the hero happily divorced from his nemesis, successfully restoring the memory of his beloved through faith and devotion.

The interpretation of the principal roles has been intrusted to Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson, Lawrence Grossmith and Sally Crute. All give capable performances, though Mr. Grossmith's work overshadows the rest. The picture is artistically framed.—Length, 6 reels.—Released by Independent Sales Corporation.—Distributed through Film Clearing House.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mary Lord	SYLVIA BREAMER
Philip Carmichael	Herbert Rawlinson
Ben Baldwin	Lawrence Grossmith
Jessie Baldwin	Shirley Huxley
Sheelah Delayne	Sallie Crute
Sir Arthur Stanhope,	William Humphrey
Duke of Northland	Eric Mayne
Duchess of Northland	Marie Burke
Charles and Violet, their children	Charles Stuart Blackton, Violet Blackton
Michael Carmichael	Baby Ivy Ward

Scenario by Anthony P. Kelly.
Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

SUGGESTIONS

You can get some good selling advertisements out of the marriage stuff in this feature. The mock marriage in which the hero partook and which turned out to be real after he had legally married the girl he loved. That is a situation around which you can write all sorts of forceful arguments. It wouldn't do to let this chance pass. The pulling power in that situation can not easily be overestimated.

If you have played others of the Blackton pictures and found them successful, then by all means go strong on the producer's name with respect to this one. You have a popular leading pair to feature, too, Herbert Rawlinson has been seen in many pictures lately and has a large following. Use his name. Sylvia Breamer, known through her work in Ince pictures and in other subjects produced by Blackton, is also popular.

Then you have another name to show in Anthony P. Kelly's. Not only is he known as a scenario writer of ability but now his "Three Faces East" has established him as a recognized playwright.

PRESS NOTICE

On ——— of ——— week Frank Hall will offer the latest J. Stuart Blackton production at the ——— theatre entitled, "A House Divided." This is an adaptation of a well known English novel and concerns the tricks that the marriage laws of any country are liable to play on one unless he watches himself carefully. Philip Carmichael, happily married to Mary, the daughter of his one-time political backer, is shocked into a realization one day that he is a bigamist and that Mary is not his legal wife. A few years before on a dinner party that wasn't exactly select, Philip had gone through a mock marriage ceremony with Sheelah Delayne, an actress. And now it appears that he was really married to her.

How the true husband and wife—true before themselves and God—and not before intricate law, extract themselves from this predicament is told in an engrossing story in "The House Divided." It has been produced with rare charm and contains an element of pathos, as well as those of romance and intrigue. The leading roles are well taken by those two popular players, Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Rawlinson. They make an ideal pair. Others who appear in the cast are Lawrence Grossmith, Shirley Huxley, Sally Crute, Charles and Violet Blackton, Eric Mayne, Marie Burke and Baby Ivy Ward.

The picture was adapted from its original source by Anthony P. Kelly and produced under the personal direction of Mr. Blackton.

THE STORY

In England Philip Carmichael, a rising young M. P. meets Mary Lord, the ward of the man who is back of his political career. She is attracted to him but he ignores her as she is so young. A few evenings afterwards on rather a wild party Philip plays the part of a bridegroom in a mock marriage ceremony with Sheelah, an actress. Afterwards Sheelah disappears and Philip forgets the incident. After a time Mary becomes the wife of her guardian and it is after that that Philip meets her again and finds her a beautiful young woman. Her husband discovers the growing infatuation between the young people and finally denounces Philip. The excitement is fatal to him, however, and he dies from its effects.

Mary and Philip are married in France. On returning to London they see a play and Philip recognizes Sheelah in the cast. Sheelah has discovered that her marriage to Philip, all in fun, is really legal and she asserts her claim over him for the sake of her child. On the stand Mary renounces her own good name for the sake of the man she loves and says that they were never married.

After this she disappears. Sheelah, with the passing of time, is changed. On the death of her boy she goes to France as a canteen worker. She finds Mary wandering around on the ruins near her old home. Sheelah has her marriage with Philip annulled. He is sent for to see whether his presence will restore Mary's failing memory. And it is Philip's presence, together with an old song, "Just a Song at Twilight," sung by American soldiers, that restores Mary to her senses and to her husband's love.

CATCH LINES

He was the happiest man in the world with his young and beautiful wife. In fact, happy didn't adequately describe Philip's state of mind. He lived in a world of bliss. And then one day an actress, Sheelah, descended on him and called him her husband. And the law was with her. See "A House Divided."

In which the marriage laws play weird tricks with three people.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer—an ideal team. They are now to be seen in J. Stuart Blackton's latest picture, "A House Divided."

The story of a mock marriage that turned out to be a serious catastrophe.

PROGRAM READER

Blissfully happy with his young wife, Philip Carmichael, the rising young member of the English House of Parliament was unaware of any impending danger. Indeed, he had no thought of danger or unhappiness whatsoever. He had live a decent, clean, honest life. He was a credit to his political party and to his country. And then, out of a clear sky, there came a woman to him, an actress, and said that he was her husband. And then Philip thought back, of a foolish dinner party he had attended a few years before. When, just for the fun of it, he had gone through a marriage ceremony with this actress. They had assured him there was nothing real about it; that it was a mock marriage pure and simple. And now here was this woman, come to claim "her rights." And what is more, her rights were supported by law. What was Philip to do? What was Mary to do? These questions are answered in "A House Divided," a J. Stuart Blackton production which will be presented at this theatre shortly. With Herbert Rawlinson as the husband, Sylvia Breamer as his wife and Sally Crute as the claimant, the picture unfolds a story of the intensest sort, capably acted from first to last.

"AS A MAN THINKS"

completed its first swing. And probably they will remain unanswered in the ages to come. But, whatever the future, the present holds many an interesting drama built on these questions and, to our knowledge at least, "As a Man Thinks" is the greatest of these dramas. We are not going to tell you any more about the story of this picture. We might add that as a play it created something that critics describe as a furore. It was big, vital, thrilling. Well it might be for Augustus Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, wrote it. And the picture was produced under the direction of George Irving. A splendid cast headed by Leah Baird and Henry Clive interpret the principal roles. If you want to see a picture that goes beneath the thin surface of the celluloid see "As a Man Thinks."

"THE MONEY CORRAL"—ARTCRAFT

William S. Hart in Moving Story with Eastern Setting

IN "The Money Corral" William S. Hart has stepped out of his customary character of a hard Westerner whose sentimental and chivalrous side is awakened when the right girl comes along. He does not ride over the hills eluding sheriffs, but transfers himself to Chicago, where he engages in a brand new occupation—that of night watchman of a bank.

Of course he gets his man in his familiar way—a quick draw and it's hands up every time. It seems that one of the trusted members of the firm is an "inside" worker for the opposing faction, and the gunmen of the underworld are hired to get the Westerner. Always resourceful, he turns the tables on the crowd and is rewarded with a Montana ranch and one of Chicago's flaxen-haired girls.

The melodramatic incidents are well worked out, Mr. Hart seeing to it that the picture never wants for action. Naturally it carries a big suspensive value, for everything is arranged to get the most from every scene. The humorous and sentimental touches have not been neglected and they give the subject tone and quality. In one of them the star sounds a pathetic note when attempting to overcome his embarrassment in society.

As usual Hart plays the character as only he can play it. His resourcefulness is brought out with unerring skill. Jane Novak is appealing as the girl. The picture is well mounted, the first reel being devoted to an interesting rodeo show.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 20.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Lem Beason, a puncher	William S. Hart
Rose, a poor relation	Jane Novak
Carl Bruler, a manager	Herschel Mayall
Gregory Collins, a railway magnate	Winter Hall
Janet, Collins daughter	Rhea Mitchell
Chicago Kate	Patricia Palmer

SUGGESTIONS

Next to William S. Hart as the chief advertising asset of this picture is the fact that it again finds him away from his conventional element. He goes to Chicago and cleans up a bunch of crooks. This situation should be the central one of your advertising. Right copy in a dramatic way, leading up to the punch and then stopping, this style will be effective in regard to this production.

A good advertisement could be gotten up with a figure of Hart standing in the Loop district of Chicago. Have his feet planted right in the middle of the famous Loop and show him in some dramatic pose. You'll suggest the true Hart character by so doing and also the fact that he again visits a city in "The Money Corral."

Good publicity stories could be written around the fact that Hart, in collaboration with Lambert Hillyer wrote and directed the picture. People will be interested to know that the star had such an important hand in these two ends of the picture's production.

PRESS NOTICE

William S. Hart's new Artcraft picture, "The Money Corral," which comes to the ——— theatre next ———, is one of the best photoplays in which Mr. Hart has been seen in many a day. It is announced that in the making of the big rodeo scenes for this film, all the cow-girls, punchers, Indians and Mexicans within a hundred miles came to take part in the episodes that required fast riding, shooting, roping, etc. Bill Hart is prominent in these scenes himself. Later the story takes the principal characters to Chicago and the western hero is introduced to the underworld crooks. He bests them, saves a trust company, wins a charming girl for his wife and is presented with a ranch in Montana by his grateful employer, the president of a trust company.

Mr. Hart collaborated with Lambert Hillyer in writing and directing this picture and this combination assures the acme of thrill and human interest for both men are famous for their capable work. Mr. Hart declares that the production comes up to his expectations. "The rodeo scenes will only occupy a few hundred feet of the film," he observes, "but they are worth all the trouble and time, for they mirror faithfully the real life of the West." A lot of the wild horses brought in from the ranges were too much for even some of the crack riders and a few bad spills occurred. But the excitement is said to be intense as a result of this genuine replica of a frontier week in the open country.

THE STORY

Lem Beason, a big good natured and brave cowpuncher, is anxious to attend a rodeo of wild riders, crackshots, ropers, broncho busters, Indians and others at Fraley Point, Mont., but when he asks his boss for leave to go, he is chagrined at the man's curt refusal. Lem decides to go anyway, because he proposes to take part in a shooting contest. Gregory Collins, president of the only railroad in the district, is at the rodeo with his daughter Janet, and receives news that his vault in Chicago has been robbed for the second time and a watchman slain. When Lem Beason wins prize for shooting. Collins offers him the job of watching his vault in Chicago, but Lem refuses until he learns that Rose, a poor relation of the Collins', lives with the Collins family. He thereupon accepts the position and goes east.

Carl Bruler, manager of the Collins Trust Company, informs Lem that rival interests are implicated in the robbery of the Collins vault, as they desire to obtain possession of certain valuable papers. Lem guards the vault and gets a mysterious death threat. He tells Bruler about it and arranges a frame-up by which Lem is led to a notorious cafe where he beats a bunch of ruffians to a pulp and returns. A party is in progress at the Collins' home and Janet, to make Lem ridiculous, drags him onto the ball floor. Rose aids him to escape and Lem decides to quit and take Rose back with him to Montana. Bruler laughs at Lem for quitting and that night there is a new watchman at the vault. But Lem, who can drill a hole through a dime in mid-air, is on watch and when the attack on the vault is staged, Lem kills one robber, wounds another and makes Bruler his prisoner. Collins is delighted with Lem's work and gives him a farm in Montana, whither he takes Rose as his bride.

PROGRAM READER

We have seen William S. Hart on the western plains time and again. We have seen him on the frozen wastes of Alaska. We have seen him in Mexico, on the high seas—only recently we saw him in New York. In "The Money Corral," his latest Artcraft picture which is shortly to be seen at this theatre we see him in another new environment—this time he visits the second metropolis of the United States—Chicago. Mr. Hart, who wrote and directed the production in collaboration with Lambert Hillyer, takes the role of Lem Beason, a cowpuncher, who wins a prize for shooting at a rodeo. Due to his prowess in this sport he is sent to Chicago by a railroad man, in whose offices there, all sorts of villainy and plotting are afoot. How Lem gets the upper hand—incidentally, of course, winning the girl he loves, makes a picture up to the usual Hart standard for intensity, novelty and dramatic thrills.

Bill Hart as a night watchman in a bank! Out of the saddle, too. But here is a new Bill Hart and he is just as resourceful on foot as when riding his trusty steed. A quick draw—a flash of a gun—and there stands Bill the coolest individual you ever saw.

They thought they could "get" him, these Chicago crooks. But they didn't bank on his steady eye and two trigger fingers that never trembled.

Bill came from the boundless West and didn't know much about parlor manners. His feet and hands were held up to ridicule by the patent-leather haired boys and the sweet thing in white. You will see some tender pathos when he extricates himself.

"CAPTAIN KIDD, JR."—ARTCRAFT

Mary Pickford in Brittle Comedy-Drama; Fairly Diverting

"CAPTAIN KIDD, JR.," may be summed up as lightweight drama and paperweight comedy, which fact makes it hardly substantial enough for feature length. That the piece holds together remarkably well is sufficient evidence that it has been entrusted to skillful hands. What it lacks in dramatic substance is counterbalanced by the spontaneity of the action, the humanness of the characterizations, the artistic quality of the production, and above all, the measure of admirable acting turned in by the star and her players.

The offering is a reminder of some of Mary Pickford's first pictures in that it exacts no demands on her personality other than to appear bewitchingly feminine, nor does it tax the imagination of the spectator. All one has to do is to sit back in his seat and watch the players nurse the anaemic thing along and give it the breath of life. And they do it to complete satisfaction.

The picture, an adaptation of the play of the same name, jogs along on a fanciful foundation and relates the humorous adventures of a quaint family in their search for hidden treasure. A bit of the action is grossly exaggerated, particularly in the representation of small town life. One rube character, the "constabule," nearly spoils the story in his ridiculousness and almost makes us think that he might have been loaned by Mack Sennett.

Otherwise everything is in its favor. The picture may be brittle, but its thin properties are mildly amusing. A peppery parrot aids considerably in supplying atmosphere.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 6.—Laurence Reid.

CATCH LINES

Mary Pickford's return to the screen—don't fail to see her in her latest production of prettiness, "Captain Kidd, Jr."

A modern search for hidden treasure.

Mary Pickford's latest—adapted from Rida Johnson Young's play and bringing that same combination into play again on the producing end—Frances Marion, scenarist—William D. Taylor, director.

It gives the only Mary plenty of opportunities to show us all her delightful moods and expressions—she's delightful every foot of the way—don't miss her in "Captain Kidd, Jr."

A play fairly bubbling over with the spirit of youth and love—the spring time of life.

PRESS NOTICE

Once before has Mary Pickford played a Scotch role—in "The Pride of the Clan," one of her most popular Artcraft pictures. In "Captain Kidd, Jr.", her new photoplay which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, she is again Scotch, but transplanted from the heather to somewhere in America, as the granddaughter of Augus MacTavish, keeper of a curio and bookshop where the buried treasure, which is the basic idea of the story, is first noised about. And Mary is said to be the most winsome, close-fisted, lovable and at the same time, irritating little person you would find from one coast to the other. She keeps Jim Gleason, engaged in writing .a novel, dangling till the very end. And she is a demon at a trade—so that when the book with the secret plan of the buried treasure appears, she is one of the foremost in arranging for the search which takes them to Cabbage Center—and thereafter the tale is one of the most engrossing, amusing and whimsical character.

On the stage, this play by Rida Johnson Young was a great success. In the films with Mary Pickford in the lead it seems destined to create even a greater furore, to judge by the reports emanating from the studio where it was recently completed by William D. Taylor. Frances Marion adapted the comedy to the screen. A wonderful cast supports "Our Mary." Douglas MacLean is the leading man. "Captain Kidd, Jr.", is a complete departure from the previous Artcraft offerings starring America's Sweetheart and it should prove a welcome attraction for every kind of audience.

THE STORY

Mary MacTavish and her grandfather, Angus, are canny Scots who conduct a book and curio shop. Jim Gleason, a struggling author who hopes to write the great American novel, lives with them, and incidentally, Jim loves Mary. Through an error in the delivery of a lot of books which Jim has purchased, the wrong consignment is delivered to the MacTavishes. Among these Jim finds a copy of "The Pirate's Revenge" and this is unintentionally retained after John Brent, a lawyer, explains that a mistake had been made in selling some of the effects of the late Henry Carleton, to whose millions Willie Carleton is sole heir. Brent repurchases the books and it later develops that "The Pirate's Revenge" contains instructions which will lead the possessor to a hidden treasure. Mary, Jim and Willie go in search of the treasure at Cabbage Center where they are mistaken for burglars. After considerable trouble the "treasure" is located, but this turns out to be a statement enclosed in a rust-eaten box announcing that "the richest treasure in the world is health and honest toil." Mary buys Butterfield Farm, where the "treasure" was located, for $2,000 and subsequently sells it to Willie for $20,000 for railroad purposes, and she finally finds happiness in the ardent love of Jim.

PROGRAM READER

It has been some time since Mary Pickford graced the screen of this theatre and the management feels certain, therefore, that the announcement of her latest Artcraft, "Captain Kidd, Jr.", which will shortly be seen here will come as a pleasant wonder to her many admirers. "Captain Kidd, Jr." is molded to fit the various Pickford moods. There is in it comedy, pathos and wonderful romance, those three ingredients that count so largely in the success of all her pictures. The story which takes its name from a faint similarity in action to the old story of the pirate, Captain Kidd, was adapted from the stage play by Rida Johnson Young. The adaptation was in the hands of Frances Marion, a writer who has worked on practically all the Pickford pictures of the past year. Miss Marion knows the star to perfection—is aware of the variety of action in which she appears at her best and has shaped a wonderful vehicle from the stage play. The direction was in charge of William D. Taylor. It is interesting to note, apart from the picture, that both Miss Marion and Mr. Taylor have only recently returned from service in France.

SUGGESTIONS

Make your presentation of this picture in the way of a return for Mary Pickford. As far as new pictures go this is her first for many months and doubtless your Pickord admirers have been awaiting her appearance in another picture.

As for the rest all that needs to be done is to institute a liberal display of Mary Pickford's name and you ought to have the crowds coming as of yore. She is still the popular favorite. Let them know it's Mary Pickford in her latest picture that you are playing and the job is just about done.

You might also bring out the fact that the picture is an adaptation of the play of that name which had a successful season on Broadway. Perhaps many of your patrons have seen the original production or read criticisms of it in the monthly magazines that devote space to the theatre. Therefore their interest will be aroused in the screen version.

..Have you thought of children's matinees and the fact that the youngsters enjoy reading about the original Captain Kidd? Surely their curiosity will be aroused when he comes to your theatre in feminine disguise and with the title of Junior. And Mary Pickford is as big a favorite with them as with their parents.

You can employ your artist to good effect in illustrating the character for lobby display or ad copy. A girl in swashbuckling clothes looking a wee blt dangerous done in good color contrasts should interest the passerby or the reader. There is nothing like artistic poster drawing to advertise a picture. Without a plan of this sort is like buying a Sunday paper with the colored up elmepnt....i..ismnsig..lwiD the colored supplement missing.

So between Mary Pickford's name, and the fact that the picture is adapted from a successful play, and the good title that it carries, you have three angles to drive the subject home to your patrons.

"Captain Kidd, Jr.," brings Mary Pickford back to the screen after a long absence

"GINGER"—WORLD

Story of Boy and Girl Love Excellently Performed

BOY and girl love that is human, grown-up love that is human, some very fine performances and (strange as it may seem) some very fine battle scenes make " Ginger " a program picture of a highly desirable sort. Lest it be construed that the picture is all war, allow us to explain that the battle scenes are few in number, come toward the end of the picture and are only mentioned in the review because of their realism, realism that was insured by supervision of the Marine Corps.

However, " Ginger " is not a war story. It takes up the careers of two boys and a girl as they all hover around twelve years of age and then carries them over five years. Burton George, the director and author, has inserted a number of deeply human incidents and situations, all of which are well handled by the cast. Garreth Hughes gives a wonderful performance as one of the boys, as does Raymond Hackett as the other. The impression left by Hughes' performance is a query, why doesn't some one star him? Violet Palmer as the girl and Paul Everton as the judge complete a very fine leading quartette.

More like " Ginger " and there'll be less kicks.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

There's a lot of emotion in the lives of boys and girls from ten to fifteen years of age. Many people have the mistaken impression that they lead totally commonplace existences and fail to provide themselves with the thrills that are supposedly reserved for his growth to maturity. But if ever there was a mistaken impression it is this one. What boy or girl of twelve years of age fails to cram more action into a single twenty-four hour day than does a man or woman of thirty or thereabouts? It is with such people that "Ginger," the World picture which is coming to this theatre shortly deals. Three youngsters who live in a world of their own and who find that each day brings something new and strange—three youngsters who after a brief resting space of five years—suddenly wake up to the fact that they are obliged to come out and face the drama of Life. Does it interest you? Maybe we haven't succeeded in so doing, but certain it is that "Ginger," the picture itself, will succeed in this. Violet Palmer, Garreth Hughes, Raymond Hackett—the three—and Paul Everton taking the principal roles and play them with a sincerity and depth of feeling that is remarkable.

PRESS NOTICE

"Ginger," a World Film picture, will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Written and produced under the direction of Burton George, "Ginger" tells the interesting and thoroughly human little story of two boys and a girl, of two boys and a girl who grew up of a sudden and found themselves in the midst of the drama of life. It is no hackneyed version of the eternal triangle that is presented in "Ginger." The characters here are swayed by the truest of emotions. It may safely be said that not once throughout the five reels is a false note struck. This is because Mr. George has put his principal characters in a series of perfectly natural situations and also because the three principal players that take these parts are skilled to a degree.

Violet Palmer undertakes the title role and plays it with a fine share of the ginger after which it is named. She takes the early scenes of the character, when she is a girl of twelve years old, excellently and defines the mature girl with a rare grace and charm. Garreth Hughes gives an excellent characterization of Bobby Trowbridge. No truer presentation of a normal American boy was ever given on the screen. Fine work is also done by Raymond Hackett as the other boy and by Paul Everton as the judge.

The concluding scenes of "Ginger" shows the Marines in action in France. In a wealth of good and bad war pictures these scenes, taken with official sanction stand as probably the best that have ever reached the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

There are a number of interesting advertising possibilities in this production, the first of which is the spirit of youth that permeates its early reels. Calf love and calf quarrels. It is shown mainly through the ability of the three players who essay the young parts and you can not go wrong if you play this trio up big. Garreth Hughes gives a fine impersonation of one boy, an impersonation almost equally as good is rendered by Raymond Hackett as the other and Violet Palmer as the girl gives a good performance. Play these three up and tell your folks what they do. You'll be glad you've done so afterwards for people are going to appreciate them and tell their friends about them.

"Ginger" is by no means a war picture but at the same time there are a few battle scenes toward the end. You can make a good bit of noise about these as they are without doubt some of the finest ever shown on the film. And an interesting fact is that General Doyen of the U. S. Marine Corps had charge of the taking of them. The General is now dead.

The catch lines elsewhere on this page fit the character of the picture very well. You may find use for them in your advertising copy.

THE STORY

Ginger, a girl of twelve years, is the daughter of a crook and leads a miserable existence, constantly receiving beatings from her father and his low companions. The only ray of happiness in her life is provided by Tim Mooney, a newsboy, and the gallant of the neighborhood. At times Ginger manages to steal out with him and repair to the "Movies." One night Ginger's father forces her to break into a house for some silverware while he and his pal wait at the window. She is caught by the police and brought up before Judge Trowbridge. The judge is a kindly gentleman and realizes that Ginger is practically guiltless of any wrong. He has her father arrested and sentenced for the crime while he takes Ginger to his home and there installs her as if she were his own daughter.

Bobby Trowbridge doesn't like Ginger at first but his cordial "hatred" of her is no more than a passing whim. In time they are fast friends and Tim, too, often pays them visits. Then comes the time for Ginger's education and she is sent away to boarding school. Five years brings many changes. Ginger returns a lady, her father is released from prison and war is declared. Bobby and Tim join the Marines after having a falling out over the slanderous remarks passed by the townsfolk regarding Ginger and the judge. Ginger realizes that if she stays on in the house alone with her protector gossip will enlarge on an innocent situation and so she, too, enlists under the colors.

It is in France when the three meet again, but not for long. It is Tim who is mortally wounded and it is Bobby who brings him back over No Man's Land that he may see Ginger for one more time. Then there is a military wedding and the church is the very forest that saw the thickest fighting.

CATCH LINES

The story of three children who loved and laughed—three children who grew up and loved and laughed and cried.

Here is a picture that has caught the spirit of youth wonderfully well. Two real boys in it and one real girl—and they are REAL.

This is not a war picture at all, but a few scenes toward the close, showing the United States Marines and the Red Cross men in action are the most realistic ever shown on the films. They were staged under the supervision of Brigadier General Doyen of the U. S. Marine Corps. Shortly afterwards the General made the supreme sacrifice for his country.

She was loved by a newsie and the son of a wealthy judge. She could not choose between them, but there was a way out. See "Ginger."

Filled with the comedy and charm of youth—with the sweet drama of young man and womanhood. See "Ginger."

A father slandered his own daughter but he lived to ask forgiveness.

Garreth Hughes, Raymond Hackett and Violet Palmer give three excellent performances as children at the " calf " age in " Ginger." It's a picture that you and the whole family will enjoy —don't forget to bring the little folks either.

"Ginger " will recall the days of your childhood to you—you'll enjoy a smile and a tear as you watch the screen.

From boyhood dreams to the grim realities of life—a most interesting path the principals tread in " Ginger." See it today.

Featuring Violet Palmer, the ex-Fox favorite, and Garreth Hughes and Raymond Hackett—a wonderful trio in one of the prettiest pictures ever.

"SPOTLIGHT SADIE"—GOLDWYN

Mae Marsh Shines in the Role of a Pious Chorus Girl

MAE MARSH manages to get a good lot out of her part in this feature, certainly the best of her Goldwyns that we have seen. The role of the "Saintly Showgirl," an original character, to be sure, fits her personality remarkably well, whereas she endows it with the same mingling of whimsy and reality that have established her as one of the skilled actresses of the screen today.

The picture contains a good amount of contrast and, dealing as it does with the life of the chorus girl back stage, reveals a fascinating variety of scenery to the average man in the seat.

Larry Trimble has endowed the picture with a good production, a production that is realistic and artistic at once, while he has managed the various lights of the story in a skilful manner. Miss Marsh has Wallace MacDonald as her leading man, while Mary Thurman and Betty Shade also have prominent roles.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 6.—Peter Milne.

THE STORY

Sadie Sullivan comes from Ireland to join her sister in America. Her dreams of the life here are not realized, however, as she finds her sister living in poverty with a worthless husband. She finds employment hard and, finally, after reading of the wedding of a chorus girl and a millionaire, she decides to go on the stage. At this her brother-in-law jeers, but nevertheless she seeks admission behind the stage door. Eventually, through the good offices of Hazel Harris, one of the chorus girls, she is taken on. Her demure manner is more or less a joke among the rest of the girls in the show, but it proves the beginning of her happiness—and in a strange fashion.

The press agent, at a loss for a story, sees her standing waiting to go on and plays her up in the newspapers as being "The Saintly Show Girl." Columns are printed about her and in this way she comes to the attention of Dick Carrington, a popular and wealthy society man. Dick had thought himself in love with Dollie, the star of the show, but Sadie sends Dollie completely out of his head. Dollie does her best to spoil their happiness by saying that all the "Saintly Show Girl" stuff was just a press agent yarn. Sadie admits this.

Later Dollie sends Sadie a letter purporting to come from Hazel, asking her to be at a certain road house that night. She knows it is to be raided. But Sadie is saved from a thorough downfall by a kindly mission worker she had met before. And it is he who convinces Dick that Sadie was all the press agent cracked her up to be. The place is raided but Sadie is not aomng those present at the station house the next morning.

PRESS NOTICE

Mae Marsh comes to the ——— theatre, beginning ———, in what is said to be without question the best Goldwyn picture in which she had yet starred. It is "Spotlight Sadie" and presents the appealing star in precisely the sort of role she is best equipped to play.

She is Sadie Sullivan, described as "a whimsical product of Old Erin." Thatched roofs, jaunting cars, simple attire and all the features of life in Ireland are beautifully pictured early in the story. Later the peasant girl comes to New York and in time embarks on a theatrical career, becoming, by reason of her shyness and aloofness, "the saintly show girl" in a dashing musical comedy.

Contrasting sharply with her innocence is the worldly wisdom of her associates. This is cruelly brought to her attention when she falls in love with a young man claimed as the especial property of the leading lady. This girl lays a trap for Sadie into which the girl promptly falls and her sweetheart is made to believe that Sadie's saintliness is only a pose. Then Sadie learns that her natural tastes have been used to exploit the company, through the press agent's activities. A startling solution comes out of this tangle in which Sadie finally triumphs.

PROGRAM READER

Mae Marsh in "Spotlight Sadie" will be one of the attractions shortly to be seen at this theatre. This is regarded by many as the best picture in which the talented little star has appeared. It tells the story of a chorus girl far removed from the typical idea of chorus girls. Sadie entered the chorus because she couldn't get anything else to do and because she was Irish and could dance and sing with the best of them. The press agent saw her reading her Bible one night when she was waiting to go on and straightway got a fine story. He sent out pages about her being "The Saintly Show Girl," and this finally brought her to the attention of Dick Carrington, a wealthy young society man who had previously fancied himself in love with the prima donna of the show. How their love affair progresses is a secret of the footlights that will only be revealed on the theatre screen. But we advise you not to miss "Spotlight Sadie" if you are looking for one of the most enjoyable hours you can find within the walls of the theatre.

CATCH LINES

From Erin to the front row of the chorus.

The story of a pious chorus girl.

The story of a chorus girl and her Bible.

Ever hear of a Saintly Chorus Girl. There aren't many, but there is such a one in "Spotlight Sadie," now at the ——— theatre.

A story of a chorus girl who didn't like short skirts.

Mae Marsh in her best Goldwyn picture.

Love behind the footlights.

A story of back stage and the dressing rooms.

In which a star stoops to conquer and fails.

SUGGESTIONS

Many fans still hold a warm place in their hearts for Mae Marsh and as this picture is generally considered as being quite the best she has done for Goldwyn recently, there seems to be no big reason why you shouldn't make a go of it.

You have a good character to feature in that one played by the star. You could work up all sorts of stunts over the "Saintly Chorus Girl" idea even as the press agent in the picture does. A good line of publicity can be built around it, a good line of advertisements and, in fact, a good line of any exploitation you do on the picture.

A teaser ad. campaign might be advisable if you plan running the picture for any length of time. The first insertions could just carry a line, perhaps in the form of a query such as "Have you ever heard of a saintly show girl?" Follow this with "The Saintly show girl is coming to town" and then, "The Saintly show girl will be at the ——— theatre next ———." This will serve to stimulate a good deal of interest in the picture even before you come through with your final announcement. Try to keep the same position in the newspaper for each insertion of the teasers and then, of course, when you put your regular advertisement in refer to the "saintly show girl" so that the connection will be realized.

A similar campaign might easily be instituted in the way of throwaways and letters. The principal thing to bear in mind all the time is the unusualness of the central character. Talk about her a lot and advertise her a lot and you will have the people talking and advertising too.

For regular newspaper advertisements you can get up some effective displays by carrying out the suggestion of the title itself. A picture of Mae Marsh, conservatively dressed, standing in the spotlight's rays on the center of a stage, surrounded by the typical chorus girl types would suffice for a background of a newspaper advertisement as well as a special lobby drawing.

Again you might use as a background a story written in newspaper style regarding the central character. The advertisement, of course, would then be printed right across it in bold type. In fact any number of advertising ideas suggest themselves for the suitable presentation of this picture.

The catch lines elsewhere on this page bring out the central character to a good degree. These of course are intended to be used with some sort of an illustration from the picture. They bring out this valuable element of contrast that lies in those two words "saintly showgirl."

Your people may be interested to know that Miss Marsh's leading man, Wallace MacDonald, has just returned from service with the Canadian forces. And then there is Mary Thurman, the ex-Mack Sennett beauty, who plays quite an important part in the unfolding of the plot. If you cater to a fan crowd use her name too.

"Spotlight Sadie" shows Mae Marsh as a chorus girl of an unusual type

"CHARGE IT TO ME"—AMERICAN

Margarita Fisher Continues Her Frolicsome Career in Slender Comedy

A BIT of pleasant fooling is Margarita Fisher's newest American picture, "Charge It to Me"—pleasant, you might say, until the action tired itself out at the end of the third reel, thus robbing it of its humorous highlights. It is a difficult achievement to keep a farce-comedy moving at the proper tempo throughout, especially when, as in this case, it is established on a weak foundation. Naturally it played out early and no one can be held to account, for it is the nature of such things to be gotten through with as quickly as possible, regardless of whether they falter in action or not.

"Charge It to Me" seemed altogether too zippy at the start to maintain a happy balance, and after the frail plot died its natural death, in the middle of the piece, the director and the players, with all their experience, could not keep it going where the author stopped.

The central idea? Nothing but a prank upon the part of friend wife to teach her husband that she should have a charge account of her own. Things are mixed up pretty badly before a solution is found. Servants, a policeman, a burglar, an insurance agent and what not are involved in the scheme before they all group themselves in typical style for the final flash.

Miss Fisher puts a lot of color and dash into her playing and is capably assisted by Emory Johnson and Bull Montana. The last mentioned nearly walks away with the honors, so well has he guaged the spirit of the piece.—Length, 5 reels.—Released in May.—Laurence Reid.

Elmer Davis	Emory Johnson
Howard Weston	Augustus Phillips
Col. Godfrey Hibbard	L. S. McKee
Archie Gunn	Budd Post
"Corkscrew" McGann	Bull Montana
Hercules Strong	George Swann

CATCH LINES

Here's a young wife, whose husband wouldn't give her any pocket money. When she asked for it he said "Charge anything you want to me." And naturally this got on wine's nerves. How she cured her husband of the "charge it to me" habit makes one of the liveliest farces ever seen on the screen. Don't miss it.

Her admirers were a gallant elderly gentleman, a sentimental insurance agent, a flat-chested dude called Hercules Strong and a fierce longing burglar who had a big heart—but also she had a husband who was jealous! Can you imagine the fun? No, you can't. But the five reels of "Charge it to Me" wil put it before you in black and white.

Margarita Fisher's latest laughing success, "Charge It To Me," now at the ——— theatre.

It's an American comedy and it has Margarita Fisher in it—what more could we offer?

PRESS NOTICE

Margarita Fisher, the vivacious American comedienne, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest comedy entitled, "Charge it to Me." This is said to be one of the liveliest farce mix-ups that has ever seen the light of the screen, dealing as it does with a series of complications built from a situation quite original in the field of motion picture production. Winnie and Elmer Davis are more or less happily married. They have only been united for three weeks, but still there is something that intervenes to mar their happiness. This is Elmer's financial disposition. He doesn't like the idea of giving Winnie money to spend. He wishes her to charge everything.

And Winnie doesn't want to. Furthermore, as Elmer's birthday is approaching she wants enough money to buy him a present. So she turns herself into a chauffeurette, and her car into a taxi and starts out on a search for customers. She doesn't have a hard search either. She is attractive and soon gets a collection of regular customers—all paying cash. But Winnie had reckoned on Elmer in this. Like all young husbands (or like many of them anyway), Elmer is jealous and that's where the fun starts. Nor does it stop until the last scene of the fifth reel is done.

The story was written for Miss Fisher by L. V. Jefferson, a skilled scenario writer while it was produced under the direction of Roy William Neill, for a long time one of the foremost directors of Thomas H. Ince's staff. The leading man is Emory Johnson.

PROGRAM READER

"Charge it to me," "Charge it to me," how many times have wives heard those words when they ask for money. "No, you can get along without money," retort the husbands of the world, "if you need anything get it and charge it to me." Such was the answer that Winnie Davis had received so many times during the three short weeks she had been married to Elmer that she finally decided to put one over on him nnd make some money of her own. How she goes about this and the complications that ensue when Elmer's jealousy is aroused makes one of the sprightliest comedies it has ever been our pleasure to show here. "Charge It To Me" comes to this theatre on ———. The star is Margarita Fisher, who has been seen in many other American comedies, while the leading man is Emory Johnson. The story was written by L. V. Jefferson and produced under the direction of Roy W. Neill.

SUGGESTIONS

It is to be hoped that the exhibitor has been making use of the long string of comedies in which Margarita Fisher has appeared to capitalize her name and the American brand name; to make it stand for the best there is in comedy. This has been suggested before in these columns, You'll certainly benefit if you have followed this course for "Charge It To Me" fits right into this echeme of things.

The picture also has an angle that you can play up to the skies for it will have a wonderful appeal to women. This is developed along comedy lines and shows what one woman did when her husband didn't permit her any pocket mouey. That is the big point in advertising your picture, to both men and women for that matter. For the question has been the cause of a battle in many, many households. Go to this angle strong and accentuate the comedy element in it and you'll have them coming.

THE STORY

Winnie and Elmer Davis, married three weeks, are not perfectly happy. Two things mar the life of the twain. One is that Elmer will give his wife no spending money, insisting that she shall charge everything she buys, and the other is that Elmer is hard pressed in business by Howard Weston, one of Winnie's disgruntled suitors. As Elmer's birthday approaches Winnie decides to earn some money for a gift for him. She dresses up as a chauffeurette and turns her car into a taxicab. And in this costume she has little trouble in getting all the passengers she needs. Among them are Colonel Hibbard, a gallant and elderly clubman, Archie Gunn, sentimentalist, Hercules Strong, a flat-chested dude, and "Corkscrew" McGann, a good-hearted burglar. To each of these gentlemen Winnie confides her purpose in operating the taxi, asking them whether a man would prefer a smoking jacket or a dressing gown.

And each of the hard hit gentlemen decides that he will get the present and present it to Winnie. So, on the same day, they all arrive at the house by divers ways with smoking jackets. And Elmer (we forgot to say that he was rather jealous) returns home, broke through Weston's manouverings in the market, to find his home populated with sundry men.

There ensues a mix-up in which the cook and the policemen are prominent as well as the aforementioned gentlemen and the Davis family. And when it's all straightened out Elmer has his smoking jackets and his money besides, for Weston has been prevailed upon to be decent. And with an account of her own in the bank Winnie turns the tables on Elmer and proudly remarks, "Charge it to Me."

"THE BLINDING TRAIL"—UNIVERSAL

Story of the Lumber Camps, with Monroe Salisbury Featured

THERE is no denying the strength of this feature. That it presents a story of somewhat sombre character will in no way detract from its entertainment value unless the spectator insist that his pictures be offered up with counter-plots of honied sweetness, no matter how out-of-place such plots might be. But here the story of the love of a lumber-camp boss for a social butterfly, their marriage, her desertion when she believes his affliction of blindness to be permanent and his subsequent happiness with a girl who offers him true love, comes as a tale of fine strength, depicting faithfully the emotions of its people.

Monroe Salisbury's creates a romantic and ap-pealing lumber-camp boss, while Claire Anderson as the butterfly and Helen Jerome Eddy as the serious girl are specially well cast and play effectively.

The picture is laid against fine outdoor backgrounds, worthy indeed to hold the scenes of such a primitive and strong drama.—Length, 5 reels.

Jim McKenzie	MONROE SALISBURY
Helen Halverson	Claire Anderson
Adele Grey	Helen Jerome Eddy
Jean Durbrey	Arthur Maude
Bill Cairnes	Johnnie Cooke
Halverson	Alfred Allen

THE STORY

Jim McKenzie, boss of the lumber camp owned by Halverson, is a big, rugged fellow, a typical outdoor man. Halverson visits the camp with his daughter, Helen, and her cousin, Adele. Both the girls are attracted to Jim, Helen because he is the idol of all her superficial dreams, Adele because she senses something deeper in the man. Jim is injured when rescuing Helen from danger but a blow sustained on the head renders him blind. Helen knows that he will recover and sends Adele to practically ask him to marry her (Helen). Jim proposes then and is accepted. They are married and a year passes and the union is blessed with a child.

But Jim's blindness returns and Helen's love for him goes. Adele grieves for Jim but can do nothing. Helen is attracted by DuBrey, the assistant boss of the camp, and they plan to elope together. But Jim learns of it and although he permits his wife to depart he savagely attacks DuBrey. A desperate fight ensues in which Helen, her love for Jim reawakened, attempts to defend him. But a stray shot finds its mark in her body and she lies dead on the ground.

Jim finally wins the fight; when it is over DuBrey lies dead beside the faithless woman. But a miracle has been wrought. During the fighting one of the severe blows received by Jim has restored his sight. And when, sometime later, Adele comes to Jim he knows that at last he has found his true love.

PRESS NOTICE

Monroe Salisbury, the famous star of Universal pictures will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when his latest production entitled "The Blinding Trail" is shown for the first time in this city. This is a picture of the northern lumber-camps and is said to be one of the strongest that Mr. Salisbury has appeared in. His role is that of Jim McKenzie, a big lumber boss who is loved by two women; one a shallow, superficial creature who admires only his bigness, the other a serious-minded girl who sees the bigness of the man's soul, not only the size of his frame.

But as luck would have it Jim is attracted by the superficial girl and they are married. Later, however, Jim's old affliction returns and after a year's happiness with his wife he finds himself blind once again. And then the flippant wife loses her love for her husband and enters upon a flirtation with another one of the lumber men. How Jim fights for his right, how his sight is restored as if through a miracle and how finally he finds real love and peace with the other girl, form a picture replete with startling incident and thrilling crisis.

Mr. Salisbury imparts a great deal of strength and force to the role of McKenzie. He is always impressive, no matter what the manner of his role and "The Blinding Trail" offers him what is probably the greatest role in his career before the camera. He receives excellent support from such well known players as Claire Anderson, Helen Jerome Eddy, Alfred Allen and Arthur Maude.

CATCH LINES

A story of two women and one woman—one of the most absorbing versions of the eternal triangle you ever saw unfold on the screen.

Love is Blind but Helen couldn't understand the truth of that.

When her husband became helpless through the loss of his sight, Helen lost her love for him. Was this, then, true love? See "The Blinding Trail."

Monroe Salisbury in another great character role—as Jim McKenzie in "The Blinding Trail" he creates what is probably the most powerful and appealing character in his career.

PROGRAM READER

Monroe Salisbury, known for his many fine characterizations in Universal pictures will shortly be seen on the screen of this feature in his latest production entitled "The Blinding Trail." This is a story with a lumber-camp setting and has as its principal character Jim McKenzie, the boss of the camp and two young women, Helen Halverson, a superficial society girl and her cousin, Adele Grey, a serious-minded little person. How the lives of these three are interlocked in the drama of "The Blinding Trail" is too powerful and long a story to relate here. Suffice it however that the various incidents are dramatic to the extreme and the many crisis of the film are thrilling to a degree. Mr. Salisbury appears to excellent advantage in the stellar role while Claire Anderson, Helen Jerome Eddy, Alfred Allen and Arthur Maude are prominent in his support.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a drama of the primitive and as such should be advertised in bold, forceful language. In both pictures and arguments strive to bring out the strength of the picture, hammer home the fact that the story is of a primitive character, try to make the readers FEEL this when they read the copy. A picture of a fight with some appropriate catch line beneath will serve to bring this out. For backgrounds to your ads you might use sketches of tall forrests, thus to throw your ad in an appropriate atmosphere.

Play up Monroe Salisbury for he is without doubt one of the finest actors on the screen today and this sort of a part fits him particularly well. Helen Jerome Eddy is another member of the cast who is deserving of honorable mention while the work of Claire Anderson has been featured and favorably commented upon in the past.

of nations and kingdoms, she has more to say than men yet she seldom speaks that you can hear her. By many men and women she is scorned, by many men she is admired and sought after constantly. This day she is among you as you are, the next day she is gone from you and you turn your back on her, whereas before you called her your friend. She has been the mystery woman of all the ages, and she will be the mystery woman of all the ages to come. She is the Eternal Magdalene.

"The Eternal Magdalene," the Goldwyn picture which comes to this theatre shortly, is one of the most impressive pictures released. It deals with the Eternal Magdalene in modern form and shows the manner in which a leading citizen of a modern town was deviated from his course of driving the magdalenes from the city, to a more humane and worthy plan of improving conditions for them and insuring that girls of another generation should be guarded against following their footsteps. It is enacted by a splendid cast headed by Charles Dalton, Margaret Marsh and Maxine Elliott and was produced under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, one of the noted stage producers of the day.

As the picture is framed in the California Redwoods you have a pictorial angle to display. Carry out the atmosphere of the story in lobby decorations. Your artist can paint some fine woodlands, but advise him to use powerful sweeps. The story and the giant Redwoods demand big colors.

"THE RESCUING ANGEL"—PARAMOUNT

High-Spirited Comedy-Drama Based on a Domestic Quarrel

"THE RESCUING ANGEL" is another illustration of that accepted theory that what was neither fish, flesh nor fowl upon the stage may become good red herring upon the screen. As a play it lacked vitality and spontaneous humor despite the author's spark of originality and freshness of humor, but made into a motion picture it sparkles quite radiantly. Director Edwards has substituted a wealth of detail which comes to the surface in the shape of humorous incidents carried forward by fast-moving action.

The idea presents a series of complications that involve a newly-married couple and it stretches through the five reels with plenty to spare, reinforced, of course, by an artistic background. Shirley Mason assumes the character of the title role and gives evidence that she knows a thing or two about comedy expressions. Others who play their parts capably are James Neill, Edythe Chapman and Forrest Stanley. The picture was reviewed at length on page 2703 of last week's issue.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 6.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Rescuing Angel," a breezy comedy-drama, featuring Shirley Mason, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is from the sparkling pen of Clare Kummer, one of the most prominent playwrights in the business and affords the star a splendid chance to display her abilities as a comedienne. As Angela Deming, the daughter of an impoverished family, she enters upon a matrimonial career that involves her in all sorts of difficulties. How to rescue her father from financial troubles is the perplexing idea that enters her mind. Shall she marry a wealthy admirer and solve the problem? Just so! But the ceremony is hardly over before the husband discovers that his wife's motive has been a mercenary one from the start.

A stormy scene occurs and Angela is considerably crestfallen to discover that her spouse has condemned her with some pointed truths. This situation naturally develops a deal of embarrassment for the bridal couple as well as for Angela's friends and relatives. You see she has married without their knowledge. At this point the picture unfolds a plenitude of high-spirited action that is skilfully handled by the author and the scenes offer the players good opportunities to bring out their fun-making powers. The story, while mostly humorous, has its dramatic moments, and so carries a note of contrast.

THE STORY

Angela Deming does not look at marriage very seriously until she learns that her father has become financially embarrassed. To save him from bankruptcy the girl offers to make a sacrifice and marry Joseph Whitely, a wealthy admirer, since her youthful lover, William Hanley, does not measure up to the financial standards of her choice. But Angela is hardly settled in her new home before the discarded suitor, out of jealousy and not knowing of the marriage, makes it plain to Whitely that the girl wants to marry him for his wealth.

This unpleasant information results in a violent quarrel, the outcome of which is that the now unhappy bride leaves her new home for the old one of her parents. Angela wil not stand to be denounced as a "money-grabber"! The next we see of the angry husband he has followed his wife to the Demings and takes some spite out on them, although he is surprised to learn that they had not heard of their daughter's marriage.

The two young people, now separated—well, for a number of hours, finally realize that they love one another and each is anxious for the other's safety. Joe was last seen speeding in his car and might be killed! Angela—why she may have committed suicide! Finally the Demings, Hanley, Angela and Slade, another admirer, go to Whitely's apartment to wait for him. And when he appears unhurt everything is forgiven. As Angela inherits a tidy sum from a rich uncle there is no reason in the future to quarrel about money. Love is established on a good foundation.

PROGRAM READER

"The Rescuing Angel," the latest picture to feature Shirley Mason, will be seen at this theatre shortly. Written by Clare Kummer, one of the most brilliant playwrights of contemporary drama, it presents a thoroughly amusing tale of a marital mix-up. A young girl marries a wealthy admirer in order to save her father from bankruptcy, but her captivating mannerisms are expressed so eloquently through a piquant personality that the thought never occurs that she may be actuated by any gross ambition. Of course her actions are conducted clandestinely, so that her relatives and many suitors are not apprised of her marriage until hours—many hours—after the ceremony. A quarrel separates the happy couple due to an expose of the bride's motive for marrying and things are not patched up until the young people realize that the passionate call of love is stronger than the material call of money.

The predicament of the bridal couple, their efforts to straighten out the domestic tangle, are highly productive of laughs, and there is also a vein of substantial drama which balances the picture and gives it some weight. The management has no hesitancy in declaring it one of the brightest things that has come to its notice in many a day. Miss Mason is supported by a competent cast, which includes Forrest Stanley, Arthur Carewe, John Steppling, James Neill and Edythe Chapman. The picture was adapted by Edith Kennedy and produced by Walter Edwards.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another of Clare Kummer's comedy-dramas adapted to the screen and if you cleaned up on her "Good Gracious Annabelle" there is no reason why you cannot duplicate with "The Rescuing Angel." There is advertising value to be found in the author's name since she has given the stage some of the best plays it has had in recent years. Billie Burke, William Gillette and Walter Hampden have been mighty successful in them, and surely your audience are acquainted with their names. Why not bring out what the author stands for in the spoken drama? If she can furnish subjects for the above-mentioned stars, surely they can come in handy for screen interpretation.

It is a good comedy idea that is contained here, this one of a girl marrying for money to save her father from bankruptcy and being denounced by her husband as a mercenary creature. It leads up to all sorts of complications and therefore lends itself well to bright, snappy ad. copy both in the way of pictures and word spreads. Glance over the first catch line and see if it won't fit nicely in your advertising scheme. It arouses the curiosity and still it doesn't give away the story.

The best suggestion, however, it to emphasize the picture as an adaptation of the stage play that starred Billie Burke. Everyone knows the character of her pieces—that they are written for amusement purposes only. So advertise it as a happy laugh producer.

CATCH LINES

"I never want to see you again"—with these haughty words the little bride stamped out of the room. Her husband had told her she was mercenary in marrying him for his money. Such a state of affairs—a quarrel on the honeymoon! Does Love fly back in the window? The answer lies in "The Rescuing Angel."

Another one of Clare Kummer's charming comedy-dramas based on a domestic quarrel. See Shirley Mason's study of the bride and laugh your worries away.

"She did marry him for his money, eh! He could be so mean as to accuse her of that, could he? Well, she could be mean too and leave him—so there!"

She must have been an angel to rescue her father from financial straits. But such a plan stirred up a pretty mess in her happy married life. To tide her daddy over she became mercenary and married for money. And her husband found it out. Does Love rescue the bridal pair? See "The Rescuing Angel" and enjoy a treat.

Did you, Mr. Spectator, ever accuse your wife of being mercenary? Did you leave him, Miss Fan, at these burning words? Can love ever sparkle as brightly again when the quarrel is forgotten? "The Rescuing Angel" will show lovers that a quarrel doesn't pay. It's a gloom dispeller.

"THE PRICE OF INNOCENCE"—BUFFALO M. P. CORP.

Story of a Woman's Supreme Sacrifice; Artificial, but Picturesque

BACK to the tried and true subject of a woman's sacrifice of honor, with its attendant sobs and sighs and scathing accusations, has the author gone to collect material for "The Price of Innocence." The hinges of the ancient formula creak as loudly as ever, so that the appealing voice of the "lost sheep" is not always heard. Every device that the old melodramatic school of writers used in emphasizing the moral value is there in its accustomed place, even to the extent of the heroine's public denunciation at the hands of her supposed friends, who had held her up as a sinner, though they themselves could not practice the art of throwing stones.

So it is the old, old story of a woman who offers up her honor that others may find rest and happiness. It becomes extremely artificial at times and strains credulity, and while the theme is powerful in a way and points a moral lesson, the characterizations are too far-fetched and occupy too much space. The action takes some time in getting started, due to planting the numerous personages, all of whom seem to have as big a place in the story as the leading figure.

Toned down, with less concentration upon the characters and more upon the plot, and with close-ups, crude comedy snatches, and irrelevant details largely eliminated, the subject would look decidedly better. It is pictorially effective and capably played by Stella K. Talbot, who is featured, Jack Johnson, Anders Randolph and others.—Length, 5 reels.—Released through First National Exchanges.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mary Aldron	Stella K. Talbot
George Greyson	Anders Randolph
Parson John	John Smiley
Sam Durkin, Jr.	Jack Johnson
Roger Carleton	Stanley Walpole
Irma	Margaret Campbell

Edward Greyson	Howard Hall

THE STORY

Goose Island, a "squatter" settlement off the coast of Maine, is owned by Edward Greyson, and he is so interested in the islanders that he deeds his property to them. Before the transfer can be recorded he is accidently killed. His son, George, now in possession of the estate, attempts to dispossess the inhabitants inasmuch as he has no knowledge of the deed. When the Greyson party come to take action they find the "squatters" determined to hold the island at all costs. Mary Aldron, the belle of the settlement, terrorized by the actions of her men, pleads with Greyson to withdraw and leave her people in possession of their homes. He consents under the stipulation that the girl remains as his guest on the mainland for ten days.

So Mary sacrifices her honor that the "squatters" may find rest and happiness, although she is unprepared to meet the storm of abuse that is hurled at her when she returns home. Cast out by her ungrateful friends the girl seeks refuge with Greyson and succeeds in winning his love and respect. Her personality has effected him so strongly that he gives up his old associates. A slight misunderstandig occurs and Mary returns again to the island where she falls into the clutches of two jealous admirers. She is about to be branded for her sin when Greyson rushes in and saves her. Thus the price she paid is given back to her in the shape of love.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Price of Innocence." the feature which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week introduces a new star and a new producing company to picture followers. Stella K. Talbot is the star and the company that sponsors her is the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation. From all appearances the debut of these two new forces into the business of picture production is a signal for many more good features to follow "The Price of Innocence." This particular picture has been produced in good taste, presents a story the force of which reaches a climax of the strongest sort, and it is well acted both by the new star and the various members of her supporting cast.

In general aspect "The Price of Innocence" is kin to "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East," as it deals with plain, honest, God-fearing folk, virtuous to a degree but in the rigidity of their customs, hypocritical and foolish. The scene of action is Goose Island, a little place peopled altogether by simple fisher folk. Mary Aldron grows fearsome when the owner of the island attempts to dispossess them and warns him to cease his persecutions. He consents to do so providing Mary will come and visit him at his home on the mainland for the period of ten days. To save her people she consents to do so and when she returns to them she is branded as a Magdalene.

Te story takes several original and, at the same time, powerful turns after this and finally reaches a happy conclusion. Miss Talbot is supported by such well known players of the screen as Anders Randolph, John Smiley, and Jack Johnson.

PROGRAM READER

Followers of the stage will easly recall those two classics of the Americn boards, "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East." The picture scheduled for exhibition at this theatre on ——— entitled "The Price of Innocence" is somewhat akin to these "oldtimers," inasmuch as it is peopled with folk of the same character; simple; ultra-religious people, people who mean well but who are cruel in the methods they adopt to carry out their ideals. Here the locale is "Goose Island," on which lives a small community of fisherfolk. When Mary Aldron, one of their number, sees that it is the plan of the owner to turn them out of their homes she goes to him to plead for their sakes. The owner says that he will let them stay if Mary will but visit him for ten days. The story has a number of dramatic highlights following this proposition of the greedy owner and the outcome is said to be of unusual strength. "The Price of Innocence" was produced by the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, and features a new screen star, Stella K. Talbot.

CATCH LINES

Hypocritical and cruel in their religious fanaticism were these people of "Goose Island." Their forefathers came to America to escape the very attitude they assumed. And they drive out one who strove to help them—they would have branded her with a cross had not—see "The Price of Innocence."

Because of a trivial oversight in the execution of a will, a girl's honor suffered—see "The Price of Innocence."

Though she had sold herself to this man to save her people, they scorned her and drove her forth when she returned to her home—see "The Price of Innocence."

Featuring a new film star, Stella K. Talbot.

A picture as moving as those great plays, "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East."

SUGGESTIONS

Unless you are a stickler for subtlety the best thing to do in presenting this picture to your public is to come right out with the main feature of the story, that feature which takes up the case of the heroine when she sells herself to a landholder to save her loved ones their homes. This will be forceful and to the point and it will express the content and character of the picture to a nicety. And this is a situation that can well be dressed up with dramatic wording.

The distributors suggest that you liken the picture to "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East," two of the most successful of the older plays. As it deals with the same people this might be a good idea.

You could work up interest in the picture by running pictures of the star in the paper two or three days in advance of the showing. Leave them without a name. You might put "Who Is She?" in big type below it. Then when you come through with your regular announcement you can give the full name and say that she is the new star of "The Price of Innocence." You'd work up some interest in this way. And people always like to see new blood in the pictures.

SELLING POINTS FOR PICTURES

NO matter what the picture is there is usually at least one selling point in it; some predominant feature that interesting advertisements can be written

This selling point may assert itself in the form of a star, it may appear as a physical thrill or as a situation, either serious or humorous.

Properly dressed in carefully prepared copy, this point will take on an interest that will instantly attract the reader.

Oftentimes the exhibitor himself can not find the opportunity to review his show in advance and pick out this advertising feature.

But he can find these selling poin in the pages of the Complete Plan Book.

The outstanding feature of each picture is stressed throughout each Plan Book page. Catch Lines and Suggestions are written round it AFTER THE FILM HAS BEEN REVIEWED BY ONE OF OUR STAFF.

That is why the pages of the Complete Plan Book are invaluable to the busy exhibitor.

They are a shortcut to intelligent advertising.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Fox Studio Doings

Under the direction of Arthur Rosson the Tom Mix company spent the week of April 6 in San Francisco making exterior scenes in the production of "The Romance of Cow Hollow."

The company made the trip to the northern city by auto. En route the truck containing the properties broke a steering knuckle and overturned. No one was hurt, however, and very little damage was done to either the car or its contents. The machine was hurriedly repaired and the trip resumed.

After eighteen months in New York Raoul A. Walsh has returned to the Los Angeles studios of the William Fox Corporation, where he is to make a production entitled "Millions of Money," with Miriam Cooper in the stellar role. En route to the coast the party, including Walsh, Miss Cooper, Jim Marcus and Johnnie Reis stopped off at Hot Springs, Ark., to make exterior scenes about the race course there.

Mr. Walsh is to remain in the West to make two pictures, after which he is scheduled to take a company to Europe where he is to make a number of features in England and France for Fox release.

Juanita Hansen has joined the Fox forces as leading woman opposite Tom Mix in the production of "The Romance of Cow Hollow."

Gladys Brockwell is at work under the direction of E. J. Le Saint in the title role of a five-reel production entitled "Gypsy."

Scotty Dunlap is making a comedy entitled "Words and Music by ——" with Al Ray and Elinor Fair in the leading roles.

About Metro Players

Upon the completion of "His Father's Wife," which is now in course of production, May Allison is to be cast for the leading role in a screen version of Will Irwin's recent Saturday Evening Post story, "Free." The story treats of the adventures of a tired stenographer with a typical "parlor Bolshevik" and offers good material for a comedy drama for the silver screen. The story is being scenarioized by George D. Baker, who adapted both "Peggy Does Her Darnedest" and "Orchestra D-2" for Miss Allison.

Under the direction of George D. Baker, Bert Lytell has completed the production of "The Lion's Den," and is getting ready to begin work in the title role of William Dudley Pelley's Saturday Evening Post story, "One-Thing-at-a-Time-O'Day." The new story is being put into scenario form by Baker and will be produced under the direction of John Ince.

Dorothy Phillips, in "Destiny," Jewel Production

"One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day" will be remembered by Post readers as one of the Dudley series of circus stories which appeared in that magazine from time to time over a period of several months.

Fred Warren has been named as Ince's assistant for this production.

Jack Mulhall has signed a contract with Metro to appear in forthcoming productions made at that studio. His first work will be a leading role with Emmy Wehlen in the production of "Family Trees," work on which was started April 11. The story is a comedy drama and is being staged under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Vitagraph News Bits

The Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway company is at work making interior scenes in the production of the first five episodes of their serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain." By making all interiors for a number of episodes so they will be free to turn their attention to the making of exteriors later, the company hopes to eliminate much lost time waiting for the construction of sets and thus make record time on the production.

In the production of the thirteenth and fourteenth episodes of his current serial, "The Man of Might," the William Duncan company worked in an Aztec set erected in a canyon near Sunland, Cal., about thirty miles back among the foothills from the Vitagraph studios. More than one hundred extra players were used in these episodes.

Under the direction of David Smith, the Bessie Love Company is at work in the Redwood forests in the mountains back of Fresno, near Hume, Cal., where they are making use of the six mile timber flume that forms a part of the equipment of the Hume Lumber Company in the production of exterior scenes for the forthcoming release, "The Little Boss."

The first exterior scenes for this production were made in the Sequoia forests near Eureka, Cal. Following the production of these, the company returned to the studio where they remained but a few days before travelling on to Hume to complete the exteriors.

The Earle Williams company has been at work for the past several days in the open country near San Bernardino, Cal., making scenes for use in a forthcoming release, being produced under the direction of James Young.

Larry Semon was the center of attraction on one of the down town streets of Los Angeles several hours a day for three days this week, while he performed a series of hair-raising stunts along the cornices of one of the office buildings for use in a forthcoming release.

The rumor that Joe Rock was no longer to appear with his former partner, Earl Montgomery, in the production of Big V comedies has been officially denied by Vitagraph officials.

The production on which they are working at present offered no place for both comedians, and Rock was made co-director pro tem with Gilbert Pratt, with Blanche Payson playing opposite Montgomery. Upon the completion of the present subject, the old partnership is to be resumed.

Universal Newsettes

Under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, Priscilla Dean has completed her crook picture, "The Chatterbox." The story, written for the Universal by Bayard Vellier, the playwright who was made famous by his "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," was arranged for screen presentation by Waldemar Young. Francis McDonald appears in the leading masculine role opposite Miss Dean with a supporting cast including George McDaniels, Gertrude Astor, Walt Whitman, Claire Greenwood, Joseph Swickard and H. Milton Ross.

Paul Powell is half through with his production of the Mary MacLaren picture, "The Weaker Vessel." Thurston Hall appears in this production as Miss MacLaren's leading man.

Dorothy Phillips is still working in her dual role picture, "The Right to Happiness," under the direction of Allan Holubar.

The Monroe Salisbury picture, "The Open Road," is practically finished. "The Open Road" is a Western subject produced under the direction of Rupert Julian.

Eric Von Stroheim has taken his company to Idylwild, half-way up Mount San Jacinto, where they are to make Alpine scenes for the production of the six-reel feature, "The Pinnacle."

While waiting for the construction of sets for "A Man of Peace," Harry Carey's next feature, Jack Ford is using the company to make a two-reel Western entitled, "The Return of Striped Shirt Ransome."

Jacques Jaccard is making a two-reel picture entitled "Cyclone Smith Wins the Day," with Eddie Polo in the stellar role.

Under the direction of George Holt, Pete Morrison is at work in the leading role of "Hate Everlasting," a two-reel subject.

"And the Elephant Still Pursued Her," the second of the two-reel animal comedies being produced by William S. Campbell, has been finished and is being titled.

The James J. Corbett company has reached the twelfth episode of the serial, "The Midnight Man." James W. Horne is in charge of production.

J. P. McGowan is rapidly nearing the conclusion of the Marie Walcamp serial, "The Red Glove."

Dwight Cleveland, former member of the Vitagraph scenario staff, has been put in charge of the reading department at Universal City under Eugene Mullin, scenario editor.

At the Ince Plant

Dorothy Dalton and her company left Los Angeles April 13 for New York where they are to make what is predicted to be the most elaborate production in which she has been seen since "The Flame of the Yukon." No title has as yet been given the picture, but it is to be a tale of the Apaches and the scene of the action alternates between New York and Paris, which accounts for the fact that New York has been chosen for the staging of the production.

The story is the product of a hitherto unknown writer, Adele Duffington, who prior to this, her first effort at scenario writing, has been employed in the box office of a Los Angeles theatre. Since the acceptance of this story, however, she has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince for his scenario staff.

The story has been adapted to screen use and put into continuity by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith.

Joseph De Grasse, producer of "Hell Morgan's Girl" and "The Wildcat of Paris," will direct production with Bert Siebel as his assistant and John Stumar at the camera.

The entire cast has not yet been chosen, but it is expected that several other players from the Ince plant will follow Miss Dalton to New York to work in the production.

Work has commenced on the construction of a new stage at the Ince plant in Culver City to be used exclusively for the making of night scenes. To this end it has been equipped with an elaborate lighting system. The new stage will be of the same size as the two already in use and will give the plant more covered stage space than any of the other studios in this country.

Here and There

With the coming of Marguerite Clark and Houdini, activities at the Famous Players-Lasky studios will be materially increased. Miss Clark is expected on April 17, and at the studio it is reported she will probably first play in a screen version of the Clyde Fitch play, "Girls." This, it is stated, is not definitely decided upon, nor is it known who will be members of her supporting cast or her director. This will be Miss Clark's second trip to the coast, she having played in one subject made at the Lasky studio in 1915.

A big mystery story has been prepared for Houdini, which will be released as an Artcraft Special. Houdini arrives on April 21, but it is expected it will be impossible for him to begin work on the new subject which will be made by Irvin Willat as director, until about May 1.

The Charlie Chaplin company completed the production of its latest release, "Sunnyside," April 15. As in the previous Chaplin productions, Edna Purviance appears in the leading feminine role opposite the star with a supporting cast including Albert Austin, Henry Bergman, Tom Wilson, Loyal Underwood, Tom Wood, Park Jones, and others equally well known for their work with this company.

For a number of years the Green Room Magazine, published in Sydney, Australia, has given a huge Christmas fruit cake to the actor who has proved most popular in Australasia. This year the lot fell to Charlie Chaplin. The cake was received at the studio April 15, the day before Chaplin's birthday. The following day he took it to the Orphans' Home in Hollywood, and presented it to the children of that institution.

True to their slogan of "Put the boys back to work," the Christie Company has re-engaged twelve former members of their force who abandoned the grease paint and crepe hair to don the olive drab of Uncle Sam. Those already taken back include Bobby Vernon, Jay Belasco, Jimmie Harrison, Harry Ham, Roscoe Karns, Al Haynes, Cuthbert Casey, actors; Harry Edwards, Harold Beaudine, Art Muns assistant directors; Dallas McClich, technical man; Joe McPherson, auditor; W. J. Lockett, electrician; W. B. Little, carpenter; Henry Hathaway, property man; Bill Perry assistant cameraman; Pat Dowling, manager exhibitors' service department; and Clarence Bondie, driver. The list comprises one-third of the entire studio staff.

Frank Lloyd has been signed up by the Goldwyn Film Corporation to take charge of a new producing company, which is to start work soon at the Goldwyn plant in Culver City. No details as to the star to be given him or the nature of his first new release have thus far been settled.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"As a Man Thinks"—Raver-Hodkinson

IT is not very often that a picture is thrown across one's path that tempts him to use ponderous praising superlatives. Such a thing happens only now and then. "As a Man Thinks" offers such a temptation, and were it not for the fact that such superlatives have lost their meaning, so far as you are concerned, their use would be perfectly justified in this instance.

The fact that the picture has been based on a stage play is, as experience has shown, of little consequence; but the fact that Mr. Augustus Thomas's successful stage play inherently possesses a wealth of picture values, values that are transferable to the screen, is of great consequence; hence the highly succssful results.

As a picture, "As a Man Thinks" may be safely classed among the distinctive offerings of the year. Not only highly suspensive is it; it also appeals to the most deeply buried emotions,—to those of the pleasurable sort. It interests, it thrills, and it also makes the spectator envelope the characters with his love, compassion, and sympathy, causing a tear or two to gush forth now and then.

If the industry will still persist in hitching its wagons to the stars, then it may hitch one to Miss Leah Baird; she is just as much entitled to such a title, if real worth is its prime requisite, as anybody that possesses such an appellation. Her acting is perfectly natural, while her ability to express emotion, of first rate. The direction is also flawless.

The producers will no doubt furnish you with advertising material containing catch lines of the type "Men believe their children are their own. The mother onlv knows," etc. To use such catch lines indiscriminately, the effect produced might be opposite to that desired. While such lines, for down town houses in large cities, might prove just the thing to use, they might prove harmful to neighborhood as well as small town theatres, as they might convey the idea that the picture is of the suggestive sort. There is nothing in the picture that would cause even the most discriminating patron to take an exception at; so, in using such catch lines, you should be guided by the kind of patronage you cater to. To such of you as cater to particular patronages, an appeal along the lines of "The unbounded love a father feels for his litle son makes him long for a reconcillation with his wife, from whom he had been estranged through a misunderstanding," or something similar to it, would prove much more appropriate. Released April 20. Lengths, 5 reels.

"The Love Call"—National—Robertson-Cole

BECAUSE of the human appeal that the very structure of the story is charged with, "The Love Call" will satisfy a large number of picture goers, especially those who are contented so long as their deeper emotions are stirred, irrespective of the logic of the story; discriminating patrons, however, especially the more cultured ones, will grumble some, owing to the complete lack of logic in great many of the situations. For instance, to think that a cowboy could get hold of a President of a University by the collar and handle him roughly, seems entirely improbable. Had the picture been produced as burlesque, of course no one could take an exception to such an incident. Again, while the impression the picture conveys is that the heroine is illiterate, yet her utterances in the subtitles are given the best of grammatical construction—better than that of a college graduate.

Although the story appeal to the heart and also offers some thrills, it is hardly fitted for this star; it is a little too strong for women and children, among which Miss Billy Rhodes seems to have recruited her following. Released through Exhibitors' Mutual. Length, 5 reels.

"Charge It to Me"—American

THIS is a delightfully entertaining farce-comedy, of the excellence which marked several of this kind, released by American for the past several months. The situations in it are, as it should be, highly complicated, eventually worked out with intelligence and with an eye to amuse.

Most of the fun comes from the situation where her real husband finds the heroine with three extra husbands and an extra father on hand. They were all her admirers who came to lay presents at her feet, including their hearts, having been attracted by her beauty while carried as passengers on her automobile, which she, unknown to her husband, had turned into a taxi, with herself as a chauffeurette.

The picture is suitable for any theatre. Released through Pathe May 4. Length, 5 reels.

"The Delicious Little Devil"—Universal Special

TO those of you who own down town houses in large cities and cater mostly to transient, particularly male, trade, this is just the picture to book and coin money on; those of you, however, whose theatres are located in neighborhoods, and whose patronage consists of families, especially of the religious element, it will undoubtedly prove for them a little too strong. Not that the picture is salacious, as it is not, but the sole purpose for which it has been produced seems to be the exhibition of Mae Murray's form of body. In fact, the problem appears to have been how few clothes she could put on and yet escape the wrath of the censor.

Miss Murray, while dancing the Peacock Dance, is dressed very scantily. After the dance, she is shown in chiffon, and as the lights are thrown on her from the opposite direction, the X-Ray gown effects are produced.

The story itself is not so bad; it will hold the attention. That it will entertain, seems to be simply a mere chance, as such an object appears to have been of secondary consideration. Released in May. Length, 6 reels.

"Eyes of the Soul"—Artcraft

MISS FERGUSON, in "Eyes of the Soul," has reached a much higher level than she has yet attained. Were you, the exhibitor, to be guided by the reading of the synopsis only, you would undoubtedly be deceived; you could not be impressed very much with it, because the plot is very simple—she is a chorus girl and has many wealthy admirers; one of them has succeeded in extracting a promise from her to marry him; but she meets a blind soldier who fought in the war; her heart first melts with pity and compassion for him, but that compassion eventually turns into love and she marries him—but its emotional appeal is so powerful that I doubt if you could find a dry eye among your patrons while playing it. It simply wrings the heart and brings out the tears, not the kind that leave a bitter taste, but the sort that bring happiness, creating within the spectator a more intense picture hunger.

This picture is of the kind that add class to your house; also of the sort that raise the picture industry to a higher level. Released April 20. Length, 5 reels.

"The Money Corral"—Artcraft

MR. HART has written and directed "The Money Corral" all by himself, and he has done such a good job of it that, were he never to produce a better picture in his life again, he (no less all those of you who hold the contract for his pictures) ought to be well satisfied; it is fully as good a picture as any ever contributed to the screen with Mr. Hart as the leading player. Besides it is different. The star-author has combined in it the Western and Eastern atmospheres. While in the East, he gets into a big scrap in a Chicago underworld, and later on, at the point of a gun he nails some bank robbers while robbing a bank safe. Of course, in the end, he wins the usual girl.

Suspense runs high, while the thrills are plentiful; and as the role the star has assigned to himself is of the sympathetic sort, no spectator should leave your theatre other than satisfied with the evening's entertainment. Released April 20. Length, 5 reels.

"The Little Comrade"—Paramount

WHILE none may rave over this picture, yet hardly anyone will leave your theatre dissatisfied; almost every one will feel the time was spent enjoyably. "The Little Comrade," same as all Miss Martin's contributions, is of the light, airy sort, the kind that make one grin with pleasure, leaving a pleasant taste behind. It is a delightful romance, and though it touches some on military life, such as existed in the camps during the war, it depicts not enough of it to make it appear as being a war play.

The story deals with farmerettes, and is more or less a satire on them. The heroine, a wealthy girl, determines to enlist as a farmerette. When she goes to the farm, she takes along her dog, and has silk overalls to wear. There she meets the hero, and they fall in love. The young hero enlists, but being unable to drive her from his mind, deserts and returns to her; she, however, makes him realize what his duty is. He turned to the camp and makes a good soldier. Released March 30. Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to February 3, 1919.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ALIAS MIKE MORAN (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID (MAR. 2) .... MAR. 29
"A real human character the centre of fine story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. Extra big business." "It drew fairly well."

AMAZING IMPOSTOR, THE (AMERICAN) MINTER (FEB. 2) FEB. 8
"Lots of ginger in this one. Star's features better."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average picture, average business."

AMAZING WIFE, THE (UNIVERSAL) MARY MACLAREN (APR. 7) .... (Six Parts) .... MAR. 29
"Here's one on which you can go the limit."—M. P. News.

AS THE SUN WENT DOWN (METRO) EDITH STOREY (FEB. 10) .... FEB. 22
"Edith Storey in screen version of Baker's play."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture just fair. Star does not draw in this house." "Has some great comedy throughout but in some places tends too much on serial order."

BARE FISTS (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY (MAY 4) .... APR. 26
(Six Parts)
"As satisfactory as all the Harry Carey pictures."—M. P. News.

BELLE OF NEW YORK, THE (SELECT) MARION DAVIES .. FEB. 10
Exhibitor Comment—"With all the advertising the stage success had of the same name, one would expect to break all records with this, but nothing smashed except faith in human nature. Why try to make a screen star out of Marion Davies? It can't be done. She's no better than when she started her first Select. Average to poor business." "A much over advertised picture. Did good business but did not universally satisfy. Going to be a tough job trying to put this star over. Guess we won't try it. Big business three days." "Pleased to average business and believe that this star will come out after all." "Fair picture. Not much as money getter." "Just fair. Might have been good without Marion, but she will never 'arrive.' Her name in front means 'good-night receipts.'"
Consensus—"Fair picture, good puller."

BETTER 'OLE, THE (WORLD) SPECIAL CAST (MAR. 17) .. MAR. 8
(Seven Parts)
"Novel and very entertaining; characterizations good."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture but seven reels too long for patrons. Disappointing to the gallery." "Decidedly different. Went over fine, especially with the better element. Well worth while playing. Good business against bad weather."
Consensus—"Pleasing picture, big puller."

BLACKIE'S REDEMPTION (METRO) BERT LYTELL (APR. 14) .... APR. 26
"Melodrama with power and pathos, and Bert Lytell."—M. P. News.

BLINDING TRAIL, THE (UNIVERSAL) MONROE SALISBURY (MAY 19) .... (Six Parts) .... APR. 26
"Predominant element is suspense; a trifle uncheery."—M. P. News.

BLIND MAN'S EYES (METRO) BERT LYTELL (MAR. 10) . MAR. 22
"Bert Lytell excellent in murder mystery tale."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent picture. Title misleading. Poor to average business."

BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL (SELECT SPECIAL) SPECIAL CAST (APR. 20) .... (Six Parts) .... APR. 19
"Picture as good as its title; square deal."—M. P. News.

BONDAGE OF BARBARA, THE (GOLDWYN) MAE MARSH (FEB. 2)
Exhibitor Comment—"Poor business." "Very poor picture. But Mae Marsh does her best under the circumstances. Average to big to average business." "Mae Marsh does not draw here. Fair production to average business." "Very good picture to big business." "Drew few and pleased few." "Disappointed and Miss Marsh no longer draws." "Good picture, but they do not want her here."

BOOTS (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH (FEB. 16) .... MAR. 15
"Star attractive and comedy dominates this picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture proved very satisfactory. Star very pleasing." "Splendid in pleasing power and Miss Gish is coming strong." "Didn't draw although a good picture. Dorothy Gish not popular here." "Average business seven days."

BRASS BUTTONS (AMERICAN) WM. RUSSELL (MAR. 30) MAR. 22
"A lot of snap and zest to this comedy drama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The Greatest Russell picture yet. Big business."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

BRAND, THE (GOLDWYN) REX BEACH CAST (MAR. 9) .. MAR. 8
(Seven Parts)
"A Rex Beach story of the far North that rings the bell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture but seven reels too long. Could have been put in six with as good if not better results. Big business two days." "We are stung on Rex Beach subjects. They don't go here at all." "Big business opening day then average four days and big business last two days." "Good, interesting picture. Good in any house. Don't advance prices. Big business three days." "Average business four days." "The title as well as type of picture is passe in this town. We have not done regular business on any Rex Beach picture since 'The Barrier' and 'Auction Block.'"
Consensus—"Good picture, big puller."

BREED OF MEN (ARTCRAFT) W. S. HART (FEB. 2) .... FEB. 15
"Star registers strongly in one that should please everybody."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. Big business. Hart will have to change his style of work. Has too many imitators. Drew a very big opening and sent them out pleased. An average Hart picture." "Bill put them in on this one and they liked it." "Average to poor business seven days."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture, strong puller."

BREEZY JIM (TRIANGLE) CRANE WILBUR (FEB. 23) .... FEB. 22
"Shows its age plainly. Hot stuff for hero worshippers."—M. P. News.

CALIBRE 38 (EDGAR LEWIS-SHERRY) MITCHELL LEWIS (APR. 13) .... (Six Parts) .... APR. 5
"Melodrama based on murder mystery; story well constructed."—M. P. News.

CAMBRIC MASK, THE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE (APR. 7) .... APR. 5
"Star in version of unusual Chambers story."—M. P. News.

CAPTAIN KIDD, JR. (ARTCRAFT) MARY PICKFORD (APR. 6)
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business seven days." "Picture below Pickford standard. Average business."

CAROLYN OF THE CORNERS (PATHE) BESSIE LOVE (MAR. 9) .... MAR. 1
"Strong story but a little loose. Human touches plentiful.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Poor business." "Good, but very light show. Bessie Love has no drawing power."

CHILD OF M'SIEU (TRIANGLE) BABY MARIE OSBORNE (FEB. 16) .... FEB. 22
"Film lacks heart interest, action and suspense."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big business."

COME AGAIN SMITH (HODKINSON) J. W. KERRIGAN (FEB. 10) .... FEB. 1
"Fits the star like proverbial glove; interest is plentiful."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A dandy comedy drama to big business." "Picture well liked. Star just average." "A nice clean program picture to average business."
Consensus—"Fine picture, good puller."

COMMON CLAY (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (MARCH 2) .... FEB. 8
"Audience will likely praise this Ward picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Generally good picture. Good box-office attraction. Big business seven days." "Big business first two days, then extra big three following days, then big and finishing extra big again on the seventh day."
Consensus—"Fine picture, strong puller."

COURAGEOUS COWARD, THE (EXHIBITORS MUTUAL) SESSUE HAYAKAWA (APR. 14) .... APR. 26
"Story of great interest; Japanese lovers united."—M. P. News.

COURAGE FOR TWO (WORLD) CARLYLE BLACKWELL (FEB. 17) .... FEB. 15
"Star with Miss Greeley offer fine comedy drama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big business two days."

CREAKING STAIRS (UNIVERSAL SPECIAL) MARY MAC LAREN (FEB. 10) ....
Exhibitor Comment—"Good story of suspense and thrills with no padding but everybody on the job every second. Big to average business."

CROOK OF DREAMS (WORLD) LOUISE HUFF (MAR. 3) ... MAR. 1
"Clever story with star in apealing role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good program picture. World is waking up at last and making better stuff. Average business."

CRY OF THE WEAK, THE (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (MAY 4) .... APR. 26
"Fannie Ward in an absorbing play of crime and punishment."—M. P. News.

Exhibitors' Own Box Office Reports

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

DAUGHTER OF MINE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY (MAR. 30)
Exhibitor Comment—" Ordinary feature. Nearly as bad as 'Day Dreams.' With the same star. They like Madge Kennedy here but NOT in the kind of stuff Goldwyn is handing out lately. Poor business."

ECHO OF YOUTH, THE (GRAPHIC) SPECIAL CAST (FEB. 16) ....MAR. 8
" Cast is good and picture is clean and compelling."—M. P. News

END OF THE GAME, THE (HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN (MAR. 23) ....MAR. 29
" Too much footage in this Western of '49 days."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" This was the worst of any of the late Kerrigan pictures. Average to poor business."

ETERNAL MAGDALENE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST (APR. 20)
Exhibitor Comment—" Opened to big business in spite of heavy rain early in afternoon People satisfied."

EXPERIMENTAL MARRIAGE (SELECT) CONSTANCE TALMADGE (MAR. 10) ....APR. 5

“Bessie Love in Irish play of simple charm.”—M. P. News.

“FLASHBACKS” ON EARLIER RELEASES

“Who Cares” (Select)—“Better than average. Constance as a star is winning more followers than any competitor, and in all cases they are consistent admirers. This picture called for heavier work and she carried it off with conviction. Story, photography, direction and sets all up to Select standard.”

“Cannibals of the South Seas” (Exhibitors’ Mutual)—“A very interesting and instructive picture to average business.”

“The One Woman” (Select)—“A fine picture. Will please most audiences. Big to average business.”

“Heart of Wetona” (Select)—“Inconsistent in a few places, but otherwise very good. Big business.”

“Why I Would Not Marry” (Fox)—“Personally I did not care for this. Overrated as a special. Program price would be plenty.”

“Heart of Humanity” (Jewel)—“A great production and well liked, but production all through as far as drawing card here. Average business.”

“Creaking Stairs” (Universal)—“Fine picture. Average business.”

“The Better Half” (Select)—“Just another ‘movie.’ Brady very good but it’s a mechanical plot.”

“Raffles” (State Rights)—“One week to good business.”

“Mickey” (State Rights)—“Ten days to big business. Pulled this picture off on account of not being given protection. This would have stood up for five or six weeks, but when the smaller neighborhood houses started to advertise in all sections of the city four or five weeks before they were to run it I decided to take it off.”

“A Society Sensation” (Universal)—“Fair program feature to average business.”

“The Conqueror” (Fox)—“Excellent film to big business.”

“Romance of Happy Valley” (Artcraft)—“Average business.”

JOHNSON and TAYLOR are competitors. Both show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. Each tries hard to establish his house as the best in town.

JOHNSON advertises—

"I show the best pictures"

TAYLOR advertises—

"I show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, the kind you see advertised in The Saturday Evening Post"

And JOHNSON wonders why TAYLOR'S theatre is generally accepted as the better place to go.

"COME OUT OF THE KITCHEN"

A Paramount Picture

As a play it ran two years in New York and long engagements in other cities.

As a story, it has the popular appeal that makes for sure success.

As a picture, it has the enormous added attraction of Marguerite Clark, in her best part since "Miss George Washington."

As a matter of fact, the combination is a veritable clean-up and worthy of an extended run.

OUT of a school book he found her. "Emily, the prettiest girl in school," someone had written in the geography that came in a box of books to the boys of the Alamo ranch. Half in jest he wrote to her and put in a picture of his handsome pal. Deadly in earnest she responded, for her gray haired guardian had asked her to be his wife.

So she came to the western land to marry her cowboy letter-writer and the mix-up in the photograph almost cost her her life.

Lila Lee in a real western with Monte Blue as the hero make a picture story with a laugh for every thrill.

The sort of a story that everyone likes. It spells Romance with a capital R.

The advertising accessories, pictured on the next pages give a chance for unusually attractive exploitation.

Folks'll like "Rustling a Bride". It's worth your playing up strong.

She First Saw Her Fiance With A Rope Around His Neck——

A congenial crowd was about to send him on a little party where there would be flowers—flowers that he wouldn't smell.

Had she taken him at his real face value she'd have let him swing.

But she took him at the value of the picture he sent her and she stepped in just in time.

Would you have done it if you had been Emily? After you had been fooled as she was? We wonder! Come to see and answer, "Would you?"

Use pictures of the star. She's young and pretty and appealing. Here are posters that carry that personality and change it into cash for you.

Be sure to let them know it's a real story with thrills worth seeing. You can get that idea over with the aid of the advertising accessories pictured here.

Cancel Your Dead Stars Now and Take "The Pick of the Pictures" for the Summer.

You have been operating your theatre over the winter and spring loaded up with the programs and star series that you bought last year.

By now—to your sorrow—you know your dead stars. You know where you bought stars that did not "catch on" with your audiences. You know where you bought advertising campaigns, mistaking them for box-office values.

Thousands of you have cancellation clause contracts: Therefore, why be continually blarneyed into hanging on to valueless pictures and personalities on the edge of the busiest summer the industry has ever had?

Why not start in now and over the summer play "the pick of the pictures"; big, powerful special productions combining author, producer, director values with the added value of all-star casts? Why see your box-office die merely because some of the stuff you have bought is dying?

The independent market is full of big productions with strong story and name values. We do not mean merely the productions released through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. There are many other good independently-sold pictures besides our own.

All that we mean is:

Clean out your deadwood; cancel out whatever bad buys you made last fall. Give yourself some open time from now till September to take into your theatre productions that will deliver patronage.

Remember: W. W. Hodkinson Corporation sells each picture singly on its individual merit and value.

What Wid's Says About This Picture:

"There is no danger of your going too strong in boosting 'As A Man Thinks,' for it will back up about anything you say. It does justice to the powerful original play and offers a theme for discussion which is apt to start folks talking after they have seen the picture.... I would figure on running this for extra time, thereby profiting by word of mouth advertising which the picture is sure to receive."

And the New York Telegraph says: "'As A Man Thinks' has all the earmarks of an A1 box-office success." And the Exhibitors' Trade Review predicts: "'As A Man Thinks' will undoubtedly go over big and attract considerable extra money into the box-office of every theatre that shows it."

The Best Man

By GRACE L. H. LUTZ
Directed by THOMAS HEFFRON

Rushing on a life or death mission to recover a stolen Government code.

Coming face to face immediately with a beautiful girl who fears and despises him.

Marrying within an hour this unhappy beauty he has never seen or known before in his life.

Pursued to the altar by conspirators; tracked into the bridal chamber of his new wife's home; hunted relentlessly by criminals on a train on his honeymoon night; kidnapped in a taxi by a daring band at Pittsburg.

Five fast, stirring, breath-taking reels of romance and action before Celia Hathaway can really know the man she has married.

—That's a J. Warren Kerrigan story worth talking about, bragging about and advertising big to let the whole city or town know you have it.

"A first class adventure drama, superior to customary program attractions; a picture that will bang over with the right exploitation," is what Wid's says about it.

Just released.

A PLEDGE

Grateful to the exhibitors of the world for their splendid support and inspiring encouragement in my past efforts, I hereby pledge all my energy, will and power to the creation of such a high standard of film comedies as will create their future interest in my activities. I would like to have it believed that the consummation of these artistic results means far more to me than mere monetary returns.

TAYLOR HOLMES IN "TAXI"

3,500,000 people who have just read George Agnew Chamberlain's story, "Taxi," in the Cosmopolitan, will be in line at the various theatres of photoplay, when the Exhibitors show this picture. Some box-office attraction!

Your patrons know that the name of Taylor Holmes in connection with any picture signifies a comedy of refinement that appeals to all ages of picture enthusiasts.

"Taxi" means an unusual opportunity of collecting profits. But furthermore it means attracting to your house the kind of an audience that will be permanent, an audience that will continue to give your house the high standing it enjoys.

Lawrence Windom directed this photoplay. The supporting cast includes the grotesque Maude Eburne, Lillian Hall, Irene Tams and Fred Tiden.

"Taxi" is a comedy that runs with a snap and a dash—an hour's joy-ride with Taylor Holmes as the chauffeur. Book it now and grasp your share of the profits.

"CHARGE IT TO ME"

By L. V. JEFFERSON

Directed by ROY W. NEILL

Here's a picture that every lady, whether she has a charge account or not, will want to see. If she has one she will doubly enjoy it. If she hasn't one it will please her just the same. Men will chuckle over the funny incidents as much as the ladies. You can spread yourself on the advertising, book it for a week and feel confident of its satisfying your patrons. "Charge It To Me" has action—pep—speed. It is another Margarita Fisher success.

THE UNITED EXHIBITOR

UNITED PICTURE THEATRES OF AMERICA, INCORPORATED

LARGEST ORGANIZATION OF THEATRES IN THE WORLD

Vol. I — New York, May 3, 1919 — No. 9

ARE FILM COMPANIES AND BIG CAPITALISTS TO BUILD AND ACQUIRE CHAINS OF THEATRES AND GRADUALLY CRUSH INDEPENDENTS?

From "Variety," Dated April 18, 1919

Indianapolis, Ind., April 16, 1919.

Walter W. Irwin was here last week in consultation with local capitalists who contemplate the erection of at least one picture house of large seating capacity.

From "Variety," Dated April 18, 1919

Atlanta, Georgia, April 16, 1919.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, operating a string of theatres in the south, is rapidly extending its theatre holdings throughout the southern section of the country—it is reasonable to assume that the Lynch plans are part of the general Paramount-Artcraft plan--as the Lynch people hold a 25-year franchise from Paramount-Artcraft for the entire south.

From "N.Y. Morning Telegraph," April 20, 1919

Cleveland, Ohio, April 18, 1919.

Cleveland motion picture interests were vitally affected by an amalgamation of local photo-play houses this week, which involves property valued at $4,000,000 The Stillman, the Mall, Alhambra, the New Euclid, not yet finished, and several other new ones to be erected, are included in the transaction. Messrs. Fred Desberg, E. P. Strong, Joseph Laronge and Mark Greenbaum, representing the Mall, Alhambra and Euclid, have joined their interests with those of Marcus Loew, who controls the Stillman, and these houses will henceforth be operated on the Loew policy, and will have the advantage of Mr Loew's wide booking facilities

It is expected that a new Company will be formed to handle this chain of theatres, with a minimum capitalization of $4.000,000, which is very moderate, considering the fact that outside of the theatrical interests involved, the realty details present a transfer of $1.000,000, which will include title to the leasehold and realty of the Stillman, Mall, Alhambra and Euclid theatres

SOME of the best informed film men are of the opinion Paramount is already quietly acquiring theatres—with the ultimate object of owning a chain of houses in every city and town from coast to coast—and that the large capital necessary can easily be secured.

Fox is reported to be developing similar plans and to have already acquired several theatres in cities outside the New York zone where he has previously conducted theatres.

A number of men, well known in the financial world who have had money in theatres in various cities for several years and having secured splendid profits on their investments are reported as desirous of increasing their holdings.

So it seems certain, regardless of who does it, that some big interests are sure to get together a chain of houses — unless non-competing exhibitors in each city get together a most powerful chain so that capital will not consider the picture theatre field "Soft."

Each separate exhibitor fighting against a chain is "Soft" but 5,000 theatres in one circuit will not be "soft" competition.

We foresaw these conditions two years ago and that was one of the reasons United was formed.

The best way for exhibitors to unite is through United — and do it so quickly — that Big Capital will be scared away before it starts—afterwards it will be too late.

Capital is always "scary," always looking for easy things, not looking for trouble. NOW is the time for you, Mr. Independent Exhibitor, to MAKE UNITED BIG ENOUGH TO PROTECT YOU; all that is required to safeguard your investment and your future profits is to join United and be a member of THE LARGEST THEATRE CIRCUIT IN THE WORLD.

EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA

NOW that I have seen the first Rothapfel Unit Programme, I feel that I cannot impress upon you too strongly the advisability of arranging to run it in your theatre at the earliest possible moment. I looked at it as an exhibitor and can assure you with perfect confidence that, from the opening title to the last flash on the screen, it surpasses any complete picture entertainment I have ever seen.

Every first class theatre in the country should run this decided innovation and from the bookings now scheduled it is safe to predict that the great majority of houses will play it to tremendous business within a very short time after its release.

The one, two, three and four day runs are being contracted for rapidly in every section of the country.

Yours very truly,

FRANK G. HALL

Why Does "Maciste?"

Most everybody entitled to the appellation, SHOWMAN, knows what happens when "The Big Fellow" hangs his shingle up outside a theatre—big or little. They watch the crowds come, expectant, and see them go, amazed and satisfied, after a performance. But How Many Have Analyzed "MACISTE" to Find Out Why His Tremendous Popularity? Ask the theatre-goer Why, and the answer will be: "He's Wonderful!" The man who deals in pictures as a commodity swears "It's Advertising!" But the secret of "MACISTE'S" Phenomenal Drawing Power is best summed up in the words of the famous Critic of the New York World, Mr. Karl Kitchen, who says, "PERSONALITY, POWER—PLUS."

THE LIBERATOR

is the most sensible, sensational and satisfying Serial ever dedicated to the screen. It cost a cool HALF MILLION and shows up like twice the amount. "MACISTE" is the Title-hero and there are TWELVE EPISODES.

"It Is 12-Cylindered And All of Them Hit"

Chicago has seen "The Eternal Magdalene" and such is its verdict, expressed through the columns of that powerful and fearless newspaper, the Chicago Herald and Examiner. Upon the opening of its unprecedented booking of four weeks at a "Loop" theatre, the critic of that paper wrote:

"They take chances, those actors in 'The Eternal Magdalene.' They delve deep into the hushed subjects of life, they carry out with reality a daring theme. Goldwyn took a chance on casting them so, for Robert H. McLaughlin's play, which was a sensation on the stage, is a radical treatment of the oldest of evils.

"Regarding the moral and lesson, you are advised by Judges Cook, Fisher and Jarecki of the Municipal Court and Harry E. Miller, city prosecutor, that they are good, instructive and powerful. From me, however, you are asking only one thing—'How is it as a picture?'

"It is twelve-cylindered and all of them hit."

The official endorsements to which the Herald's critic refers are ample evidence of the tremendous local interest aroused whenever a showing of "The Eternal Magdalene" is announced. The exhibitor who books this picture will find immediate local support in endorsements similar to these from Chicago:

Prosecuting Attorney Harry B. Miller:—"The Eternal Magdalene" is a gripping picture.

Wells M. Cook, Associate Justice of the Municipal Court: I earnestly direct every father and mother to this brilliant motion picture.

Justice Edmund K. Jarecki:—It is entertainment of a high and intense order and a moral stimulant at the same time.

Dr. Anna Dwyer of the Morals Commission and Morals Court:—Gazing as I do into the torn, soiled pages of the human soul it was with a thrill of satisfaction that I saw "The Eternal Magdalene." It is pulsing, human and dramatic, artistic and exalted, but straight to the point and descriptive of common feelings and emotions throughout.

Written by Wilson Bayley — Directed by Ira M. Lowry

Analyze This Picture For Yourself

Don't take anybody else's word for it. See Louis Bennison in "The Road Called Straight" and make up your own mind on its merits.

On the basis of what you actually see, you will agree that—

Bennison is just as lovable, breezy and big-hearted in this picture as in his other plays.

Bennison shows an added power and drive that carry him beyond his previous best work.

There is punch in this story of the cattle king who didn't know the meaning of a marriage of convenience.

It is built to keep interest racing along from thrill to laugh and back to thrill again.

It is—in the last analysis—"real audience stuff."

See Bennison in "The Road Called Straight" and you will endorse every one of those statements.

If you find you can't, well, Goldwyn still says:

Once a month over a million Americans demonstrate their abiding interest in two great factors in American life.

Once a month a million Americans lay down their good money on the newsstands for copies of the two leading magazines built upon America's faith in industry and love of travel.

They are the 500,000 buyers of Popular Mechanics and the 650,000 subscribers to the National Geographic Magazine. Back of them stand four to five million readers and a dozen other publications of these types.

They demonstrate spectacularly the big insistent demand of America for intimate knowledge of the two phases of life reflected in the celluloid pages of

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

But when the Ford Educational Weekly tells the story of steel, it tells it as printer's ink can never do. When it takes its "readers" to New Orleans or up Mt. Hood, it takes them there.

That is why the millions of Americans who buy and read magazines like Popular Mechanics and the National Geographic, are even more eager followers of the Ford Educational Weekly. That is why thousands of exhibitors are enlarging and strengthening their patronage by making this great screen publication a regular feature of their programs.

Dear Sir:

Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance" has won my heart and the hearts of my patrons, I cannot recall any picture which gives as much satisfaction as this pleasing romance with its charm of youth, its wonderful photography, its beautiful costuming, its magnificent portrayal and its refreshing originality.

The story holds interest from the opening scene and runs along as smoothly as a mountain brook. It is refreshing and invigorating.

I have never seen Miss Stewart in a character so fitting her fascinating ability and captivating personality. The theatre crowded at every showing, the letters of congratulation received by me, as well as the enthusiastic verbal approval is substantial evidence that my patrons agree with me in my judgment of this masterpiece.

With my personal congratulations and best wishes, I am

Mr. Harry Schwalbe,
First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.,
6 and 8 West 48th Street,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Schwalbe:

I received your several wires in regard to the "Daddy Long Legs" proposition this morning and immediately made arrangements to meet Mr. Benson at noon and thoroughly digest the matter of the delay in preparing these negatives. We went over to the Griffith Studio and there met Mr. Aller, the authority in charge of the developing and Mr. McDermit the cutting expert. I learned from these gentlemen that everything possible was being done to hasten the preparation of cutting of the negatives to put them in shape to start the printing operations. It seems that every sort of difficulty had been experienced in putting the final touches into this production. One of the main troubles experienced by Miss Pickford and her staff was the new set of art titles which were decided on at a rather late stage in the game. From what I have seen of these titles they should be worth waiting for. They should add a great deal to the picture's value. The cutting of the negative stock had been an enormous job. These gentlemen above mentioned stated to me that they had cut 75,000 feet down to 6,900 feet, exclusive of titles and then found it necessary to add a thousand feet of titles. The ultimate length of the picture they expect to be 6,800 feet. They have been working night and day, employing as many men as they could on the job.

After a careful resume' of the work ahead of them they finally stated emphatically that they would start printing on the morning of the 18th, and would have the first print ready to ship in five days and continue the printing at the rate of about four prints a day thereafter, in other words shipping the negatives and last print on about the 28th, inst. I believe that this is the very best they can do and I did everything in my power to impress on them the necessity of working to the limit of their capacity and they evidenced a willingness to do this.

I believe that we should heartily sympathyze with Miss Pickford because this delay has undoubtedly cost her a great deal of worry and money. I am fully convinced of her determination to make "Daddy Long Legs" her greatest picture. She fully realizes that her success as a producer depends on its quality and is determined that cost what it may in worry or money, she will not let it go out of her possession until it fully meets her own standards.

Very truly yours,

Seymour Tally

What the Trade Press Says

"A special is not a matter of length. The best and most comprehensive definition of a 'special,' we believe, is this: The picture which lends itself to special exploitation."—Motion Picture News.

"A feature is the most prominent offering on a program AND IT MAY NOT BE MORE THAN A SINGLE REEL. This has been the writer's contention for a number of years and point was given this argument by the success of 'The Ghost of Slumber Mountain' at the Rivoli where it ran away from a dramatic story in five reels, though it was within the thousand foot length."—Moving Picture World.

"The remarkable interest shown in one reel subjects during the last three months clearly indicates that the motion picture theatre is going to demand a greater number of these short subjects. They are coming back and coming fast."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"Many exhibitors miss the chance of getting new patrons by advertising single reel films which may attract more favorable notice than a five-part feature."—Wid's Daily.

First of the Reviews on NAZIMOVA in The RED LANTERN

From the Motion Picture News

"IN "The Red Lantern" Metro has turned out a photoplay which will challenge attention with any production ever presented."

"IT is a superior achievement – realized not only in the scope and magnitude of its lavish scenes, all of them conceived with painstaking care and accuracy, but in the graphic and logical development of its story and characterization."

"NAZIMOVA, undertaking a dual role in which the characters are entirely different, displays the highest form of histrionism. Her performance is superb in its vividness, poignancy and sympathy."

"WOULD not have scored so effectively were it not for the appreciation of Metro in selecting appropriate material. Theirs will be the distinction hereafter of having produced The Red Lantern".

The Test of an Industry

TWO years ago, at the Chicago Convention, William A. Brady in an address on censorship said to the exhibitors present: "Censor yourselves!"

The recent action by the National Association, by far the most important undertaken by that body, evidently means a very laudable and ambitious and comprehensive effort to put this sensible command into effect.

At a meeting called by Mr. Brady a large number of prominent producers and distributors, representing practically all of the leading concerns, agreed to bind themselves to submit all their pictures to the association upon its request, and to accept its rulings; to stamp all their pictures with the seal of the association; to refuse service to any exhibitor showing pictures disapproved by the association; to take legal steps against such exhibitors, and to co-operate with the proper authorities in this respect.

This sweeping plan, if fully executed, obviously makes legalized censorship unnecessary; but the National Association goes further and announces its intention to endeavor to secure an amendment to the constitution which will prohibit censorship; and furthermore to have amended the penal code so that motion pictures as well as still pictures and literature may be excluded, for cause, from the mails and other carriers.

The plan is admirably worked out and comprehensive. Fully executed it means the perfect regulation of its pictures by the industry itself. No one within the industry will protest such a plan; all will subscribe heartily to its purpose.

The test will come, of course, so far as the industry is concerned, with the operation of that body within the association, which will be given supreme power to pass upon pictures. It is not as yet stated whether the personnel of Board will come from within or outside of the industry. A great deal, a very great deal, depends upon the character and conduct of the board. It is the core of whole plan.

The things are self-evident, however. One is the unreserved confidence of the producers and distributors in Mr. Brady's leadership in this most important movement; and the other is their willingness, after much serious thought and discussion definitely to bind themselves to such stringent regulations as the plan proposes.

It is a most salutory sign. It means that the whole industry wants and commits itself to clean pictures. Today, as we well know, the very great majority of pictures are clean. The standard is so well sustained that a very dark shadow is cast by the industry itself upon the bad picture. It is a very bad picture. And the industry, at last, is determined to put its own heavy foot upon it and crush it out of sight.

The Answer to Higher Prices

INCREASED admission prices are reported to us from all parts of the country.

The movement which began with the larger cities has extended to the smaller cities. Some theatres are charging from thirty-five up to as high as seventy-five cents; others have raised to thirty-three. Many theatres which charged seventeen have gone to twenty-two cents; some have jumped from fifteen to twenty-five. Most of these theatres, if not all, have been accustomed, of course, to charge advanced prices for special pictures.

These advances have been viewed with alarm and condemnation by the pessimists. This type of mind always does decry an advance of any kind. It is the same mind that argues against longer runs. Yet longer runs are on the rise, and so inevitably are higher admission prices.

Two main situations favor higher admission. One is that the public is used to paying more for everything; picture theatre admissions have been slower to advance than any other class of prices despite the increased cost of the show, equipment and wages.

The other factor is that pictures are much better and obviously worth higher admissions. And there is no reason today why the exhibitor who is on the alert cannot pick a good show right along.

Of course there is no chance in the matter for the exhibitor who lets his house run itself; just as there is no chance for an exhibitor to introduce longer runs who doesn't select and advertise his pictures. The public wants its money's worth at all times. That is the simple answer, at all times, to the admission price question.

A Privilege and a Responsibility

THE recent statement of Governor Smith of New York in announcing his approval of the Sunday motion picture bill, is worthy of record:

"After a thorough consideration of the matter I am of the firm opinion that those members of a community who oppose all recreation on Sunday, or at least recreation permitted by this amendatory bill, have no right, in law or in morals, whereby constitute a minority of a community, to impose their views upon the majority, who disagree with them, and to prohibit the latter from exercising rights and privileges to which they deem themselves to be entitled, the exercise of which will in no wise interfere with the orderly and proper observance of the day of rest by those desiring to refrain from attending amusements."

The governor then pointed out that the local authorities could be depended upon to reflect the majority opinion.

And equally, this editorial excerpt from the Brooklyn Eagle is worthy of record and also the earnest attention of exhibitors and distributors, not alone in New York State but everywhere:

"Our hope is that the motion picture magnates will realize that a new responsibility is put upon them. Films of dignity, of character, of educational value are available. If tawdry eccentricities were cut out on Sundays, if the drama offered on that day were classical or artistic, or both, opposition would gradually disappear. But if the reverse is the magnates' policy, they may as well be warned that Sunday restrictions will come back. For this State is not ruled by its city population, and Albany is not always or often responsive to the East Side element of Manhattan."

* * *

A Lesson In Evolution

THE two sales conventions recently held in New York indicate a decided and very gratifying advance within the industry.

It is only a few years ago that such conventions would have been considered unnecessary—even laughed at. At that time a general manager of exchanges in New York sent orders out to his field lieutenants—and that's all there was to it. There was no interchange of ideas.

At these present-day conventions the situation was completely reversed. Branch managers were called here for the specific purpose of conferring closely with the head office; not only that, but they were made to understand that the New York headquarters intended to rely heavily upon their business judgment and responsibility.

Modern merchandizing methods figured largely in the conferences; advertising to the public, service to the exhibitors, co-operative selling, were the important themes. The trade paper was given prominent recognition as an important link in the selling plan, which is another concrete evidence of advancement. Only a few years ago the producer said: " We don't have to advertise. The exhibitor takes what we give him."

The business has evoluted, in other words, from a booking era into a selling era, which, also, means that we have grown out of the closed and into the open booking era.

Open booking was inevitable; and open booking is bound to be permanent. This is true simply because open booking is the normal, healthy operation of the law of supply and demand, a law which is fundamental in any business. Open booking means the application to this trade of the modern merchandizing methods which rule in all modern enterprises.

Open at Both Ends

THE franchise holders of the First National Exhibitors' circuit, recently gathered in New York, were as outstanding a group of men, in business resources, experience and ability, as have ever been joined together in any picture business enterprise. Their aggregate invested capital makes a figure of consequence in this industry.

New York had visible evidence, for the first time, of the considerable power, the fast-growing power, of the picture theatre.

This power is bound to wield a very strong and shaping influence in the future of the whole industry, and we believe it will be wielded with intelligence by this group of men, or by any other group of theatre owners or booking circuits which may also arise. This power will not be used to close or control in any way the producing end of the business; that would be as disastrous in the long run and not such a very long run, as for a single or a few producing interests to control the picture theatres.

An open market both ways from the distributor, an arrangement permitting full individuality in the production and exhibition of pictures is the salvation of the motion picture. Too much control of pictures will stifle their appeal, and that will turn the public away, will, in fact, stifle, just so much, the public interest in motion pictures.

Old Ways For New

WE have often emphasized what, in our opinion, is the primary function of trade paper advertising, namely, to merchandize pictures for the distributor through the exhibitor to the public.

And we reiterate our belief in concentration in advertising because so much information must be given on each worthwhile feature release—that is to say, the exhibitor wants and needs so much information—that duplication of this sort of advertising is both extravagant and wholly unnecessary.

In this issue the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gives an apt illustration of just this sort of advertising. Three pages are given over to a picture. The first page is an announcement to the exhibitor; but it is so worded that it is also an announcement to the public; the exhibitor can duplicate it, with a single and minor change in his newspaper advertising. The two following pages are filled with illustrations of the accessory aids furnished along with the picture, mats or electrotypes of which are available at the exchange.

The exhibitor welcomes this sort of advertising. It is an announcement but more than an announcement. It is not merely an effort by the producer to sell to the exhibitor —as if he felt that here his effort and responsibility ceased: but it is an effort to help the exhibitor sell to the public, the producer realizing, as he should, that his real customer is also the public and that he and the exhibitor should work shoulder to shoulder in selling the picture for all it is worth.

In other words, the exhibitor will realize that the advertising space is purchased for him and not merely for the producer. It is a co-operative selling effort—which, as we have contended before, should be carried right on through newspapers to the public.

And we look to see the day when trade papers will be used in just this way—and primarily so.

The old way was simply to announce—and boost in any extravagant way. The new way is to inform, to give the facts, all the facts, the selling facts—to the exhibitor for him to give to his public.

A Few Questions

AND still the reports of big new theatres come in. Evidently the year is destined to go down in history as the million-dollar-theatre era.

And the question keeps popping up: are we overbuilding? Will there be too many seats to fill?

We believe not.

These new seats will replace others in smaller houses—in the large centres, of course.

But much more important is the consideration: These large new theatres, these veritable palaces of amusement, are bound to attract a brand new and very large class of patrons. They will practically compel this new attendance, and compel it regularly. Provided, of course, the entertainment given is sufficiently attractive. But it will be; it must be. These many theatres will inspire and make possible the most expensive of attractions.

What will the attractions be? Pictures alone; or pictures and what?

W. A. Johnston

Dealing in Personalities

Who said "Open Market?"—independent productions? Look at the attractions at the three regular Broadway photoplay houses next week and the producers they represent. Maurice Tourneur, independent producer, heads the list with "The White Heather" at the Rialto. Albert Capellani, now producing independently, is represented with "The Red Lantern" at the Rivoli. And Louis Mayer presents Anita Stewart to Strand audiences.

And—still speaking of the "Open Market"—do you enjoy a free for all scrap? Turn to Page 3014. We've got them all talking "Open Market" and scrambling for the honors. There's some rip-snorting reading matter on that page.

What are the odds that a year or two from now some one will be fighting for the title of "Pioneer of the Program System?"

You never can tell in this film game.

Samuel Goldwyn arrives in New York next Monday. And we have been tipped that when he gets here some big news will break. After he spills the news and has them all talking Samuel will board a liner for Europe. There we may look for more important Goldwyn happenings—if we are to judge by the announcement this week that a new corporation had been formed to distribute Goldwyn product in every corner of the earth. You'll find the story in the producers' news.

The Goldwyn offices are now settled at the new location—469 Fifth avenue.

That's quite an idea C. Arthur Northram is pulling in inviting the industry to a showing of his British productions next week at the New York Roof.

J. E. Flynn, Detroit, chief for Goldwyn, was in New York last week to tell the home office a few things about conditions in Michigan.

William A. Brady sails this week on the Aquitania.

Harry Sherman left for Los Angeles on Tuesday after putting the finishing touches to the Henry Lehrman-First National deal. A little birdie whispered to us that Harry would have left Saturday but for the Ritchie-Leonard scrap. Harry never could miss a good fight—even if it was necessary to promote the bout himself.

Sol Lesser takes up the cudgels this week in the distribution discussion started by William A. Johnston's recent editorials. And he talks some real hard sense, backed by an experience that no one can touch. Sol finds room for both the "Open Market" and program, and points out the necessity of each. Another contributor to the discussion is William M. Seabury, with some ambitious ideas on cooperative booking. The articles are on page 3016.

From Los Angeles we hear that Priscilla Dean is very ill with double pneumonia.

Which reminds us that our recent Los Angeles flash that Constance Talmadge would sign with First National was confirmed this week. Looking the list over we are ready to say that First National need have no worry about product.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Exhibitors' Mutual, has resigned to go into producing activities.

The modestly christened "Big Five"—Blaisdell, Dannenburg, Mason, Jim Beecroft and Yours Truly—entertained the sure-enough "Big Four" at luncheon last week. Oscar Price, chief of the United Artists' Distributing Corporation, was guest.

Had the pleasure of meeting George F. Stabel, general manager of the Palisade Film Laboratories, last week. Old-timer, Hector Strychma—, is associated with the laboratories.

Oh, boy, but the National Association has undertaken some job in its new censorship plans. We are with the members heart and soul for having the nerve to even attempt such an ambitious schedule. But we are watching with bated breath for the first conflict. Either the Association will have to be especially strict and invite internal trouble, or take a lenient course and be of no avail in squelching the reformers. It's a job for courage and broad vision.

We still hear the boys saying good words about that corking insert on "The Red Lantern," which appeared exclusively in Motion Picture News last week. And we saw some of the telegrams of congratulations sent to Arthur James by theatre and exchange managers.

Our personal opinion: It was a triumph of artistic taste and advertising effectiveness.

While on the subject, let us add that considerable class is being shown by some other inserts that are appearing exclusively in Motion Picture News, notably the Universal series on their specials and the recent Pathe exclusives.

Either Our Sleuth has fallen down on the job or else Leo Wharton has returned to San Antonio, Texas, to resume the making of pictures. Take your choice.

Which reminds us that we have met Mabel Condon several times, and have yet to chronicle the fact on this page of piffle. Mabel is in town from the Coast renewing acquaintances and incidentally disposing of a picture.

Carl Byoir and Charles Hart, formerly of the Committee on Public Information, have formed a partnership for foreign sales and advertising service. They open for business with offices in London, Paris, Rome, Geneva, Buenos Ayres, Stockholm, Mexico City and Shanghai.

If our artist had not fallen down on us we expected to give you action sketches this week of two "Regular Fellers"—C. L. Yearsley and Earl Hudson. But now you'll have to wait a few weeks. Still we can say right here, that too much praise cannot be given those boys for their handling of the First National Conventions last week. I'll say that they have the trade paper boys with them.

From Bill Furlong, of San Antonio, Texas, we get a line asking a correction of the statement recently published by a contemporary that the Wharton Brothers and Maclyn Arbuckle had located in Houston. Let the right place be said in a loud tone: SAN ANTONIO.

E. V. Richards, of New Orleans, and R. W. Wilby, of Alabama, were among the exhibitors visiting the office last week. Be'er Wilby heads the Strand Theatres Corporation, which operates in Montgomery, Selma, and Birmingham. Mr. Richards left for New Orleans Wednesday after a week and a half in New York divided between the First National Conventions and other business.

Speaking of exhibitors we met one "regular feller" showman at the First National gathering last week in the person of A. C. Barbian, of the Waldorf, Akron, Ohio.

And the same goes twice for C. R. Beachman, of the First National Atlanta office. Do I hear shouts of "Aye" from Walt Hill and Harry Palmer? Do I? Well, boys!

There's a real big bit of news this week from Pennsylvania. Pittsburgh exhibitors have secured the introduction in the State Legislature of a bill calling on all distributors to place security in the hands of the State Censor Board equal to the amount of advance deposits held. It didn't sound so important when Arizona tried this idea out, but can you imagine what it would mean in Pennsylvania? The story is on page 3009.

Theatre Men Claim Five Points

Sydney S. Cohen Presents Desires of Exhibitors Before the Film Exchange Men of New York

"WE want a standard equitable booking contract to be used by all distributing companies," declared Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State exhibitors, at a meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City.

This was the first of five points urged by the prominent exhibitors assembled at the Hotel Astor Wednesday night, April 30, as guests of the exchange men in a combined open meeting called at the request of the exhibitor officials.

While discussion waxed fast and furious on several of the points advanced, and ofttimes strayed away from the main points under discussion, it was conceded by many to have been intelligent and constructive. I. E. Chadwick, an official of the F. I. L. M. Club, presided at the meeting and there were about one hundred representative exhibitors and exchange men present.

Mr. Cohen pointed out the absolute necessity of a standard contract so that every exhibitor would know what he was signing and thus do away with the so-called "jokers" which he stated were the cause of so much friction. He stated that the standard contract prevented flagrant abuses and that it was used universally and very effectively in England and Ireland.

Others who took a leading part in all the debate ensuing were Messrs. Manheimer, Berman, Brand, Brecher, Picker, Asher, O'Reilly and Eckman. Mr. Cohen was commended heartily on the successful fight he won on the Sunday opening legislation, and he in turn warmly praised the efforts of Messrs. Berman, O'Reilly, and all the up-state exhibitors, several of whose names he mentioned with glowing terms.

The second point urged by the exhibitors was equal representation on the Grievance Committee with the exchange men. It was generally conceded that the current and past rulings of the Grievance Committee had seemed just and impartial, but the moral effect of joint representation was emphasized strongly.

While the first point on the standard contract suggested would have to be taken up by the parent companies, the second point of joint representation will be threshed out by the F. I. L. M. Club at a future meeting in executive session.

The third point requested was the actual acceptance or rejection of a booking contract by an exchange within seven days of the exhibitor's application. Mr. Cohen stated that when an exchange contracted with an exhibitor to supply him with a certain feature, the verification was often held up by the exchange or home office for several weeks and ofttimes was rejected just a few days before the scheduled play date.

Point number four urged that the exchanges employ more bookkeepers so that the exhibitor would get his bill before play-date instead of after.

The point that invoked the most discussion was the last one—Number Five.

This was a request that a committee from the exhibitors act jointly with a committee from the exchanges augmented by the efforts of able attorneys on both sides to find a credit system or involve ways and means of evading the advance deposits at present in vogue.

The meeting lasted four hours and was considered generally as but a forerunner of many more to come. Charles Hoy, of the Hoy Agency, was secretary. His reporting system is used by the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City and he announced that the New England Film Managers' Association of Boston, covering six states, had just contracted for his agency's service.

Booking combinations of exhibitors in certain sections, and the alleged practices of some exchanges in forcing one exhibitor to bid against a competitor until the price of rental was sky-high, formed a pro and con which occasioned much debate.

Kirkpatrick Leaves Mutual to Produce

A. S. Kirkpatrick, for the last year assistant general manager and director of sales of the Mutual Film Corporation and Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, has resigned effective May 3 to return to the producing field, it has been announced.

Mr. Kirkpatrick leaves New York on May 7 for Los Angeles, Cal.

In his new connection Mr. Kirkpatrick re-enters production after five years in distribution. His first experience in the motion picture industry was in producing, and it was his original intention to be a producer. He was, for a brief period, a salesman for Metro on the Pacific Coast. He entered the service of the Mutual Film Corporation as a salesman at the Portland Exchange and was shortly appointed branch manager there.

Broadway Orchestra

Signor Ronualdo De Martin, formerly of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been engaged by B. S. Moss to conduct the New American Symphony Orchestra of forty pieces at the Broadway theatre, which opened May 2 under the direction of Mr. Moss, with "The Unpardonable Sin," the multi-reeler, as the chief pictorial attraction.

Mygatt Leaves Hodkinson

Gerald Mygatt, director of publicity for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has resigned from this organization to take the circulation managership of The Outlook. Mr. Mygatt has had considerable experience in the publication field, having been assistant promotion manager for Collier's, and promotion manager for Leslie's Weekly and Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Interviewing Louis Bennison

By Peter Milne

LOUIS BENNISON, the star of the Beztwood Pictures, whose productions are released through Goldwyn, paid a short visit to New York last week just to take a few deep breaths before beginning his next picture. He was accompanied by Ira M. Lowry, his director and production manager. But Mr. Bennison and Mr. Lowry declared themselves on a hunt for good stories and practical continuities. "Anything that will fit Mr. Bennison's personality will suit," declared Mr. Lowry, "the story can be comedy, comedy-drama, melodrama as long as it gives him the proper part—it must fit his personality."

Such an easy-going, likeable personality as that possessed by Mr. Bennison ought to offer a fund of material for authors. Those who have seen his pictures feel this star as one to be reckoned with and his work and the popularity he has already taken to himself substantiate this feeling. Mr. Bennison isn't the kind of man to be interviewed. Most of the time a representative of Motion Picture News was with him he told of little anecdotes of the West—the West in which he was raised.

"I'd like to see the real West of today put on the screen," he said, "it's so different from the West that is pictured in the melodramas. All its unique characters, its spirit, are neglected in the mad rush for the saloon and dance hall scenes." And probably because Mr. Bennison would like to see the real West on the screen it will shortly be there in one of his own pictures.

Mr. Bennison's early life, spent on the western plains, has endowed him with a knowledge of locations that even the most ambitious and well travelled assistant director would envy. And for the next Betzwood picture the company will probably board a transcontinental limited and drop off somewhere in Colorado or Wyoming, to return with unusual and magnificent backgrounds for the production's western action.

Mr. Bennison's present plans are to produce six pictures during the year for Betzwood, all of which will be released by Goldwyn. The headquarters of the company will remain in Philadelphia where a wide variety of scenery is obtainable.

Preparing for Kansas State Convention

The outlook is already bright for a successful convention of the exhibitors of Kansas this year. Hutchison, Kansas, is the place and May 19 and 20 the dates. It is the intention to perfect a one hundred per cent exhibitor organization and to thresh out plans for coming activities inside the industry and in legislative matters.

The Hutchison Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club are cooperating, while local merchants will finance a trip for the girl who wins the popularity contest. Exchanges supplying the territory are also helping.

Seek the "Ripper" Bill in Pennsylvania

Bill Introduced in Legislature Calls on Distributors to Secure Licenses and Deposit Bonds Equal to Exhibitors' Advance Payments—Backed by Small Exhibitors

HARRISBURG, PA. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—Backed by organized exhibitors in Western Pennsylvania a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives here that is in many ways similar to the legislation recently passed in Arizona and only forestalled through the failure of the Governor to affix his signature.

Under the provisions of the bill all distributing organizations operating in Pennsylvania must secure a license from the State Board of Censors, which body also has the power to revoke the licenses, and all distributors must deposit with the Censors bonds equal to the amount of advance payments made by exhibitors to them.

The chances of the Pennsylvania bill's passage are increased by the fact that it does not contain many of the more arbitrary provisions that were contained in the proposed Arizona statute.

It Started in Pittsburgh

The idea of the proposed legislation originated in Pittsburgh and followed the appearance in the State Capitol of a committee of "The American Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania," composed of Fred J. Herrington, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Henry Poke, J. W. Shearer and Chris Vollmer. All of these men operate theatres in Pittsburgh.

The committee requested Representative Stoffel to introduce the measure which was promptly referred to the Committee of Ways and Means of the House. It is claimed that the measure will receive strong support from at least a large part of the Pittsburgh delegation in the House. Those seeking the passage of the bill express every confidence that it will be favorably reported out of committee at an early date.

The campaign, according to exhibitor declarations to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will be strictly a "small exhibitor" fight, as the backers do not expect that support of the large theatre owners in the state who, they claim, are allied with the distributors affected.

Following is an outline of the statements that are being made by the promoters of the proposed legislation to the representatives whose votes are being sought:

"The film exchanges now doing business in the state are in the habit of requiring the exhibitors to make advance deposits for films, especially in the case where any exhibitor contracts for a series of pictures of the same star or subject. These deposits vary from 100 per cent. of the rental price on each one of the subjects down to 25 per cent. of the individual rental. The distributor holds this deposit until the final subject of the series has been shown, although in some cases this may be a year or more before the final subject of the series is shown. Meantime the rental of each subject of the series must be paid for at the time it is released, and often the exchange arbitrarily demands payment from a week to two weeks in advance of the release of the subject."

In talking to the legislators, the exhibitors also declare, "Under the system of requiring long-time deposits on film contracts, exhibitors often lose money when the exchanges, as sometimes occur, fail to live up to their end of a contract to deliver a series of films. For instance, when only a part of a series of films, for some reason or another, is delivered to the exhibitor under contract, the distributor often is tardy in returning the amount of the deposit to the exhibitor. It is said that in cases where theatres have gone out of business, monies they have paid on contracts in advance to distributors have in some cases never been paid back to the exhibitors."

NEVER AGAIN!

Text of the Bill

The Soffel bill provides that after January 1, 1920, all distributors engaging in business in Pennsylvania shall procure an annual license from the State Board of Censors, upon the payment of an annual fee of $50 and "a deposit of money or securities as required by this act," such license to continue for a period of one year from date of issuance.

The Board of Censors shall revoke the certificate of approval of any film exhibited under a lease from a distributor who has failed to comply with the provisions of the act and shall also revoke the license of such distributor.

It is set forth further that "every distributor desiring to do business in this Commonwealth shall keep on deposit with the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors an amount of money or securities equal to the amount of deposits held by such distributor and paid by exhibitors as a license or as part payments on contracts of leasing or as a pledge or security for damages or for any other purpose provided for in any contract between the distributor and exhibitor.

"All such deposits made by distributors . . . shall be for the benefit and protection of their exhibitors in this Commonwealth in the case of the insolvency of the distributor and for the faithful performance of all contracts made by the distributor with exhibitor and for the return of such deposits to the exhibitor in any case when the exhibitor may be entitled thereto. All such deposits shall be delivered forthwith by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors to the State Treasurer for safe keeping."

It is provided further that such deposits made by distributors shall be in United State bonds, or State bonds, or other approved municipal securities or in bonds or mortgages on unencumbered real estate worth fifty per cent. more than the amount loaned thereon. No one bond shall be for less than $1,000, and all such securities must be approved by the Board of Censors.

Call on Exhibitors' Aid

Following the introduction of the bill by Representative Soffel, the committee of exhibitors issued the following call to the theatre owners of Pennsylvania:

> To the Exhibitors of Pennsylvania. Get into action. There is a bill now pending before the Legislature that is of vital importance to you. It is up to you to see your members of the House and Senate, and ask them to support House Bill No. 1393.
> The passage of this bill will take the STING out of the DEPOSIT SYSTEM, and will give you security for the money you have on deposit. It will also do away with the old cry that the producers and distributors are using our deposit money to promote their own business, and we, the members of the American Exhibitors' Association, are inclined to think that the passage of this bill will ultimately end the deposit system in this country

Southern Managers After Sub-renters

Exhibitors who have been "bad accounts" in the past, those who have refused to cooperate on shipping instructions, and those who have been guilty of "bicycling" or sub-renting subjects were the chief topic of discussion at the last meeting of the Atlantic Film Exchange Managers' Association.

Plans were adopted which it is believed will effectually do away with the sub-renting evil in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama.

Personal Representatives of Stars Tour East

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford are personally represented by Walter S. Rand and Louis W. Thompson, respectively.

Messrs. Rand and Thompson are now touring the principal eastern cities and visiting the leading exhibitors. New York and vicinity has already been covered and Boston, Hartford, New Haven and Springfield exhibitors have also been seen by the personal representatives of the two stars.

The "personal contact" between the exhibitors and the stars is declared to be the motive of the visitors and they declare that the exhibitors have already given them a wealth of valuable data upon which the stars can base their forthcoming productions.

Both Mr. Rand and Mr. Thompson left for a short visit to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington where they will interview the most prominent theatre owners. This is in line with the plan adopted by Messrs. Price and Abrams of the "Big Four."

Sails for Poland to Make Paderewski Films

Richard Ordynski, one of the directors of the Metropolitan Opera House has sailed for Europe to supervise under his personal management the making of films in Poland, featuring Premier Ignace Jan Paderewski. The production is being made by a new company, organized and financed by Polish capital, including the representative Polish business men of the east. It is called the Tatra Production Corporation with offices at 150 Nassau Street. Among the directors are: Henry Sieminski, A. V. Piskorski and M. Mierzwinski.

Previous to the sailing of Mr. Ordynski, Messrs. F. O. Johnson, president of the new corporation, and Joseph Seiden, formerly with the Universal Film Company, who is directing the picture under Mr. Ordynski's supervision, left on the Megantic. They will reach Paris several days in advance and will make all arrangements to leave for Warsaw immediately for the making of the scenes.

Goldwyn Presents Trophy to Sailors

Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, presented a 12-inch silver trophy to the third gun crew of the U. S. S. Nevada, the victors in the gun-mounting contest held on Victory Way. The winners of the contest loaded and fired their shell in the remarkable time of 8 2-5 seconds.

Weil Gets Promotion

Jack Weil, formerly exchange manager of the World Film Corporation in St. Louis, has been promoted to district manager of the Pacific coast for the World and his headquarters will be located at Seattle, Wash. Weil received many congratulations from St. Louis exhibitors before his departure to his new post.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Must be Truant Officers

Harrisburg, Pa. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Proprietors of motion picture theatres in Pennsylvania will be fined or sent to prison hereafter if children between eight and sixteen years old "play hookey" from school and spend the time of their truancy at picture theatres, if a bill introduced in the Pennsylvania Senate on April 22, by Senator S. S. Leiby, of Perry county, is enacted into law.

The bill puts all the responsibility in such cases up to the theatre man. It provides that no motion picture theatre proprietor shall during the term of compulsory attendance of public schools as fixed by the school directors in any school district and during the hours such schools are in session, admit or permit entrance to his theatre of any child between the ages mentioned.

The provisions of the act do not apply, however, to any child presenting a permit signed by the teacher which allows the child to be absent from school during school hours and permits admittance to a motion picture theatre. Such permit shall be retained by the theatre man for six months. A copy of the act must be posted at the entrance of every theatre.

The penalties for violation of the proposed act are a fine of ten dollars for the first offense and twenty-five dollars for the second and every subsequent offense, and in default of payment of such fine or costs the offender shall be committed to jail one day for each dollar of the fine and costs imposed. The bill was referred to the Judiciary General Committee for action.

To Be Branch Manager of Independent Sales

W. J. Hagerty, formerly with Triangle as branch manager of its Philadelphia exchange for three years and at one time special representative for the Lynch chain of theatres through the South, has been appointed branch manager of Independent Sales Corporation's Pittsburgh Exchange, succeeding Norman S. Carroll. Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, Independent Sales, announces that the nineteen established exchanges of Independent are now actively engaged in boosting the Rothapfel Unit Program, scheduled for release in May, in addition to handling Frank G. Hall's Independent releases through the Film Clearing House.

Shows British-Made Productions

W. Arthur Northam has announced that on May 6, 7 and 8 he has arranged to give an exhibition of various British productions at Loew's New York Roof theatre, on Broadway, New York. The showings are scheduled for 10:45 on each morning of the three days.

Mr. Northam announces that the pictures, both story and cartoon, will cover a wide range of subjects, and have been made by different firms.

Invitations have been issued to the showings.

Samuel Goldwyn Plans Trip Abroad

"Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, now on his way to New York after two months spent at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California, promises to give out an important announcement on his arrival," said a statement this week.

Preliminary information suggests that the Goldwyn plans for the next season will be revolutionary not only so far as Goldwyn is concerned, but also from the standpoint of the entire art of the motion picture and the business structure on which it has been reared.

Details of the new plans, which appear to comprehend wide and sweeping changes in the whole conduct of picture making, are known at the Goldwyn offices in New York, but the final disclosure of them awaits Mr. Goldwyn's arrival. He is expected in New York on Monday, May 5.

It is known, however, that as a part of the changed Goldwyn policy, Mr. Goldwyn, chief executive of the picture making and distributing corporations, will shortly undertake a trip to Europe, where he will remain for an extended stay.

Capt. Al Kaufman Returns from Foreign Service

Capt. Al. Kaufman, formerly manager of Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned Wednesday from France, having served seven months as officer in charge of all motion picture work in the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps, A. E. F. He sailed from Liverpool on the Olympic, landing at Halifax on Monday and finishing the journey to New York by rail.

Captain Kaufman's chief work was the compiling of a historical photographic record of America's participation in the war, and took him to England, France, Luxembourg, Belgium, Alsace and Germany.

Captain Kaufman spoke enthusiastically regarding the picture outlook abroad, and declared that the demand for films would require the building of many new theaters. He will soon rejoin the staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Company in an advisory capacity.

N. A. M. P. I. to Cooperate on Methodist Centenary

The N. A. M. P. I. has appointed a committee to cooperate with Dr. Christian F. Reisner, Executive Secretary of the Methodist Minute Men, in supplying a motion picture program for the forthcoming Missionary Anniversary, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, June 20 to July 13.

It is believed that the convention offers an unusual opportunity of demonstrating to clergymen and lay church workers the value of the motion picture. The National Association committee includes William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, P. A. Powers, Albert E. Smith, Ricord Gradwell and Walter W. Irwin.

South Needs Dose of 'Pep' Says Wells

In Exclusive Interview Granted MOTION PICTURE NEWS North Carolina Theatre Man Declares Industry Is Losing Four Million a Year Through Blindness of Exhibitors to Their Opportunities—Suggests Campaign

EXHIBITORS in five Southern States are losing an annual revenue of from four million to five million dollars, and exchanges are being deprived of at least a million dollars a year in rentals, because of the inertia and indifference of theatre owners toward possibilities for industrial development, according to Percy Wells, owner and active director of five theatres in Wilmington, N. C., and an officer in the recently organized Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association.

Mr. Wells made this statement to MOTION PICTURE NEWS while he was in New York last week to cooperate with Willard C. Patterson of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, and other officers of the new exhibitor organization in bringing to the attention of the executives of various distributing concerns the objections of the Southeastern exhibitors to the trade rules adopted by Atlanta exchanges.

Theory has no part in the opinions of Mr. Wells. His success in Wilmington is proof positive that his statements have the merit of being facts, in so far as they concern undeveloped revenue in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

"Four Million a Year"

That theatres in these states are losing a certain gross income of at least four million dollars a year, a part of which would constitute rentals and added financial encouragement to producers and stars to make bigger and better productions, Mr. Wells declares is due to the following causes:

The exhibitors are not good mixers.

They lack initiative and the ambition to progress.

They take no interest in local activities beyond the confines of their own box offices.

They do not make any particular effort to interest the public in motion pictures.

They do not attempt to popularize themselves, their theatres or the industry.

They make no pretense of seeking local prestige by any means.

"And as a consequence," declared Mr. Wells, "they are classed as showmen—nothing else. It has long been a tradition in the South that a showman was the promoter of a 'hootch' show or a short change artist operating behind gaudy carnival banners with the protests of his victims drowned in the roar of a brass band.

"Because of the personal dispositions of exhibitors, as I have just enumerated them, the motion picture business in many cities and towns in the South still ranks in public estimation with the dreaded lure of the old-time carnival and wagon show.

"There are exceptions. There are exhibitors who operate their theatres according to progressive business principles. They have made themselves and their houses integral parts of the local communities. They are respected by the public. They have gained a prominent position in local business life. They sell screen entertainment just as any retail merchant sells his wares. They are always alert for opportunities to increase their patronage. They use dignified methods, and they have won the respect and admiration of their communities by a brand of ambitious conduct that has placed the motion picture high in public esteem.

Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, N. C.

"You can get their names from the account books of any exchange in Atlanta. You will find them among the early-run accounts for the best of the better class of attractions that have been released in the last year. They do not patronize junk productions. The fact that a five-reel feature can be rented for $10 a day does not interest them. They want attractions at $100, or for rentals in proportion, according to population, because they possess the energy, the courage, the vision and the ability to make them profitable factors in their success.

"It is absolutely a fact that the average exhibitor in the South is not a good mixer. He sums up his business as a matter of so many seats, a machine that will still 'grind 'em through,' a couple of one-sheet frames, a small reader ad in the local papers and patrons who, in his befogged estimation, will not pay more than ten cents to see a re-staging of the original battle of Chateau-Thierry.

"Again, as an average, he is a narrow, cynical individual, absolutely impervious to ordinary forms of argument and conviction that his business has hidden possibilities worth thousands of dollars to him if they are dug out of the dark and developed. He is passive in his attitude toward his theatre and all things pertaining to it. The matter of rental price is of far more importance to him than the degree of quality he can purchase at a given figure.

"Local civic happenings hold no interest or opportunities for him. That his screen can be made the medium for molding public opinion in favor of worthy local propaganda is unbelievable. And—even though he did relent and permit it, he wouldn't get a bit of thanks or appreciation. No, sir!

"Still as an average exhibitor, he makes no effort to popularize himself or his theatre. The same old lobby arrangement of a couple of posters, a reader ad, and 'grind 'em through,' day after day. I'll venture the statement that there are scores of exhibitors in the South who have never used a unique lobby display, and who would dynamite the community into panic if a theatre ad ran over six lines maximum in a newspaper.

"There are many communities in the South where motion pictures are still the cheap, tawdry sensational type of five years ago. There are localities in which theatre patrons firmly believe that scratches, oil spots, confusing jumps in continuity due to breaks and hasty patching, and subtitles so shortened by wear and cutting that they cannot be read through are the natural, normal thing.

"North Carolina, as an example of development possibilities, is not producing more than twenty-five per cent of the revenue that is there, if only it is sought in practical, progressive ways. In the five states as a unit motion picture patronage is not more than forty per cent developed. The reasons for this condition are those I have just cited in characterizing the average exhibitor."

Negro Possibilities Undeveloped

The negro element was declared by Mr. Wells to be a source of profitable attention which is being almost wholly ignored in many communities. To prove his claim that negro patronage is worth while and at prices that are charged white patrons, he gave the following figures of admission charges and seating capacities for his theatres in Wilmington:

Royal Theatre, eight hundred seats; balcony devoted to negroes has three hundred seats. Prices, main floor and balcony, twenty and thirty cents.

Bijou Theatre, eight hundred seats; balcony devoted to negroes has two hundred seats. Prices, ten cents regularly, twenty on special feature days.

Victoria Theatre, eleven hundred seats; balcony with three hundred seats for negroes only. Prices, main floor and balcony, twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents.

Academy Theatre, legitimate house, eleven hundred seats, with a balcony seating four hundred and twenty-five.

The Grand Theatre, fifth of the Wells houses, has five hundred seats, with admission prices of fifteen and twenty cents, but caters exclusively to white patrons because there is no balcony arrangement to permit segregation.

"The negroes are just as interested as white people in good screen entertainment," continued Mr. Wells. "They are finding the screen a marvelous educational

Exhibitors Gather in Toronto for Convention

Many Canadian exhibitors gathered at Toronto, Ontario, on Monday and Tuesday, May 5 and 6, for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, and for the first general meeting of the stockholders of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, which is being promoted by the Ontario association. The first day's program consisted of consideration of general business by the association members, and on the second day more definite attention was paid to the new co-operative exchange proposition. The shareholders elected their permanent directors for the new company on Tuesday. The convention was held in the Sons of England Hall, Richmond and Berti streets, Toronto, with theatre men in attendance from all parts of Ontario and Quebec. The out-of-town visitors were treated to a number of entertainments which had been arranged by a special committee consisting of the following Toronto exhibitors: Messrs. J. C. Brady, Alexander Feighen, William Stugess, Ferguson, Redway, Welsman and Cardie, along with Secretary Thomas Scott, of the association.

In preparation for the convention, the Ontario association held a special meeting on Tuesday, April 22, at the association headquarters, 143 Yonge street, some thirty members being in attendance.

A letter was received from the Toronto Operators' local, in which it was pointed out that the organized projection operators had decided to do business with churches on the same basis as moving picture theatres. The Toronto local will supply union operators for moving picture shows in churches whenever asked to do so—which has been quite often recently. The exhibitors had protested against the of union operators in the churches on the ground that the churches were competing with the shows. The association had asked the Toronto local to refrain from supplying the needs of the churches for the special shows. The meeting decided to take the matter to Mr. Otto Elliott, chief theatre inspector for the Province of Ontario.

The meeting also received a letter from Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, the Canadian exchange managers, respecting the complaint by exhibitors that the rates for lithographs, heralds and other accessories were too high. After a thorough discussion, it was decided to appoint a committee to confer with the exchange managers on this subject.

They Read About Pictures

The doughboy is in the grip of the motion picture. It has him. That is the decision of the American Library Association. The boys in France and Germany want to know more about the screen, according to the latest dispatches from overseas. Two hundred copies of Homer Croy's book, "How Motion Pictures Are Made," have been ordered and are now being read by the boys in France. It is one of the most called for books in the library. Mr. Croy is now in France.

ADVERTISE!

Exhibitor Bryant Has the Right Idea

SOME valuable advice from a small town exhibitor:

"First of all take a good trade paper. Look over the reports and reviews of late film productions and buy the best you can find. ADVERTISE—ADVERTISE—but do not advertise a picture that is not worth it. Do not disappoint your patrons; when you tell them you are going to have a good show you must have it. Take your patrons into your confidence. Make each one a booster for you.

"My town here is a very small place, only 422 population, and have only been having one show each week (Saturday). I contracted with First National for some of their big pictures for two days, Friday and Saturday, billed the country like a circus and stood them up for two days to a capacity house. Am showing "Romance of Tarzan" this week, two days; following week, "The Better 'Ole." Have shown "Mickey" and cleaned up for two days.

"P. S. Nothing is too good for my patrons."

Providence Ball Graced by Selznick Stars

The Providence Moving Picture Ball, held at the Armory last Thursday evening proved a gala success. The attendance packed the Armory to the doors and the affair received considerable space in the Rhode Island newspapers.

Governor Beekman, of Rhode Island, and other city and state officials were in attendance. Olive Thomas and Eugene O'Brien, Selznick picture stars, accompanied by Mrs. Lewis J. Selznick, Myron Selznick, David Selznick, Charles R. Rogers, director of sales, and Morris Salter of the Select Boston exchange, journeyed from New York to attend the affair.

New York Court Can Handle C. K. Y. Suit

Under the terms of a decision rendered by Justice Donnelly, of the New York Supreme Court, in the suit between the C. K. Y. Corporation and Clara Kimball Young the jurisdiction of the New York courts in the suit was upheld. Miss Young has been in California all summer and it had been claimed that service of papers must be made in that state. With the Justice Donnelly decision the way is now clear for a decision on the application of the C. K. Y. Corporation for an injunction restraining Clara Kimball Young from making arrangements for production elsewhere.

South Needs Dose of "Pep" Says Wells

factor. Invariably the higher priced balcony seats for negroes at the Royal, the Victoria and the Academy are the first to be filled, matinee or night.

"Southern theatre operators should provide segregated seating arrangements for negro patrons. They are a considerable part of the population of the average Southern town. They need entertainment. White patrons do not object to them, providing the proper divisions are made. Why should exhibitors permit hundreds of thousands of dollars a year in admissions to go into really vicious diversions when an investment of a few thousand dollars, at the most, will give the necessary seating accommodations to bring that money into the film industry?

The Salesmen Handicapped

"The average Southern exhibitor can be awakened to the vast hidden resources that surround him, but it is going to require an impartial, unbiased propaganda to do it. A film salesman can do a certain amount of missionary work, but his motives are always open to question. The comparatively few really progressive exhibitors are too intently occupied with their own affairs to have the time to contribute any personal attention to a campaign that will open he minds of he indolent, indifferent type. But there should be some form of effort put forth to encourage these fellows to sit up and take a new grip on their respective enterprises, and put the force of ambition, enthusiasm, and progress behind their propositions.

"It does not seem fair to let month after month roll by with its penalty of millions of dollars kept from the business by lack of a prompting agency that will arouse the Southern exhibitors to a true appreciation of the fact that a theatre owner or operator is a potential business man in any community, with market possibilities that are not more than forty per cent developed."

Mulligan Succeeds Pico at Vicksburg

B. A. Mulligan is now manager of the Saenger Amusement Company's theatre at Vicksburg, Miss. He succeeded L. P. Pico who resigned after affiliation with the Saenger interests for several years.

Mr. Mulligan took charge at Vicksburg April 1 and has had charge of Saenger theatres at Pensacola, New Orleans and Houston. He is well known in motion picture circles throughout the South and is said to have been in the business for a dozen years.

Theatre Changes Hands

The Royal Alexandra theatre, at Lachine, Quebec, has passed into the hands of Mr I. Rosenblum, who is the proprietor of another moving picture theatre in Lachine. The Royal Alexandra has been operated by Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen for a year or more.

National Association to Censor Films

Members Representing Ninety-five Per Cent of Producers Bind Themselves to Submit Films—Will Refuse Service to Exhibitors Booking Forbidden Subjects

A CAMPAIGN of vigorous, aggressive action against undesirable motion pictures is the latest declaration of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The first moves in the campaign are the decision of the members to submit all pictures to the Association on request and to abide by its rulings; and, secondly, to refuse film service to exhibitors who show pictures distributed in violation of the Association's mandates.

Representatives of ninety-five per cent of the producers of motion pictures are declared to have been present at the Hotel Claridge meeting, which decided on the constructive censorship move. The statements issued following the meeting say nothing as to the future status of the National Board of Review, nor do the members of the Association who will act as censors or the methods that will be followed.

Will Seek Legislation

The resolutions adopted also pledge the National Association to a strenuous campaign to procure legislation and constitutional amendment that will give the right of "free speech" to the screen and prevent legalized censorship.

The new plans of the association are concisely summed up in the resolutions adopted at the meeting. They are as follows:

FIRST: That all members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shall submit to it every picture produced and distributed by them upon its request at any time prior to or after the public exhibition thereof, and shall accept any and all rulings made by said National Association in respect thereto.

SECOND: That all producers and distributors shall attach at the beginning of the first reel of every picture produced and distributed by them such mark or stamp as shall be authorized and issued by said National Association and shall remove the same upon order thereof.

THIRD: That all members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shall forthwith advise all of their exhibitors that on and after the first day of June, 1919, they shall refuse to furnish any of their product for exhibition in any theatre in which there shall be exhibited after the receipt of such notice any motion picture disapproved by the said National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, or from which eliminations have been ordered or changes in titles or sub-titles have been ordered by it, but not made; and that the purport of this Third Paragraph be incorporated in and made a part of all contracts between distributors and exhibitors hereafter entered into.

FOURTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry take all steps that may be permitted by law to prohibit the exhibitions of such pictures as are by it disapproved or from which eliminations or changes in titles or sub-titles have been ordered by it, but not made.

FIFTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shall adopt rules, regulations and orders with respect to the foregoing and provide for their proper enforcement.

SIXTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry condemns the exhibition of all pictures which are obscene, immoral, salacious, or tend to corrupt or debase morals or that are exhibited contrary to its rules, regulations or orders.

SEVENTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shall assist and cooperate with the proper authorities in any legal proceedings, whether criminal or otherwise, that may be undertaken to prohibit the exhibition of such pictures and in the prosecution of those exhibiting the same.

EIGHTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry reaffirms its unalterable opposition to any form of legalized censorship of motion pictures prior to their exhibition.

NINTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry shall endeavor to cause to be adopted an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the enforcement of any law abridging the freedom of expression through the medium of the motion picture to the same effect as is provided in Article 1 of the ten original amendments to the Constitution of the United States that were declared in force December 15, 1791, prohibiting the enactment of any law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

TENTH: That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry urge the passage of a law by the next Congress of the United States, amending that section of the Penal Law of the United States which now prohibits the transmission by mail or otherwise of indecent pictures or literature so as to clearly include the prohibition of a like transmission of obscene or indecent motion pictures.

All of the leading companies were represented at the dinner by the following:

William A. Brady
Arthur S. Friend
John C. Flinn
Walter L. Greene
J. Robert Rubin
Percy L. Waters
Herman Robbins
Ronald Reader
N. J. Baumer
J. Stuart Blackton

Government Film Started It

Regarding the meeting, William A. Brady declared "The action taken by the producers and distributors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, representative of more than ninety-five per cent. of the recognized makers of screen product, is directly impelled by the fact that throughout the United States there are being released at present for public exhibition certain films and health propaganda motion pictures which were made for the exclusive exhibition to soldier audiences in cantonments and billets, both here and abroad. These films treat of the social evil and properly distributed among the men of the army and navy aided materially the medical corps of the army and navy in their work.

"It has come to our attention, however, that these pictures, made exclusively for army distribution, and others patterned along the same lines, in some manner have become released for public exhibition before mixed audiences of men, women and children. Unjustly, the entire motion picture industry is being made to suffer by the righteous indignation of the public against these exhibitions. That the public has not been fully acquainted with the facts which led to the dissemination of such pictorial information only complicates and makes more dangerous the menace to the recognized producers in the industry.

"The motion picture industry denies emphatically the right of legislators, of local commissions, of self-constituted reviewers to censor the motion picture beyond the regulations embodied in the law of every State of the Union prohibiting the dissemination of unclean and indecent literature and pictures. Self-willed, sincere, but narrow-minded persons are seeking to fasten upon a medium of expression as great as the spoken word or the press a diabolical censorship which is un-American of late, the force of arguments of these individuals has been strengthened by the reference to the social evil pictures referred to.

"In so far as discouraging the exhibition of these pictures is concerned every self-respecting motion picture producer in the United States agrees with these proponents of legalized censorship. But we do not agree—in fact we will not tolerate—the methods of legalized control because we feel we have in our hands far greater responsibility and far greater ability to combat the evils that are against us than have any other agencies."

A meeting of the representatives of the National Board of Review and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held April 30 at the Hotel Knickerbocker, to discuss what steps should be taken to bring about closer cooperation between the Motion Picture Producing Companies and the National Board of Review.

The following joint committee for further conference was appointed: P. A. Powers of the Universal Film Co., Arthur Friend of the Famous Players-Lasky Co., J. Stewart Blackton of the Blackton Productions Incorporated, Paul Cromlin of the Inter-Ocean Film Co., and Gabriel Hess of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to represent the Motion Picture Producing Companies.

OPEN AIR HOUSE

Tampa, Fla., Gets First Neighborhood Theatre

C. E. DILLON, a vaudeville actor, decided after playing a date in Tampa, that he would locate there. He secured a lot in the heart of the Hyde Park district and erected an Airdrome. He opened Saturday, April 26.

Mr. Dillon had some opposition from residents in the district, but seems to have arrived at some kind of an agreement with them.

A "contest," with a prize of a $25 watch and season's pass to the one who could suggest the mos appropriate name for the new house, has closed, and the name selected is "Bellair."

Tampa has twelve theatres showing motion pictures, but all are located on the principal business streets, so this gives Tampa her first "neighborhood" house.

Who Started This Open Market,

BOYS, the " Open Market " is here—and with us in full strength. One of the reasons we know it is in full bloom is that already a strenuous struggle is on for the title of " Pioneer."

A few weeks ago, Fred Warren signalized his debut with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation by running an advertisement, headed " Dynamite," the effect of which was to throw the entire Hodkinson product, past, present and future, on the " Open Market." The following week J. D. Williams came to bat in the discussion on distribution started by William A. Johnston's editorials, and incidentally took occasion to tell of First National's pioneering efforts on the " Open Market." Last week Carl Laemmle took up the cudgels and related the history of Universal's special attractions, long ago placed on the market on their individual merits.

This week Fred Warren comes back with hot shot aimed at the J. D. Williams letter, while Pathe recounts some history and matters of record concerning the placing of their productions on the " Open Market." Who's next?

The Gloves Are Off

The letter submitted by Fred Warren goes to the subject with a roaring bang. Here it is in full:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

This letter is written to The News to keep Mr. J. D. Williams, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, from getting off the main line and on to a sidetrack. Or, in less technical language, to keep him from barking away out of the back window at night and peppering the old man's lingerie that he mistakes for an intruder.

In The News of April 19 Mr. W. W. Hodkinson made a detailed and sympathetic analysis of the principle of co-operative booking by exhibitor circuits. He applied the acid to bring to light the elements that will menace and tear down any co-operative booking organization that follows in the footsteps of those purely commercial producers of motion pictures who have to grind out product linked together like sausages to feed a distributing machine which the producers own and must sustain with a given number of releases to meet its overhead charges of maintenance.

In the week's previous issue of The News I had sponsored a Hodkinson announcement headed " Dynamite," and the explosive that lay hidden in some very simple elements of the English language was that the W. W. Hodkinson organization had declared for wide-open booking; had begun to sell each of its past, present and future pictures singly on the basis of individual merit.

J. D. Williams has the power and ability to reason " on a straight line; " to shoot directly at a target, and hit the spot at which he is aiming. But in The News of April 26, in his retort to W. W. Hodkinson, Mr. Williams makes an oblique reply. Before pulling the trigger he closed his eyes, and merely scratched his original target. The remainder of his shot went wild and spattered over my Hodkinson announcement labeled " Dynamite."

It was a matter of first concern to Mr. Williams, apparently, that some other organization might take away from First National the credit for being the initial organization to sell pictures one at a time on a basis of individual merit. Thereupon he says

" From its inception First National has had no other policy than that of open booking. We have not made a release by any other method. . . . Mr. Hodkinson has it within his power to do a good deal to foster the open market, but why enshadow his plans in an announcement of them that steals the thunder of someone else? I wonder what has been the thoughts of exhibitors who read the obvious inference in that adv.—exhibitors who, for more than a year, have been booking First National releases on an open market, independent basis."

The answer to this from Mr. Williams is to set down on paper the actual releasing calendar of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. During its 23 months of operation First National has had a total of but 21 pictures, inclusive of Mr. Chaplin's few and very excellent comedies. The First National releases in entirety, listed opposite their days of release, are:

" On Trial."
" Alimony."
" The Life Mask " (Petrova).
" The Light Within " (Petrova).
" Daughter of Destiny " (Petrova).
" The Fall of the Romanoffs " (Nance O'Neil).
" Empty Pockets " (Lytell).
" Passing of the Third Floor Back " (Forbes Robertson).
" Tempered Steel " (Petrova).
" Tarzan of the Apes."
" My Four Years in Germany " (Gerard).
" The Sign, Invisible " (Edgar Lewis).
" A Dog's Life " (Chaplin).
" Pershing's Crusaders " (U. S. Official).
" Italy's Flaming Front " (Italian Official).
" The Panther Woman " (Petrova).
" Shoulder Arms " (Chaplin).
" Virtuous Wives " (Anita Stewart).
" Our Teddy " (Colonel Roosevelt).
" A Midnight Romance " (Anita Stewart).

With the exception of five, Petrova productions, three of them in consecutive release separated by intervals; two Anita Stewart productions since December, 1918, whose owner-producer would not permit them to be sold collectively; and two Chaplins, released months apart, what could First National have sold in series? Or, except to its own franchise-holders, what could First National have sold to outside exhibitors in general under programs? It could not have sold Chaplin in program or star series—definitely and certainly not program—for Mr. Chaplin knows his values too well to see them delivered in one package.

Of course, First National has been committed to the principle of selling pictures singly. I don't debate that; nobody does. But what could First National have done but sell singly? Even now, what can it do but sell singly, until some of the new product for which it has contracted is delivered or approximately ready for delivery? It is attaining the point where it will have a volume of product, and it doubtless will continue to sell all of its output individually. Not until it attains the volume of product, has it any moral rights to crow over pioneering into the open booking market.

Any and all states rights men who have started out in some regional exchange with a single release, or with three or four in the course of a year, have been " committed from the first to open booking." What else could they be? First National has been in the same position. Its irregularity in having releases ready for marketing in the past prevents it from arrogating to itself the credit for pioneering.

What can be said for the Hodkinson espousal of wide-open booking can be said quickly and to the point:

We have not announced that we are the first company to adopt the open booking policy. We have said, and continue to say, that we are the first company in the industry offering, or that has ever offered, a sustained volume of productions on the wide-open booking basis. We have thirty-six multi-reel productions released in the year prior to April 20, 1919. It is of lesser consequence that we throw those open to open booking. But we have in excess of thirty multi-reel productions to be released at regular intervals in the twelve months beginning April 20, 1919.

It is an impregnable fact that W. W. Hodkinson has led in this policy, with a sufficient volume of product to make his leadership valid, and that others who are now espousing and in the next few weeks will espouse open booking will be following Hodkinson.

That is the point I wish to make: To establish precedence. Many so-called leaders of the motion picture industry have been following Hodkinson for twelve years.

Cordially,
F. B. WARREN, Vice-President,
W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Anyway?

Hot Shot from Fred Warren—Statement from Pathe—Who's Next?

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president of Pathe, goes goes back to matters of record in his statement of the booking policy of his company. Advertisements appearing in MOTION PICTURE NEWS are the evidence he presents. The statement follows:

With the strong possibility that open booking will be practically universal in the industry with this coming fall, it is interesting to note that one of the large companies, Pathe, announced an open booking policy in a series of advertisements in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in March and April of 1918. To Pathe, therefore, goes the credit for the foresight that enabled it to put into practice, so many months ago, a policy which, now events have proven, is based on sound logic and business common sense.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, last March made a careful investigation of conditions throughout the trade and by letter and telegrams communicated with representative exhibitors in all parts of the country. Among the men who replied to Mr. Brunet's questioner at length, were S. Barrett McCormack, William Sievers, Harold Franklin, Turner and Dahnken, E. Mandelbaum, Ernest Boehringer, Thomas Saxe, Nathan Gordon, Howard S. Clemmer, Ralph Ruffner, Thomas Soriero, and many others.

The demand for open booking as expressed by the opinion of the majority of those questioned, was so apparent that Pathe puts its productions upon the Open Booking Plan on April 15, 1918.

Mr. Brunet summed up the reasons for this radical move in a statement issued at that time as follows: "All exhibitors who have contracts for Pathe plays will on April 15 and thereafter, be allowed to select Pathe plays in accordance with the policy referred to above, beginning with the next feature they are to run, while exhibitors whose contracts with Pathe plays do not go into effect until April 15, will be permitted to select their pictures from the beginning. On the other hand, all exhibitors will be sure of a Pathe feature every two weeks if they want it, thus eliminating the uncertainty of the so-called 'wild cat' plan of booking. The natural result of this liberal policy should be an increase in quality of productions, and the playing of each picture by exhibitors on a basis of merit means that the best pictures will earn the money they deserve without being handicapped by the weaker ones; while the latter will be placed upon the market at a price commensurate with their value."

The Pathe Open Booking System has now been running for over a year. The best evidence of its success is the fact that Mr. Brunet plans to continue it. At the time that it was inaugurated, it was fully appreciated it meant that the weaker pictures would suffer by being thrown into direct competition with the best pictures put out through the same organization, but it was thought, and events have justified the belief, that the strong pictures would do a business sufficiently above the normal to more than make up for the difference. It is interesting to note that during the last twelve months Pathe has done with "Common Clay" and other pictures of the class, a much larger business than was ever possible under the old program system. It is evident, then, that with cold business figures as the basis for comparison, the tendency most inevitably would be to eliminate weaker pictures entirely and thus to advance the quality of every picture released, and this is what has happened with Pathe. The good pictures have not been compelled to bear the burden of putting over an inferior product. The exhibitor has been pleased with this system because he has been enabled to take as many or as few pictures as he wanted, and to pay what the picture was worth. He has not been buying "a pig in a poke;" he has been able to select his pictures for himself, and thus, in turn, has given his audiences, in many instances, better shows.

When Mr. Brunet was seen at his office and questioned regarding this Open Booking Plan, of which he was a true pioneer, he said, in part, as follows: "We are offering to the exhibitors to-day, pictures singly or in blocks, as few or as many as they want. We have many customers who prefer the program system, and we cater to their wishes and needs by furnishing to them a complete program. Conditions in various parts of the country vary so that it is obvious a booking system which would be very desirable in one town would be undesirable in another, and our Selective Service Plan is sufficiently broad and elastic to enable us to adequately supply the needs of any exhibitor anywhere." We are doing business with many exhibitors to-day on features whom we found it impossible to interest in the days when we adhered to the program plan of booking. Such exhibitors are now playing our features of the class of "Common Clay," paying us good prices for them, and doing splendidly with them. The Open Booking Plan, then, has been of direct and decided help to our Feature Department. Personally, I am strongly of the belief that it is the only fair way of doing business—to sell a man just what he wants and no more than he wants, and to allow him the privilege of selection and rejection. That the system has had a very excellent effect upon the quality of the Pathe releases is very apparent to us. When we changed our booking policy, we felt that exhibitors who were being compelled to sign long-term contracts—were being made to "hold the bag." We knew that it would only be a question of time before conditions would have to change, and we determined to anticipate that time. We made many friends by so doing, and we lost none of our old ones. It has interested me greatly to learn that competing organizations have at last either come around to our way of thinking, or at least given ample evidence that they are considering doing so.

"The Pathe policy of to-day may be summed up in a few words; have something to interest every exhibitor, give to him what he wants and that at prices which he can afford to pay. We can think of no fairer policy."

Rothapfel Shows First Program

First Unit Program to Be Given Premiere Showing at 10 O'clock Morning of May 9

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL'S first Unit Programme is slated to be given its premiere showing to the trade and press Friday morning, May 9, at 10:00 o'clock, at the Rialto Theatre, according to an announcement made by Frank G. Hall, vice-president, Rothapfel Picture Corporation, whose interests, Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, Inc., are handling the distribution of the Rothapfel Unit. With the premiere of Mr. Rothapfel's production, members of the trade and press will witness the debut of the most distinctive and novel programme of pantomimic performance ever presented in any theatre at any time or place for its presentation gives to the screen the first unified conception of completeness in a motion picture theatre's programme, created by the same hand, emanating from and produced under the supervision of the same creator—Samuel L. Rothapfel, exhibitor, producer, musical director and the first to put into actual practice and to create a complete programme of motion pictures with musical accompaniment.

In presenting the Rothapfel Programme for the first time to any audience, Mr. Hall and Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager for the Hall interests, have considered, not only the Metropolitan trade and press but arrangements have been made whereby a representative of every important newspaper and motion picture periodical in the United States will be present so that the press of the entire country can give its own opinion of Mr. Rothapfel's first efforts in the production field. Special night letters were sent, this week, to the exhibitors throughout the country, inviting them to be present at the showing and it is expected that the representation of exhibitors of the country will show a big percentage. The invited guests, including the press and exihibitors who have booked week stands on the Programme will remain in New York as Mr. Rothapfel's and Mr. Hall's guests and everything will be done to place the wel-

Sol Lesser and Wm. Seabury Speak Up

Independent Distributor Takes Hand in Discussion on "Open Market Versus Program," and Finds Place in Sun for Both—Seabury Advances Cooperative Plan

AS we promised you last week—Sol Lesser has come to bat with one of the most interesting contributions yet to the discussion on film distribution started by William A. Johnston's recent editorials. The Pacific Coast film man—whose activities really stretch all over the country at times—takes up the question from the viewpoint formed by his own experience, and presents a cool analysis of "Open Market" and program necessities.

William M. Seabury, recently associated with the Film Clearing House, advances an ambitious plan for cooperative booking and distribution. Though the scheme may seem to border on the Utopian, Mr. Seabury puts the force of good argument behind it.

CINEMA CLUB

Semi-Annual Novelty Dance Big Success

SATURDAY evening, April 26, was a happy occasion for camera men and their host of friends when the semi-annual dance and Novelty Ball of the Cinema Camera Club was held at the Estee Motion Picture studio in New York City.

The aggressive entertainment committee in charge was composed of Lyman Broening, George Coudert, A. L. Ansbacher, J. Cronjager, Lewis Dunmyre, Harry Keepers, Arthur Quinn, Burton Steene and Lawrence Williams. Messrs. Spitz and Luck gave generous cooperation.

Harry Cherkoff's orchestra furnished music for a varied dancing program of twenty-four numbers and cameras registered many scenes which will be shown later.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

I am very thankful for the opportunity you have extended for an expression of my views on the open market situation; not so much because self-expression is attractive to me in itself, as for the reason that I believe the question involved is at the present moment of vital interest to the entire motion picture industry and one requiring first, illumination, then analysis, and finally the acceptance of a conclusion that will represent a standard of opinion to the whole trade.

For the "open market," like the gods of old, are made to represent many things, but singularly, rarely reflects the open market itself. I believe the very name was adopted to throw sand in the eyes of the exhibitor; a figure of speech, ay mere verbal camouflage, a phrased substitution for the real open market demanded so long and so unanimously by all forward-looking exhibitors. But the genuine open market will come during the next few months; indeed, its presence, materializing in the new trend toward fewer and better productions now heralded on all sides, and in the freedom from distributor-dictation, is already crossing the threshold of the exchange door.

I confidently feel that I can speak with some authority on what the immediate future will bring forth, because in this industry, as in every other, the causes of one year develop their effects in the next, and the forces that have taken root during the past twelve months indicate a vigorous growth in the period before us of the open market plan of operation. Every exhibiting condition, every box-office phase of the past year has revealed an intensely motivating demand on the part of large and small exhibitors for free and open selection of product. I am familiar with this process of exhibiting thought, and this fruition of exhibiting desire and demand, for, unlike the distributors who sit behind imposing desks in New York City and judge national conditions theoretically, or at best, from maps hanging on their walls, I have made it a consistent policy to mingle constantly with exhibitors, to journey over large territories and to familiarize myself by direct contact and assiduous study with exhibitors' problems and grievances; and frankly, ninety per cent. of those grievances have been directed against the present systems of booking, which vary only in the degree of their inadequacy to the requirements of the times, and which yet are consistent only in their general ineffectiveness and inflexibility.

"Can't Do Everything"

Unquestionably, the majority of evils that beset the present distributing systems arise from a common cause—the practice which developed a few years ago resulting in producing-distributing combinations. Very few organizations of strength and scope are today free from this undermining influence; and even those which are free are vitally affected by the methods of the others. As has innumerably been reiterated, an organization cannot do its full justice to the trade unless it concentrates upon one particular branch of the business; and the humorous part of the sad situation is the fact that even those companies which are directly responsible for this deplorable condition, which, in fact, initiated it, have frequently made that statement. It is in the knowledge and recognition of the principle that complete success and genuine service to the trade could only be accomplished by a strict adherence to one definite sphere of effort that I have stood distinctly alone as a distributor, and am neither an exhibitor nor a producer.

My plan of open-market distribution is similar to that of a real-estate agent who sells property; in other words, the middle man. When I buy a picture I do not have to sell it to my own theatres, because I do not operate any theatres.

If the trade would only stop deceiving itself, and admit, what it must already realize, that a person cannot buy and sell to himself and do justice to both sides. It is only natural to favor that end which represents the greatest personal profit! Therefore, the open booking attempted by exhibitor-controlled bodies is an ineffectual arrangement at best, and at worst a base deceit, because there can be no successful competition on the part of opposing exhibitors, and the producer cannot resultantly secure all the revenue he is justly entitled to.

Open booking cannot be handled adequately or successfully by a program exchange for the reason that when an exchange so constituted is assigned to distribute a "special," the efforts of the entire sales organization are concentrated upon that production and devoted almost wholly toward making a showing upon it, which distracts them from their regular and systematic efforts of promoting the program—and the program suffers; suffers not only currently, not only during the sale of the special, but for a long time thereafter, because the machinery has been radically changed in the interim, and it requires a reverse adjustment to accommodate the accustomed business of the organization. Not only does the exchange lose in efficiency during this period of transition from one definite policy to another, but the exhibitor loses in proportion through lost or impaired service. Another dilemma which results from this shifting of gears, so to speak (for after all an exchange is only a machine), is the embarrassment caused for both distributor and exhibitor in the very question of the special so handled. The exchange must favor the exhibitor who uses its program or the exhibitor will cancel it. Now, then, how can this be termed the successful open-market solution?

Open booking can only be undertaken and successfully prosecuted on the plan that I have established, with, I may be pardoned in adding, satisfaction to the exhibitor and gratification to myself. I exploit only that kind of productions which can be individually distributed and exhibited. "Mickey" will gross $60,000 in California. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" receipts in the eleven Western States will approach $350,000 in net rentals. Should either of these pictures have been exploited under the only other plan now in existence in the industry—i. e., through the program exchange, these totals must necessarily have been lower for the reasons enumerated herein.

Room for Both

Exhibitors with their hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in buildings and equipment, cannot blind themselves to the fact that the program feature is the basis upon which their structure has stood. They must have a program. How else could they determine weeks in advance that they would have enough product to keep their theatres going? This conclusion, of course, is predicated upon the theory of one-week maximum runs, and two-day average runs throughout the country.

The established program systems occupy in this connection a definite position with a secure foothold for the future. The World Film Company, to my mind, has settled its position for the future definitely by public announcements that it is the intention of the company to continue upon the program policy. I predict that other distributing organizations handling program quality of pictures, even though they attempt what they call an open-market condition, will resign themselves to the only practical way of handling program service—that of a definite number of pictures per year on definite dates of release, this established system permitting the exhibitor the assurance of a definite supply, and at the same time leaving opportunity of shelving, to accommodate the open-market picture, which, in every sense, must be big in its advertising possibilities and box-office values.

The special feature, or big or unique production, for which advanced admission prices can logically be charged, or even when only regular prices can logically be charged, will gross much more if individually exploited, and it is this type of production, with individual publicity or sales effort behind it, that is now most eagerly sought by exhibitors, for three reasons: first, the profit from the run; second, the prestige received by the theatre which reflects itself in greater profits during a longer period of time; and, third, should the competitor of the exhibitor in question secure the special, it effects the exhibitor who is using the regular program to such an extent that he shows no profit during the competitive run, but, on the contrary, is apt to show a loss on account of decreased attendance.

So the "special" is a trade necessity, and the "special" or fully open market exchange is equally a trade requirement, because it is designed and maintained to give the service to the exhibitor which most conforms with the policy of distinctiveness and individualiy which prompted the production of the special in the first instance.

Very truly yours,
SOL L. LESSER.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

I succumb to the temptation presented by your invitation to contribute to the interesting discussion which you have started with reference to exhibitor co-operation.

I have given the subject a great deal of thought for a long time, and I take pleasure in being the first, so far as I know, to suggest and advocate the adoption of Rochdale co-operation by the picture theatre owners of the country, and indeed of the world.

Few words are, perhaps, so abused as the word "co-operation."

To-day in many different fields of activity, enterprises, which in reality are established and maintained only for individual gain and profit, are masquerading under the name of co-operation.

As I use the term I mean the system of co-operation established by the old weavers of Rochdale, England, in 1843.

The movement started by these old weavers was described by Harry W. Laidler in an article on the British Co-operative movement as follows:

"Two pence a week this little band resolved to put aside for the venture. Two pence gradually grew to $140, and with that a dilapidated old store in a back street known as Toad Lane, Rochdale, was hired. The Rochdale pioneers, as they were called, bought a few packages of flour, butter, sugar and oatmeal with which to supply the store, and finally got up sufficient courage to fling open the doors amid the jeers of surrounding storekeepers and the cat-calls of street urchins. Monday and Saturday nights the store was kept open. Its first week's sale amounted to the munificent sum of $10. One member acted as salesman, one as cashier, another as secretary, and the fourth as treasurer.

"Tenderly the members coaxed along their small establishment. Many a conference was held over its probable demise. It did not die, however. To the surprise and wrath of merchants and the joy of the few faithful, it actually grew.

Theatres Now Building Listed on page 3108

"In 1914, seventy years after, if the original pioneers had been still alive, they would have found that their dream had grown in England and Scotland into no less than 1,400 retail stores with many branches; into two enormous wholesale societies which supplied the retail 'co-ops' with almost every conceivable article of common use, and which was, in turn, supplied from over a half hundred factories owned by them. They would have found annual sales for the factories, wholesale and retail stores of no less than $650,000,000, and a membership of over three millions (in 1917 over four millions) comprising, with the families of the members, between one-fourth and one-fifth of the population of Great Britain.

"They would have discovered that the little capital of $140 had grown into one of over $300,000,000; that the four employees had increased to nearly 150,000; and that the surplus divided at the end of the year to the employees who purchased their supplies from the 'co-ops' had jumped from a few paltry dollars to more than seventy-one millions."

I feel that any movement which from practically nothing has achieved such extraordinary results and assumed such huge proportions must be and is based upon principles which are thoroughly sound.

The cardinal principles which control consumers' co-operation are extremely few and simple. One of the principles is that invested capital shall receive only legal interest as a return upon the money invested. Another is that every shareholder has but one vote, whether he owns one or a hundred shares. Another is that the goods consumed by the members are purchased at wholesale as cheaply as possible and resold to the members at the ordinary market price. The difference between the cost and the selling price, less actual cost of operation, is distributed to the members, not as a profit, but as a saving, and not in proportion to the capital invested, but in proportion to the goods consumed by each member.

Permit me to point out that these principles are not socialistic in character.

Mr. Seabury then narrates his experiences following the organization of the Film Clearing House, in attempting to show producers the value of co-operative physical handling of their films. Deciding that the solution must be sought still further, he declares:

I am convinced that consumers' (exhibitors) co-operation is the only remedy.

There should be organized in each of twenty localities or film centers an exhibitors' co-operative corporation. Each local should be incorporated under a co-operative law based on Rochdale principles, such as exists in the State of New York.

The purpose of the local organization should be to create a national co-operative corporation to be owned in part by each local and to which delegates or representatives would be sent periodically.

The locals should be the ones to create and to own and operate the national organization, instead of allowing a national organization to own twenty branches throughout the country.

Each local ought to have as large a membership as possible.

Each member should, with the consent of the producer, assign to his local his existing contracts for product, and thereafter he his local organization, which, in turn, would deal through the national corporation. would only contract for pictures through

The local would acquire physical facilities to handle the film for its members within a specified radius which would correspond to the territory now supplied by one of the branch offices of the national distributing system.

When a new contract was made with a producer by the national corporation, the national would say in substance to the producer:

"We can offer you a contract to supply so many hundreds of our members with your pictures during the current year, but you must deliver them only through exchanges which our locals own or control.

"Our members do not propose to pay the cost of allowing you and many other concerns to maintain a useless sales force or a useless exchange system at our expense.

"If you wish to waste your money, you have the right to do so, but you may not waste ours. Therefore, make the contract proposed, or decline it, as you prefer."

At first the producer would talk of oppression and coercion—of the destruction of his business, of illegality and a variety of other things, and then he would see the light.

He would see that the co-operative plan meant a giant consumer, an immense customer who wanted to buy his product and who really required nothing unreasonable of him.

He would see that in serving this customer he would not only save the cost of physical distribution, but of salesmanship as well.

And what would happen to his sales force and to his chain of exchanges and to his investment in these extravagant luxuries?

As soon as the co-operative enterprise was large enough to give the producer a really large contract, the producer could afford to reduce his sales force to supply those exhibitors who were not in the co-operative movement, and as these grew less and less in number it would become increasingly painful to maintain his exchanges and less advantageous to keep money invested in such an extravagant enterprise, and then he would enter a clearing house with a large number of his brother producers, and probably agree that he should have done so many years before.

I make no reference to any particular clearing house. If a group of producers with sufficient volume of product to justify the maintenance of one distributing organization should prefer to distribute under one roof, they could exercise that preference with profit to themselves.

As the co-operative movement grew, each local would acquire its own physical facilities. One set of exchanges would thus be established throughout the country, and any producer could use the exchanges. The exhibitors would be delighted to reduce the cost of service to their members by extending their distribution facilities to all producers who wished to pay the cost of the service, plus a reasonable profit, to serve those who were not members of the co-operative enterprise.

And as the movement grew in number of members and in strength, producing plants would doubtless be acquired or bought, and the history of consumers' co-operation—a history resplendent with many examples of efficiency, economy and immense power and influence—would be repeated in the picture industry.

And the interesting part of this prescrip-

Industry Again Leads in Loan Drive

Motion Picture Interests Unitedly and Most Effectively Aid in Government's Victory Note Campaign from Coast to Coast in Usual Energetic Style

ADDED zest, calculated to inspire even the most penurious to come to the aid of their country, has been effectively injected by every diversified interest in the motion picture industry throughout the United States.

Not a stone has been left unturned and not an angle has been overlooked by the exhibitors, artists, producers and distributors in their whole souled efforts to show the Government and its people that none of the patriotism shown during the first four campaigns has grown cold or lukewarm.

Los Angeles glowingly describes the innovations introduced by the film folks of the West Coast. New York motion picture interests advanced the loan in great leaps and bounds.

From every section of the country comes reports so voluminous that a series of books the size of the Encyclopædia Brittanica would not be large enough to chronicle all the valiant and successful efforts put forth by the motion picture interests to demonstrate that first, last and all the time, it is an effective, active, working unit in furthering Government propaganda.

Los Angeles "Pep"

With all the "pep," enthusiasm and optimism that chracterized the cmpaigns of the motion picture industry of the west coast in previous Liberty Loan drives, the people of the industry set to work on the Victory Loan, to gain a quota set by the Southern California Liberty Loan Committee of $1,250,000 to be purchased by film people, and $1,750,000 to be sold by them.

Besides the various strenuous campaigns being carried on under the supervision of D. W. Griffith in all of the studios where complete organizations have been effected, the film people are taking part in numerous meetings, and thereby very substantially aiding the State Loan Committee in placing in the minds of the people of Souhern California the very urgent need of oversubscribing the $33,000,000 quota allotted Los Angeles. The quota of the Industrial Division is $20,000,000, of which amount the film industry is to sell sixteen per cent., or approximately ten per cent. of the entire quota of Los Angeles.

The enthusiastic manner in which the film people started in to sell and subscribe, is best illustrated by the work of the William S. Hart and National Film Corporation studios. Before the beginning of the drive, General Manager Isadore Bernstein, of the National, learned the quota of that studio had been fixed at $25,000.

A noon meeting was held at the studio where a letter from D. W. Griffith was read, and in twenty minutes $34,000 had been subscribed, the list being headed by $25,000 taken by William Parsons, president of the National. The opening Monday morning of the drive, William S. Hart held a meeting at his studio, and every member purchased bonds, the total amount being $36,000, of which amount Mr. Hart took $30,000.

New York "Ginger"

Escorted by the band of the 152nd Depot Brigade of Camp Upton, Theda Bara went to the booth of the Stage Women's War Relief, in Victory Way, Park avenue, New York, and sold $100,000 worth of bonds in less than an hour.

This was the record sale at the booth since the opening of the loan campaign, and was especially notable because Friday was the coldest April day in years, and the Fox star had to compete with a cutting wind and a flurry of snow.

On May 25 the New York newspapers announced that the Famous Players-Lasky organization would take motion pictures of all bond buyers in front of the Aeolian Building in the window of which, the company has been staging "stunts" to swell the sale of Victory notes since the opening day of the drive. By noon thousands of fans gathered on Forty-second street to break into motion pictures and have a free "test" made.

The idea of taking pictures of bond buyers proved a most tempting bait to motion picture fans who came from Brooklyn, New Jersey, Long Island, and other outlying points to appear in motion pictures. Over $50,000 worth of bonds were sold.

Three of the biggest dreadnoughts of the great fleet that kept Germany bottled up in Kiel harbor have the services of three Goldwyn stars to swell their receipts in the effort the navy is making to fill the peace chest for the Government.

Madge Kennedy is helping the Oklahoma, Mabel Normand is putting all her effort into work for the Delaware, and Geraldine Farrar, just ending her season at the Metropolitan Opera House, has given her name and effort to the Wyoming.

Universal Assists

Mae Murray is the star of the Universal Fifth Liberty Loan picture, "The Taming of Kaiser Bill." The picture is being distributed by the Universal Exchanges for use during the drive.

Dorothy Phillips dropped the role of Universal's leading actress, and entered the ranks of the workers for Uncle Sam in the Fifth Victory Loan.

Exhibitors of Buffalo have jumped into the Victory Loan campaign "with both feet," and have not only turned over their screens and stages to the loan workers, but have erected a theatrical booth in the downtown section where visiting stars sell bonds. Harold B. Franklin superintended the erection of the Victory Memorial at Lafayette square, which was dedicated with impressive ceremonies.

Among the local exhibitors who are members of various committees are Earl L. Crabb, Ira M. Mosher, J. H. Michael, Harold B. Franklin and E. O. Wineberg. C. A. Taylor, R. C. Fox, Frank S. Hopkins, H. Webster and Edward Hayes are prominent workers among the exchange men. Mr. Fox is chairman of the Film Distribution Committee.

The local committee is relying on the theatre men of Buffalo to raise a goodly share of the city's quota, which is over $45,000,000. The quota of the theatre men will be raised, of course, and oversubscribed as it has been in all former loans. Mr. Franklin is planning to devote some of his famous stage settings at Shea's Hippodrome to boosting the Victory Loan.

come sign in as large and meaning electrics as is possible through the medium of true hospitality.

The Rothapfel Unit Programme will be given in its entirety—from overture to curtain— with the full Rialto orchestra giving the musical accompaniment as conceived and arranged by Mr. Rothapfel. Announcement will not be made of the subject matter of the picture programme but it is said that Mr. Rothapfel has ready for projection some of the most novel and unique subjects ever screened, each with a special musical accompaniment, interpreting the sentiments and speaking for the action. The feature number of the programme is said to be one of the finest examples of dramatic expose, giving Mr. Rothapfel's own individual ideas as to special effects and dramatic interpretation by an all-star cast of the screen's best artists.

tion is that the only way to profit by it is to become a co-operator. For in the last analysis the exhibitor will reap all the profit between and including the two extremes of production and exhibition.

I see nothing to occasion alarm to the producer in the plan proposed.

After all, as I have said, the public is the ultimate consumer, and it is a wise producer who caters to that audience first, last and all the time.

I think it is clear that, however, many people may now assert that there is nothing new in Rochdale co-operation in its application to motion pictures, the fact remains that there is not—although in my judgment there ought to be—such a movement in active operation to-day.

I think the discussion which has been begun in your paper will prove of value to the industry, and I am glad of the opportunity to participate in it.

Yours sincerely,

W. M. SEABURY.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Advertise—But the Hundred Per Cent Way

IF there has been needed any advice that everyone with anything to sell should advertise here it is—direct from the government. The newspapers have just been carrying the advice signed by Secretary William B. Wilson of the Department of Labor. And here are a couple of sentences from that advice:

"If you are not advertising, then advertise, because it saves money for you and it reduces the price to the consumer.

"Advertising prevents profiteering. It insures honest profits and makes them permanent."

There is nothing particularly new about the government advertising. Everyone knows that advertising won the war, that the Liberty Loans would not have been possible and that all the great fund raising movements would have failed without the use of the newspapers of the country. But it is new for one of the government departments to come out and advise the business interests of the country to advertise, and, as the statement adds:

"Start your campaign right now."

AND this applies just as much to motion pictures as to the cake of soap or piece of cheese. You have the opportunity now to start your campaign, to make new patrons for your theatre and to bring those who now come to your house now and then regularly.

The after-the-war feeling certainly applies more strongly to the general feeling toward motion pictures than anything else. The photoplay houses have the satisfaction not only of knowing that they have done their big share in helping to win the war, but they also have the satisfaction of knowing that everyone also knows it.

Further than that their role of continuing to stand for the best of Americanism, order and sanity in government is recognized. So long as the motion picture theatre exists there can be no Bolsheviki movement in this country. So long as films continue to be run every movement that deserves encouragement can be carried through with the united efforts of the press and the screen.

And in carrying out the propaganda during the war the motion picture has made new friends for itself because thousands of people in this country and thousands of the boys who went to Europe became familiar with the product of the screen for the first time in their lives. One authority has estimated that in the past two years not less than ten million new friends have been made for the photoplay.

MOST theatre managers know that they should advertise. A greater percentage of them are doing so but too large a share of them merely think that they are advertising. They are simply occupying a certain amount of space and are not putting over any sales argument. They are simply listing their pictures for sale instead of selling them. They announce the great special feature today just about the same way that they did the two-reeler four years ago.

It is the exception rather than the rule where the manager can afford to hire an advertising man for his theatre. In most cases the manager himself is without experience in that sort of work and so he relies merely on the tender mercies of the printer.

We have just started here the finest school of advertising that could be imagined, tuition in which you could not buy, but is free. You are having here as instructors, or rather as lecturers the best advertisers in the whole nation. They are not attempting to sit up and tell you what you should do, but they are telling you what they are doing and WHY. And the big thing about it is that they are winning success by the policies that they are following.

Ideas of some of them will be found in conflict. You will see one successful manager advocating this policy and another the opposite one, but these articles will show you why they have found the plan they use the best one.

And from this wonderful forum of exhibitor though you are going to get the cream of all the ideas. Any text book, any mere set of rules that attempts to give you hard and fast rules for your advertising is bunk. Conditions change, necessities differ and opportunities vary too greatly to follow any set line.

WE want to endorse the government's advice to you to advertise. We have been advocating that with all our energy ever since this department has been started.

But we want you to advertise in ways that will bring results. Ninety per cent of the managers can increase the efficiency of the space that they are now using.

In a great share of the communities the theatre managers, by united action, can gain greater cooperation from the newspapers and more attention to the photoplay, and a consequent increase in the public interest.

We are devoting many pages in each issue to advertising problems. We are anxious to give you the benefit of every help in our power. Our criticism of your advertising comes to you either in these pages or in a personal letter.

We are ready to help you plan new campaigns, to aid you in setting your policies before the public, to starting movements for new interest in your house.

We say advertise—persistently and intelligently. And if we can help in any way to make the advertising better worth while—

JUST WRITE.

Midnight Matinee and Dance in the Lobby

Unique Stunt With "A Midnight Romance"

A MIDNIGHT matinee, preceded by a dance in the theatre lobby, converted into a miniature replica of the grand ball room of the Hotel Alexandria of Los Angeles, was the means employed by A. J. Moeller, manager of the Theatre DeLuxe, one of Detroit's prettiest neighborhood houses, to create atmosphere for "A Midnight Romance," second of the special attractions starring Anita Stewart to be distributed by First National.

The grand ball room of the Hotel Alexandria was the setting used by Lois Weber in directing several of the big scenes in the production. The action of the story that was photographed in this setting also takes place at midnight. This combination of facts impressed Mr. Moeller with the possibility of their adaptation to an advertising scheme.

The second Anita Stewart special began a three days' run at the Theatre DeLuxe on April 22. The grand ball and midnight matinee were announced for Wednesday, April 23. Mr. Moeller gave serious study to this point and finally decided that this arrangement would give him publicity for the opening day, in anticipation of the event, its realization on the second day, and the aftermath of word of mouth advertising would keep interest at high pitch for the third and concluding day of the run.

With a set of lobby display stills as his guide Mr. Moeller converted the theatre lobby into a replica of the hotel ball room. A concert stand was arranged, and it was announced that dance music would be provided by the theatre orchestra, directed by Earl Frazer Newberry.

The stunt appealed to Detroit so strongly as a novelty that the Detroit Journal published a front page news story heralding the dance and the midnight matinee. In his advertising for the event Mr. Moeller explained that 'matinee' was a derivative of the word 'matin,' meaning early morning.

So thoroughly did patrons enter into the spirit of the unique overture provided for the production that long before the hour set for the foyer dance the neighborhood of Kercheval and Parkview, where the DeLuxe is located, was swarming with parked automobiles while in front of the theatre, in the lobby and rest rooms women in elaborate evening gowns added color and life to the scene. Present as well were scores of shop girls, stenographers, and office clerks, in trim shirtwaists or suits, each with an escort.

A. J. Moeller, manager Theatre De Luxe, Detroit

Harry Scott, Detroit manager of the First National Exchange, with his partner, was the first on the lobby dance floor as the orchestra started a waltz promptly at 11 o'clock. Several hundred patrons of the evening performances remained to attend the dance. As a result the lobby was entirely inadequate to accommodate the throngs.

Mr. Moeller obtained a result quite unexpected in addition to the valuable publicity the plan gave to "A Midnight Romance." With his house staff he mingled with the dancers, listening to their remarks on the stunt and about the theatre as a place of amusement.

"That hour of dancing," he said, "was productive of more really good suggestions than I could have obtained in a year by dotting the house with suggestion boxes. It gave me the opportunity for a close-up study of what my patrons want on the screen. This little experiment succeeded far beyond my expectations.

"I saw scores of faces among the dancers that were absolutely strange to me. And I know pretty well every regular or occasional patron of the theatre. The midnight matinee and dance novelty attracted many men and women who never before had been inside the DeLuxe. I made it a point to have just a word of greeting for every one of them whom I could reach before the matinee started at twelve o'clock. It was my chance to make them feel at home and to inject the personal element into the assembly.

"There was a tribute to the production, the star and the real interest of the throngs who jammed the lobby during the hour of dancing that not more than a dozen couples left the theatre when the doors were opened at ten minutes of twelve and the patrons were asked to purchase their admission tickets and find their seats."

Detroit newspapermen gave the DeLuxe and Moeller another story the next day.

Dallas Newspaper Issues Easter Motion Picture Section

Only a few weeks ago we commented on the improvement that had been made by the Dallas Times-Herald in the handling of photoplay matter in its Sunday issue. Now it has shown another piece of enterprise by devoting a section to motion pictures on Easter Sunday.

Across the first page of the section is the slogan: "This is amusement week—enjoy yourselves, everybody." Then there is an editorial calling attention to the fact that Dallas gets all of the very best pictures and that no real screen favorite misses a visit to the city. All of the theatres increase their advertising for this issue and several of the exchanges use quarter pages telling where their pictures are shown. There is a total of eight pages of news and advertising matter.

Keeping Publicity An Honest Profession

By C. M. Pincus

Publicity Representative, California Theatre, San Francisco

PUBLICITY is an honest profession. It is worth practicing to the best of your ability and worth being proud of, for it is the means of making success, for things and persons possessed with necesary qualification. Unusual talent or superior merchandise avails nothing if it is unknown, or not known about in the right way. Publicity constitutes the heavier percentage in the winning factors of success.

Newspaper stories, clever ad copy and billboard advertising attract a wide percentage of public attention, but it takes exploitation or "stunt" stuff to really awake the motion picture public and to get them talking about your attraction, or a coming one.

Some of our publicity stunts have recently appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and these, like others, that will appear from time to time, give the exhibitor and publicity representative excellent ideas on handling same.

The publicity campaigns on "Mickey" and "Little Women," of which you have already read of in the NEWS have netted my firm a lot of money.

These stunts are practically nothing more than progressive advertising and helps to put your theatre first in the town's "Who's Who."

We have whipped into shape music and book stores, and we utilize department store windows practically every week.

It is the work of the publicity representative to visit the managers of the various firms and convince them of the results of the cooperation. If you are successful in his or her trying our same, that particular store is yours for life.

Excellent publicity can be had by cooperating with the United States Marine Corps. The recent article in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS tells how we cooperated with them on "Mickey." You will find the Corps wide awake and willing to get together with you.

On starting a campaign be thoroughly familiar with your subject, its positive, as well as its negative aspects.

C. M. Pincus

Plan and build cumulatively. Set a goal and work toward it.

Never be a press agent in name or reality. Be a publicity representative—a P. R.

If you can't wear a smile when entering a busy newspaper office, KEEP AWAY.

Publicity representatives never boast, or tell of the stories you have "planted" with this or that paper. Put them over and let the evidence be called to your attention by the firm you collect salary from. This shows that attention is given your efforts.

Always mark your stories "Duplicate Release" or "Exclusive." Give the newspapers fair turn on "specials." In San Francisco an "exclusive" story gets the position. On feature articles keep in mind, of course, the adaptability of the feature to the paper.

Put yourself in the dramatic editor's place and look at your stories and lay-out stuff from his point of view. Don't handle them as "dramatic editors," but find out their various wants and cater to them singularly.

Don't expect a newspaper to do anything but run your story. Remember, there are three hundred and sixty-five days in a year.

Always remember that the dramatic editor is accommodating you—vitally—earning your salary. They don't have to use your stories. They can get plenty. Besides, there is always a bunch of "news" and paid "mats" around in the art editor's room that needs dusting off. Whenever you can do a newspaper a good turn—no matter if it is a mile away from your forty-second relation to your job—do it, and be glad of the chance. Invite the editorial staff, and local "bunch" to your theatre as often as possible. And when you see them entering do everything you can to make them feel at home. They will take care of you when you want a good story "put over."

Don't try to camouflage an editor. Probabilities are very strong that he knew press tricks long before you were ever thought of. Let your appearance in the editorial room be accompanied with a smile

If you arrange for a personal appearance of some well-known star, and after you have secured the promise of the managing editor that he will send a photographer and reporter to interview, co-operate with them. Help the photographer, arrange the time for the interview, keep the interview undisturbed, and by all means, KEEP OUT YOURSELF.

Keep two press books—one for your manager, and one for yourself. Clip your stuff daily. If it is top column stuff clip with the name of the paper and date attached. If it isn't, paste them together and neatly make the page and location of the article in the paper. The value of newspaper clippings is in the identification. Do your work neatly. A large loose-leaf "invoice" book is practical and convenient.

Toronto Theatre Uses Sketch in Midst of Picture

Regent theatre, Toronto, set a new mark for that section of the continent with the showing of "The Eternal Magdalene" by breaking into the picture with a dramatic setting. There were two characters in this sketch, as suggested by the Goldwyn offices, and these led up to the climax with spoken words. The whole stage was draped in black and the two characters were seen under spotlight, which made them stand out weirdlly.

Two scenes in the elaborate Easter pageant staged by W. C. Lamoreaux at the Chateau theatre, Chicago. The view at the left was the first disclosed to the audiences.

Lamoreaux Scores Big Hit With Great Easter Settings at the Chateau Theatre in Chicago

NOVELTY—Decided—is the motto of W. C. Lamoreaux, managing director of Ascher's Chateau theatre, Chicago. Patrons attending the performances Good Friday, Saturday and Easter Sunday beheld a novelty of wonderful startling and beautiful nature.

Words cannot describe, even the camera could not catch the beauty of it because the coloring of the lights do not register. Mr. Lamoreaux gathered in his theatre fifteen of Chicago's foremost artists to portray for his audience two radiant tableaux done in triptych style. The costumes worn were designed by Mrs. Lou Wall Moore, the well-known authoress, sculptor and dancer.

The first tableaux on Friday and Saturday was the portrayal of the Divine Tragedy. The threee classic inner stages were used. On the center of the subject was Calvary—the stage to the right Gethsemane—to the left, Christus and Saint Veronica.

Following is a description of the tableaux, the way the audience view them.

Slowly the great folds of the curtain parted, faintly disclosing the subjects dimly lighted, far away a voice was singing. To the left the tableaux of the Christus robed in white, and bathed in a subdued radiance above him an angel, misty and blue, her great irridescent wings lifted high, offering the cup of suffering. All three of the tableaux were at the foot of the mountain, the blackness of which stood out against an intense blue Oriental sky. The lighting of the stage seemed miraculous, the silver band of light about the head of Christus and the dim clouds enveloping him were masterpieces of lighting. Now the singing has ceased and stillness reigns. On the right stage a great black cross and the Christus robed in Tyrian red fallen beneath the weight of the cross, his halo of beaten gold gleams like mad fire in the glare of the setting sun. Above him, standing in pity and compassion, robed in a mantle of emerald green embroidered in red, purple and silver, stood Veronica. Now the low pulsation of drums and the great center stage is revealed. The "Three Marys," Mary the Mother in great silent sorrow stands with face lifted, her figure touched by a strange blue light, the soft silver halo glowed dimly against the dark hills at her right; Mary Magdalene lies prostrate, the other Mary kneeling at the left. Slowly the sun sinks and the three far crosses are outlined against the blood-red sky. And lo! the ninth hour—a strange mist envelopes the scene—the light and sky grows ghastly dim and with the aproaching storm a great crash of drums. The curtains close silently. Finis.

Easter with its golden sunshine was reflected by the glorious grouping of the Easter tableaux. Mrs. Moore, who played Mary the Mother, has turned to Fra Angelica for her inspiration. The two sides of the stage held Fra Angelica angels—bearing flowers and blowing the Resurrection trumpets. The gorgeous colorings of the great Italian master Fra Angelica were skillfully copied. The groupings at the right contained three angels, one gowned in red, heavily embroidered in gold, one in emerald green embroidered in silver, and one in deep purple embroidered in copper.

To the left the group was gowned one in pure Cobalt blue, embroidered in pale gold, one in dull yellow embroidered in silver, one in violet and one in deep blue-green embroidered in gold. The curtain of the center stage parted to the triumphant strains of Easter music. Again the three Marys, radiant and happy, a great shaft of white light sang down through the morning blue. The figures of Saint John the Beloved and the other apostles melt in the foreground. Beautiful blues, radiant green and magentas made a glorious mass of wonderful coloring. Suddenly a trumpet sang and the great curtains glided slowly together.

One of the novelties used Victory Week at the Chateau theatre was the taking of Victory Loan posters and bringing them to life. The first one, which has become familiar to all, the title of which is "The Honor Roll" showed the American Flag as a background and draped over a gold star beneath which was written the honor roll. A girl draped in yellow stood holding a wreath above the gold star the same as shown in the poster.

The next poster used was the one showing a working man in overalls and work-shirt putting his hand into his pocket. The title of this poster is "Sure We'll Finish the Job."

The third and last poster was taken from the one entitled "For Home and Country." The subject showed a returned warrior with his wife by his side and his child in his arms. It is needless to say that the bringing these posters to life was very effective and brought forth a great deal of applause.

"I have found that the public appreciate surprises and I always endeavor to have something new—something different with which to amuse them," said Mr. Lamoreaux.

Noble Gets Himself Made Victory Loan "Ace" by M'Adoo

Paul Emerson Noble, known to the film fraternity as "No-Bull" Noble, has been annexing much publicity for himself at Portland during the past week. First he engineered a kidnapping party with William G. McAdoo spirited from a train at Oregon City, and then, after much manipulation, he succeeded in having himself named the official Portland air representative with the Victory Loan Flying Circus. So now he's "Ace" Noble.

When Noble heard that McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury and railroad boss, and now counsel for filmdom's "Big Four," was coming to Portland, he wired him at Grant's Pass, inviting the former official to be his guest on a motor trip from Oregon City to Portland. So while Chamber of Commerce officials and politicians were waiting for McAdoo at the Union Depot, Noble, C. S. Jensen, Mayor Baker, and a couple of others were breaking speed laws ovr the 16-mil highway separating Portland and Oregon City.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Trade-Marking Your Theatre

By Harold B. Franklin

Managing Director, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

ADVERTISING is printed salesmanship and we therefore take our advertising rather seriously. Advertising costs money, but is justified through the fact that it makes money. Sheas' Hippodrome advertising may not serve as a model for other cities or towns because of the high local newspaper rates. The rates in cities like New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Buffalo and some other cities are so high that space must be conserved.

Our advertising is divided into three classes. First, publicity-material that finds its way into the news columns of the press and which is placed by our press representative. Second—newspaper display. Third—miscellaneous advertising which includes lobby displays, mailing lists, novelties and outdoor publicity of every description.

This 3¾ inch display is distinctive and dignified

Our principal aim in preparing an ad. is to build up prestige for Shea's Hippodrome and to instill confidence. We like to make our patrons feel that our theatre is the standard by which they can measure quality. While we put tremendous energy into our publicity, we do not misrepresent or endeavor to attract an audience through exaggerated claims. In fact we make it a rule to give our patrons more than we advertise.

The keystones of our ads. is our trademark—the name Sheas' Hippodrome and the silhouette orchestra used at the bottom of every ad. It is not necessary to mention a word of our orchestra because it is pictured. A trademark is indispensable. It increases in value with repetition.

A Shea Hippodrome ad. is built so as to attract the eye and hold the interest of the reader. No advertisement is worth while unless it gets attention. We therefore have concluded that the display—the form of the ad.—is the most important factor in getting the ad. read. A special drawing is made of each ad. and through contrast fights down every other ad. on the page.

There are two ways of attracting attention through display. One is to prepare the ads. attractively and the other to take large space. Frequently by the use of smaller space we are able to predominate through the use of illustrations that attract, Ben Day effects or the liberal use of white space. The advantages of a specially drawn ad. are many. The compositor cannot make any mistakes. Because it is hand drawn it will invariably attract attention. The character of the picture can often be suggested in the design. Because the reproduction of half tone cuts is rather uncertain in most newspapers, we depend almost entirely on pen and ink illustrations. They have a dash and vim and always reproduce well. For soft effects we use Ben Day. Often our illustrations serve to attract attention and also suggest the appeal in the picture advertised. When an ad. leaves our office we feel with a certain degree of confidence that it will be read.

In screening our pictures the important selling points are jotted down and we then work out our plan of exploitation. Shea Hippodrome copy suggests an air of dignity and sincerity. Adjectives are taboo at all times. Our main purpose is to advertise Shea's Hippodrome. We do this on the theory that an attraction comes and goes while our theatre is here tomorrow. Therefore in each ad. we strive to build for the future.

We never overcrowd an ad., depending rather upon the quality of the feature for the big punch. We never boost anything but the current attractions, preferring not to confuse the reader with coming pictures. We want the patron to concentrate all his attention on the attracions we are playing.

We do not believe in jamming our ads. with superfluous reading matter, feeling that white space is more eloquent than a jumble of words. Unless we are absolutely certain as to the bigness of an attraction we do not "rave" to our public.

During the past few months the exhibitors' aids furnished by some of the producers have shown a decided improvement, which proves conclusively that there is a trend in the right direction. However,

Your Idea and Ours

BARRING the fact that the half tones did not print well and that the colors did not "register" exactly on this copy here is a fine example of what a page advertisement should be. It is the work of Manager R. J. Macadam, of the Casino theatre, Halifax, N. S.

It is a full page that was carried the Saturday afternoon before the Monday opening—there being no Sunday papers—and the heart in the center and the borders of the other four hearts are in red. It is impossible to pass this by and then the reading matter is so carefully prepared and so well arranged that it is sure to be digested by every one.

Naturally the theatre did the right thing in getting the Canadian appeal with the display line, "Biggest Picture in History Showing Canada to the Whole World." Then underneath this line in a Ben Day box is this sentence:

> It is impossible to describe the tremendous effect which this picture exerts on the audiences, but the feeling of intense pride in being a Canadian is the emotion which masters all others.

Then to the left of the central heart is the statement that this is the "First all-Canadian picture which depicts the ideals of the men who wore the maple leaf." The two lower boxes contain comments of New York and Canadian newspapers.

THERE were two other theatres in St. Louis showing "Captain Kidd, Jr.," for the first run at the same time, as the West End Lyric and therefore that theatre did just the right thing in bringing out the remainder of the program and featuring the short subjects. In other words the display gave some argument why the public should go to the West End Lyric to see Mary Pickford rather than to one of the other houses.

SUNDAY SHOW CONTINUOUS 2 TO 11 P. M.

Te cut of Miss Pickford stood out and attracted attention to the display which was four and one-half inches across three columns and then there was merely the title of the picture and the statement that it is her latest success. Then the advertisement recites the names of the stars who can be seen in the Photoplay Magazine Supplement, lists the new Mack Sennett comedy and features a Robert Bruce scenic and a Mabel Normand reissue.

Ordinarily we should say that the exhibitor should have used more space for all of this material, but rates are so high in St. Louis that it is well nigh impossible and we think that the West End Lyric did mighty well. Especially commendable is the way that it showed the people what a wonderful bill it was giving without going into the bargain sale idea.

Time spent worrying over yesterday's troubles could hatch a lot of good ideas for tomorrow.

THIS eight inch, six column display of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., was taken directly from the double page advertisement which appeared exclusively in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The only change has been to substitute the name of the theatre for that of Universal in the lower right hand corner.

When this department was first started we called attention to the many displays appearing in these pages as advertising which can be utilized by the exhibitor by making a few changes. In our opinion the great majority of the producer advertising should be matter that he can pass along to the exhibitor and thus give him the benefit of the work of the best artists at practically no cost. Here the Tudor has been able to get a good effect though the printing might have been a little better.

Just one hint. In case of the smaller cuts like the ones here, better effects can always be secured in the newspapers by taking out the background. The reduction is so great that the background doesn't mean anything and that white space would result in the figures standing out much better.

To Those Who Have and To Those Who Have Not

During the first four days of the week, beginning tomorrow, if you happen to be on Penn street take the time to go into the Colonial Theatre. On the other hand if you are not in that neighborhood by chance make a special trip, for you will see that which will mean something to you as a pleasant experience all through your life.

A picture so odd, so strange, so moving to your heart and mind that you will find a new and different, a more amazing NAZIMOVA. If you have seen her before it will be a splendid treat. If you have not it will mean a brand new sensation.

Put yourself in her place. Young, vibrant with life, and yet knowing nothing of books or of people, never knowing any human being outside of her half mad jailer who held her prisoner.

And then suddenly the sunshine breaks through the fog of her life and the four gloomy walls that hold her crash down and she sees life for the first time.

It's wonderful to see what a great artist can do in such a situation, and there are only four principal characters in the drama.

As an experience in your life go to the Colonial Theatre and for your own benefit see Nazimova in "Out of the Fog."

Colonial Daily News

WITH first glance at this sixteen inch, four column display of the Colonial theatre, Reading, Pa., we were tempted to condemn it utterly as being far too crowded, but when one gets to studying it there comes a quick change in opinion. Unquestionably it does get the eye and that is largely the result of the attractive figure of Nazimova and after that one is willing to read the rest of the matter.

However, there is a repetition that is unnecessary and savors too much of the circus style. For instance the writer calls her "Of all actresses, the most wonderful in the world," which is well enough, but apparently he fears that this is not convincing enough and then comes back with "The greatest emotional artiste of her generation"—a weaker line. Then there is a third talk about her to the extreme right with: "The wonder woman of the screen and stage, the star of a thousand moods, excelling her memorable emotional acting in 'Eye for Eye' and 'Revelation.' In our opinion two of these should have been omitted.

There is another selling argument in the smaller italic print at the side, but we don't like to see it starting with "If you happen to be down on Penn street, take the time to go into the Colonial, etc." What you want to do is to make your advertising so compelling that they will come down to your street with the sole purpose of coming to your theatre. The rest of the matter is good stuff and the designer deserves a lot of credit for the results that we are sure he achieved in the way of patronage.

In the same mail comes a display on the same picture from the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., that is the real thing in contrasts. Here there is a maximum of white space and the fewest possible words.

However, there is one thing lost here. The figure of Nazimova has been redrawn by a local artist with the result that much of the charm of the original, as used by the Colonial, is lost. This figure should have been cut out of the original press sheet or one of the advertisements in the Motion Picture News and so have preserved the charming effect. The figure, as it is now, looks more like that of an ordinary bathing girl than of the attractive Nazimova.

There are some hats that are always on the RACK.

ORIGINAL showing of "The Heart of Humanity" in Kansas City was at one of the legitimate houses, but that did not keep Sam Harding, manager of the Liberty from using large space—for Kansas City—when he offered the picture. This one occupied seven and one-half inches across four columns and stands out among all the other advertising that fills the page on which it appears. This is largely the result of the outline effect that has been used.

THE GREAT HUMAN DRAMA OF TODAY

Essential details of the production were probably already known to the greater part of the people of Kansas City and therefore this dignified style of display was all the more in keeping with the offering. The main thing to bring out was the title and then to take advantage of the people who had failed to see the picture at its original showing or those who wanted to come again. That title and the heart occupied the greater portion of the space and it was a safe bet that the other matter in the smaller type would be read.

"If wishes were horses"—but don't forget the saddle.

IF it had been able to get good printing of the halftone and had used it in sufficiently large size, the New theatre, Baltimore, would have had a good ad here. As it results, we believe that the theatre went only about half far enough either in the use of the halftone or in the selling argument.

The names of three of the players are well brought out, and then the management puts its own guarantee behind the picture. This is always good stuff when it is not used too often and when the picture is "there," but there are a lot of people who want to know more about a production than the fact that the manager himself likes it.

Why not give a little better idea of what that appeal is—and especially the happiness angle. Then comes the guarantee signed by Manager L. A. De Hoff:

ANITA STEWART

As the Mystery Maid From Nowhere in

"A MIDNIGHT ROMANCE"

The Surety of Good Pictures

A photoplay beautiful and thrilling, directed by that master of screencraft and interpreter of a woman's heart, LOIS WEBER.

THE STORY

A bewildering girl of mystery, whose weird, puzzling love game has an unguessable climax.

Love's a funny thing when the right girl and the right man meet, even though it be on the beach at midnight. The courtship begins—introductions?—BAH!

WITH such an attractive cut of a beautiful star dominating it, this thirteen-inch three-column display of Tally's, Los Angeles, hasn't the chance of escaping the eye of anyone. It is one of the best illustrations of all the things that we have had to say in these columns about going to the cuts and taking sufficient space to make them stand out. With such a good start it is too bad that a very crude drawing should be used at the bottom.

Under her name Miss Stewart is referred to as "The mystery maid from nowhere," and then the selling argument proceeds to carry out the same idea:

> A bewildering girl of mystery, whose weird, puzzling love game has an unguessable climax.
> Love's a funny thing when the right girl and the right man meet, even though it be on the beach at midnight. The courtship begins—introductions?—Bah!

The only other selling argument given is on "the photoplay beautiful" and the fact that it was directed by Lois Weber.

If your business has flat tires try pumping in a little of the air of cheerfulness. It'll make your house run a lot easier.

ALHAMBRA theatre, Indianapolis, has been doing some mighty good advertising of late, which we have been illustrating for your benefit and here is another one that gets over all of the charm of Marguerite Clark and the especial appeal of the picture. But this is another case of where good printing is essential for in the average newspaper this wouldn't be much more than a smear.

There is a good line with the exclamation "What girl hasn't thrilled at the thoughts (why plural?) of eloping!"

MUTT & JEFF—GAUMONT WEEKLY

And then the selling talk goes still further with this:

> To steal silently and mysteriously away with some handsome young Romeo is just about the apex of romance, eh?
> But supposing the girl happens to be married? Puts a different light on the story, doesn't it?
> That's just where the heroine of "Let's Elope" encounters breakers. She has a husband—wonder of wonders—when he discovers her plans he does everything possible to aid her.

This matter should have been indented a couple of ems more on either side and it would have then afforded enough white space to set it off. Don't be afraid to use the white. There's often more punch in space than in a million words.

Let's make May mean CAN.

IT has remained for Australia to come along with probably the best newspaper advertisement that we have seen in "The Romance of Tarzan." This is a page display of the Crystal Palace and Strand theatres, Sydney.

We like very much the immense figure of the elephant with Tarzan and the girl seated on him and then in the upper right hand corner the question: "What Happened to Tarzan of the Apes?" Of course that is a question that all who saw the first picture have been asking themselves since they heard that the sequel was coming along and it was the big thing with which to put over the punch.

Other scenes from the picture are brought in without conflict with the main illustration. The names of the theatres ebrate the lower illustration and the two smaller ones stand out because of the parallel lines, in fact making the two sketches really a part of the box.

Miss Helen Yoder had the role of the hero's sister in "A Midnight Romance" and while it was hardly a part to justify the word "Featuring" it was important enough to get a lot of people to the theatre who otherwise might not have come.

If you will recall the experiences of Successful Exhibitor whose diary was printed here you will remember that he "adopted" a player who was born in an adjoining county and featured her every appearance at his theatre until she was soon one of his biggest drawing cards. The local appeal is a strong one and one that should be used on every occasion. Don't let the fact that "everybody knows" such and such a player was born in your city stop you—keep on telling them.

TODAY AND ALL WEEK Standard TODAY AND ALL WEEK

MARY THURMAN PROVES THAT SHE HAS GENUINE DRAMATIC TALENT AND PLAYS HER PART WITH DASH AND ABANDON IN "SPOTLIGHT SADIE"

YOU'LL PEEP BEHIND THE SCENES, WHERE POWDER AND PAINT, SILK STOCKINGS AND LACE HIDE THE HEART THROBS OF THOSE WHO CAVORT IN THE LAND OF MAKEBELIEVE

THIS is what we call a "Jeems Dandy." As a matter of fact the reason why we do not reproduce more specimens of the advertising of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, O., is that we have to keep repeating the same things—about how good they are.

Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the proprietor, who designs the advertising, has the happy faculty of getting right at the selling point of a picture, illustrating that and then using the fewest possible words. The space used is generally a quarter of a page and the scene pictures generally form the big pulling point. This one is no exception. Here there has been a spotlight used, its rays training on the scene which shows Mae Marsh, the star, and a bunch of chorus girls.

Now the unusual thing about this display is that the name of the star is not mentioned. We must admit that we don't quite get that, and the theatre must have had some very good reason. Merely the name of the character is used in the selling talk, which reads:

> Mary Thurman proves that she has genuine dramatic talent and plays her part with dash and abandon in "Spotlight Sadie." You'll peep behind the scenes, where powder, paint, silk stockings and lace hide the heart throbs of those who cavort in the land of make-believe.

Of course, the black background is essential to bring out the spotlight effect here, and if you should ever use this, follow the example of the Standard and employ a little edge of white between the halftone and the background.

Ideas are eggs that need only the hen of Energy to hatch them.

THIS would have been a much better display if the newspaper had afforded better printing. Here the appeal was put on a beautiful picture of a fascinating looking woman, but there is such a smear of ink and so much background that it does not stand out as it should. However, twelve inches across four columns have been used and this stands out above all the other advertisements of Washington, D. C., theatres.

As the display stands there hardly is enough contrast in the typing because the heavy black lettering has been used throughout. Of course, one of the things that the designer of this display wanted to feature was "The Birth of Icebergs," and he therefore put this in the mortise at the upper right. So he attracted attention to them all right, but when he came down to the musical numbers and the other short subjects he should, at least, have used a lighter type. The general effect that he has now is black and white, white and black, and that gets rather tiresome.

But even with this true, it must be admitted that the advertisement, after all, accomplishes the purpose for which it was written—one reads every word of it. But it could have been more attractive.

Advertising makes the bank roll grow stronger.

AFTER all the harsh things that we have had to say about Albany, N. Y. advertising, it is rather surprising to find us saying here that this is a hundred per cent. display. It is a three column, nine inch and stands out strikingly because of the large figure of Mabel Normand that is used at the right.

Naturally it must be taken into consideration that the picture had already been shown in Albany and therefore the appeal had to be a little different, so to feature the title and then start the selling argument off with "I'm coming back to good old Albany all this week" gets just the right angle. There is also another good sentence toward the bottom, "It caused more talk than prohibition."

There are some that may question that the name of the star is used in too small type, but we do not think so in a case like this. In the first place the thing that was being sold was the success that "Mickey" has scored in Albany and the picture of Miss Normand as she appears in the film was really all of her that was needed, except as informative to some who may not have known that she was the player.

Old axiom says that anyone can sell a man who wants it.

HERE is another proof of our oft-repeated statement that Tom Mix lends himself remarkably well to display work.

WHERE THE BIG PICTURES PLAY
WALNUT

Of course, the action picture is easier to advertise to grab the eye and this three column nine inch display of the Walnut, Louisville, Ky., surely suggests that with the figure of Mix and then the two guns in play. Only the name of the star and the title of the picture are featured and then the selling argument is in smaller type. This is what it says:

> A runaway team dashes madly down a dangerous road, bearing in the wagon behind them a terror-stricken girl. An intrepid horseman, following to the rescue, comes abreast of the team and shouts a command. Only by a perilous leap from the wagon into strong, waiting arms can the girl's life be saved. She takes the leap. Is it strange that romance was born in that embrace? The horseman is Tom Mix.

Just one little error and one frequently made. The story is told in the present tense all the way through except when it says that "romance was born." Just a little thing that most readers won't notice, but it is well enough to have everything exactly right.

Remember people are BUYING pictures these days, not merely killing time.

HERE is a case where the name of the picture is even greater than that of the star and the Majestic theatre, Spokane, Wash., selected just the right way in advertising it. "The Lion and the Mouse" scored such a wonderful success as a stage production, with various companies touring the country that this should have been played up stronger than anything else.

"THE LION AND THE MOUSE"
See this beautiful star in the screen production of one of the greatest dramatic successes in stage history.

WITH no other weapon than a woman's wit, she entered the arena against the lion of big business who was ruining her father for his own selfish interests. There must—there had to be—some way out. Yet how? How could she, alone, unaided, break the strength of this man of power?

The very heights of drama are reached in this compelling play of life and love.

HAD WE NOT WON VICTORY
HOW MUCH WOULD YOU PAY TO GET IT?
INVEST THAT MUCH IN THE VICTORY LOAN

This is largely a ready prepared advertisement. The outline of the lion behind the name of the picture serves to get attention to it while there is just enough of the figure of the star to appeal to the admirers of Alice Joyce. But you will note that the whole burden of the selling argument has been placed on the fact that this is the picture version of a great play. Most of the matter can be read as reproduced, but the smaller type says:

> With no other weapon than a woman's wit, she entered the arena against the lion of big business who was ruining her father for his own selfish interests. There must—there had to be—some way out. Yet how? How could she, alone, unaided, break the strength of this man of power?

> The very heights of drama are reached in this compelling play of light and love.

By-the-waq, we have been mentioning the matter of leaving plenty of white space on either side of your small type selling arguments. Note how effective it is in this instance.

Thunder may not have anything to do with the power of lightning, but it sure is a mighty good press agent.

Four of the Victory Loan posters as they were brought to life on the stage of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. This was one of the many novelties shown recently

Grauman Uses Novelty in Troop Welcome and in Advertising the New Victory Loan

JUST to show that the West Coast is alive and on the job there come to us in the same mail three big ideas that Sid Grauman has just put over with Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles.

When the Los Angeles One Hundred and Sixth regiment came marching home from the wars Mr. Grauman saw to it that his theatre gave them a little individual touch of welcome and so he arranged a display that got attention from the newspapers and that was cheered by the crowds.

On the Marquee over the sidewalk he placed figures representing President Wilson and Gen. Pershing and had them saluting the marching boys. At the extreme left there was a soldier and at the right a sailor, the whole display having the background of a huge American flag.

Another interesting stunt was used in connection with the Victory Loan posters which were literally brought to life on the stage of the theatre. It is a strange coincidence that at the same time this idea was being put into execution in Los Angeles the same thing was being done at Ascher's Chateau theatre, Chicago, where Manager W. C. Lamoreaux was successful in staging the same idea.

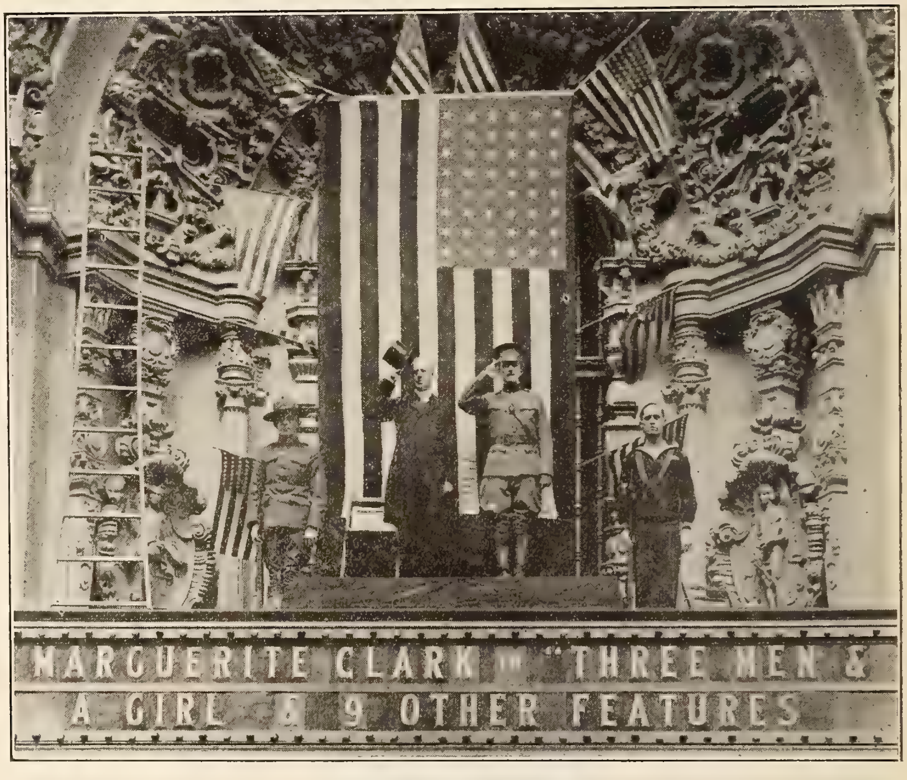
The plan followed in both cases was to throw the poster on the screen and then as these gradually dimmed out the lights came up on the living figure. Both at Los Angeles and in Chicago the scheme was a great success and is reported to have been instrumental in inducing large numbers of people to subscribe for Victory bonds. It is simply another example of what motion picture theatres can do to aid the government or in any public and patriotic movement where it is needed.

But to get back to Grauman's theatre: Ever since the opening of the house music has been one of the big features with the splendid orchestra and the best soloists that are obtainable. These with special stage settings keep the people of the city talking and win newspaper space, but it remained for the bill featuring "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" to bring out a novelty which probably has not been tried in any other house. This came during the rendering of "In the Sweet Old Way" by C. Sharpe Minor on the big organ. During the second verse of the ballad a human voice was heard which seemed to come from the organ and the audience marvelled at the wondrous results that were obtained. As a matter of fact it was a human voice, for the soloist was placed in the organ loft, carefully concealed. The method of arranging the stunt was not given away and out in Los Angeles they are still debating whether it was a real singer or merely the fine work of the organ.

Theatre Links Native Uprising with Cannibal Film

How well it pays to read your newspapers and be on the alert to link a new event up with your theatre has again been shown by Lubin theatre, Cincinnati. That house was showing "Cannibals of the South Seas" when the manager came across a news dispatch of the natives of Malekula, where Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson were captured by the cannibals.

Immediately there appeared advertisements of the Lubin calling attention to these natives in the picture.



Grauman's had doubles of President Wilson and Gen. Pershing welcoming the returning Los Angeles soldiers

How New York Stages the Show

THERE'S every variety on the bills at the three big New York theatres this week from cartoon comedy to tense Spanish drama. As a matter of fact we were impressed with the ideas that all of the bills were concerned more with pictures than the other elements, though the music at all the houses is unusually good.

At the Rialto, Cecil B. DeMille's production of "For Better, For Worse" has its first New York showing. It is a gripping drama with a happy ending and there is comedy element put in the bill with two cartoon comedies, Happy Hooligan and Mutt and Jeff. Length of the feature has made it necessary to eliminate the usual scenic and there is but a single vocal number for that reason.

Strand has Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow," a drama which has as its basis one of the old Spanish feuds and then carries the action to the crime world of Paris. The comedy element of the bill is carried by the latest Mack Sennett, "The Little Widow." There is another of the series of "Cameraring Through Africa" that affords still more laughs and a bit of scenic is incorporated in the Topical.

Charles Ray is the star at the Rivoli in practically a straight comedy, "Greased Lightning," which is mostly a laugh until the adventure with the crooks at the end. "The House of Terrible Scandals" is the Sunshine comedy and there is an interesting and vividly colored Prizma pacture in "Hawaii." Adolf Bohn has again staged one of his artistic danse fantasies with "At the Brook."

Rivoli Theatre

COMEDY dominates the bill at the Rivoli this week, even though the brilliant overture is expressive of the melancholy spirit of the Slavic folksongs, "Slavonic Rhapsody." This results from the fact that the feature is almost straight comedy and there are a bunch of laughs in the scenic, while there is good humor all through the bill, with the music especially pleasing.

Those wonderful stage hangings at the Rivoli seem to reflect new colors and effects with almost each view. The overture is played with the lights in gold, and here the decorative curtains have the run spreading into purple and the window effects, showing green trees through them, and brings out a most artistic blending of colors.. At the start of this number the brasses are particularly strong with trumpet effects, then playing off into the strings. There is a smashing finish to it with all the instruments and the organ doing their utmost.

"Hawaii," a Prizma picture, is particularly striking because of the marked colors that are shown both in the Hawaiian scenery and in the garb of the natives, who especially incline toward a brilliant red. The waters are a deep blue and there are at the start some beautiful shots of the coast. Then we see the cocoanut groves, and there is a laugh with the natives climbing the trees. Then come some shots of the growing sugar cane. With that we travel with the camera in front of a locomotive through some interesting scenery until we get some views of coffee raising and curing. There is a big laugh with the Hawaiian kids sliding down the falls and then more with the native dancers going through their performances. A Hawaiian selection is used with the screening, and then "Admiraion" is played twice through and as we see the sugar being loaded on the ship "Myona" is used twice, the change coming next with making of Poi, and here we have "Mele Hula" played to the finish.

Adolph Bohm, of the Metropolitan Opera House, has arranged the next dance number, "At the Brook," and here he has the co-operation of one of John Wenger's beautiful and fanciful settings. After a few bars on the organ and a touch of the harp, the curtains part revealing fanciful rock with the tiny stream of the brook starting on its way to the sea. One girl, dressed in red is seated on a large rock toward the left playing a flute with two other girls, in white, at the right start to dance and are presently joined by a third who comes on the stage from the left. After a little while the girl with the flute, who actually renders the music that is played, comes slowly from her pedestal and the three others dance around her, at the end sinking to the floor in the posture of worship.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with Gaumont views of the final review of "Boston's own" at Camp Devens, Mass., and then from the same source come pictures of Belgian heroes from twelve different commands here to help the Victory Loan. These heroes get a great hand, but the dogs which drag their machine guns get even more, and there are some appealing closeups of the animals. The second part of "High School Cadets" is played twice for these two pictures, with the trumpet calls counterpointing.

Gaumont shows pictures of the flight of the first radio ambulance in Paris to the music of "One Fleeting Hour," and then we have Kinogram pictures of training race horses at Macon, Ga. There are some interesting shots of the horses and the various pets around the training camp. "Molly on the Shore" is the music. Gaumont pictures the fourth annual motor cycle hill climb at Los Angeles, and here there are more laughs with the various spills, while the music is "Send Him Away With a Smile.' Pathe follows with pictures of the sports of the sailor boys at sea with "Isms" played. Then come Gaumont views of citizens of Arkansas presenting silver service to the battleship which bears the state's name. "Diplomat March" is started here and played through to the end.

Now if any one has any doubt how New York audiences stand in the controversy between President Wilson and the Italians over the question of Fiume, they have only to attend one of the three big theatres this week—for practically the same picture is shown at all three. Kinograms prepares the way by showing Secretary Daniels in Paris, and then come the Pathe pictures with the final punch. First, we have a cartoon showing Fiume and the surrounding territory. Then there are pictures of Orlando and Sonnino and there are a few scattered handclaps, growing to tremendous applause with the sight of King Albert and Queen Marie, of Roumania, and to riotous enthusiasm for President Wilson.

With the lights all in red and the orchestra bathed in red, before the curtained setting with a single hanging light in the center, Emanuel List, basso profundo, then sings "Benvenuto Cellini."

There is a numbered selection used at the screening of the feature, Charles Ray in "Greased Lightning" that starts everyone off in a good humor. In fact, about two-thirds of the people in our immediate vicinity were humming. As Ray starts in to demonstrate his potato peeling machine "Step Lively" is used with all the effects given, including the blow-up at the end. Then "Steve" is used, and with the introduction of the villian "Poppyland" is played. With the appearance of Alice Flint, "Contemplation," the theme is used for the first time. As Ray starts on his mad rush to fix the girl's stove, "Step With Pep" and then with the title that tells us he is trying to make the job as long as possible the theme is used again.

At the point where the title tells us of the sudden interest in automobiles, the organ takes up the music and continues to play the picture until the opening of the Founder's Day festivities, and as we see the band come marching down the street, "Long Boy" is played, changing to "Hop Along" as Ray drives his car to the starting march. There is a clever effect for the race announcement, the orchestra remaining tacit while the man is seen speaking and then turning into "Big White Top," which is played twice and followed through with "A High Stepper." Numbered selections are used for the remainder of the picture, except for the love scene at the end, when, of course, the theme is played.

"In the Clock Store" is then played by the orchestra. This is a descriptive fantasie which has been used at the Rivoli before, and which is always received with great applause, reproducing the various sounds in a clock store where there are clocks of all descriptions and vintages running and striking.

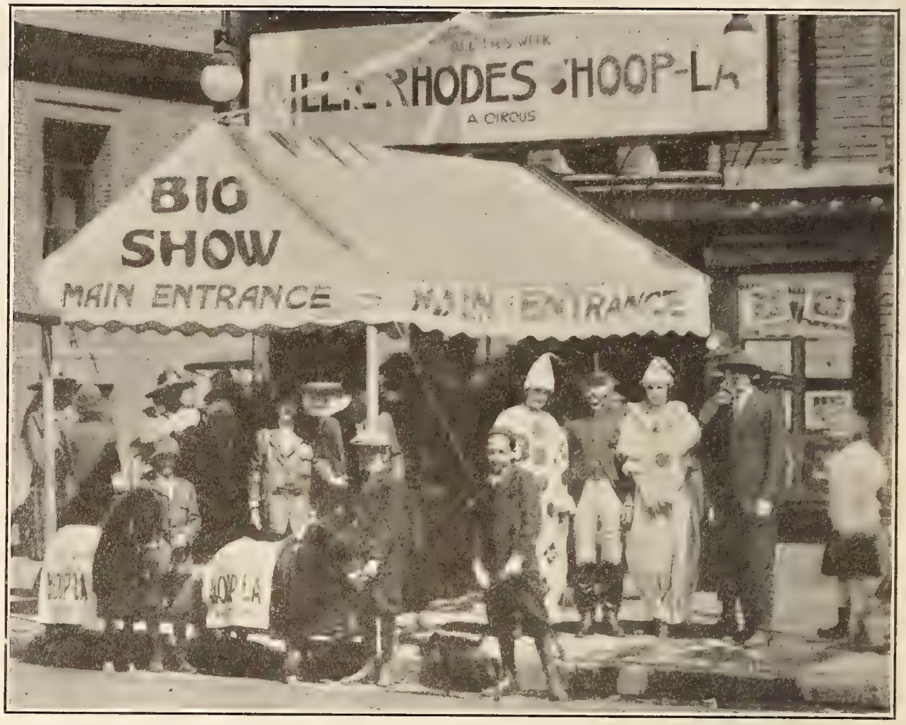
"The House of Terrible Scandals" is the Sunshine comedy that closes the bill. "Minnie Shimmee for Me" is played at the screening, and then as we see the rooster crowing we have that effect, then returning to the original tune. With the title, "The latest thing out" "I Won't Go Home Till Morning" is used, and then when Saturday rolls around with the calls on the bathroom we get "Sinbad" played twice, followed through with "All Full of Ginger," also played twice, and then "Jazzing the Blues Away."

Then when we have the scenes on the fire escape "Buster" is played until the seesawing starts, and then two choruses of "See Saw" are played, followed through with "You Bet." During this we have all sorts of effects with burlesqued cries of, "Save Me" from the musicians. With the title, "Beautiful Awakening" the chorus of "This is the Life" is used, and with "Everything is set" we have "Everybody's Crazy About the Doggone Blues." With the title, "I hear you calling me," the song of that name is played with the trombone only and with glissando effect. Then with the scene of the man applauding we get "Dixiana, Rise," and after that numbered selections to the end.

Leken's "Rhapsody" is the organ solo.



Rivoli theatre, Philadelphia, used a circus front during the showing of Billie Rhodes "Hoop-La" and even dressed the girl ushers as clowns while billy-goats were used to advertise the picture through the streets. Note doorman as ringmaster

Strand Theatre

WITH the Spanish atmosphere of the feature the Strand orchestra this week is given a chance to play the highest class of music through the picture and does it well. In fact, the only time that we have ever known an audience to break into applause for the music during the showing of a feature occurred Sunday evening at the end of one of the selections.

It is undoubtedly a fact that the music adds a hundred per cent to the enjoyment of a feature like this, Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow." Here we have an exceedingly tense story with crime really the basis of it and the music serves to lift it out of the gloom. Then the rest of the program at the Strand has been arranged by Managing Director Plunkett to provide plenty of laughs. Certainly every one leaves the theatre in a high good humor after the comedy.

Selections from "Tosca" form the overture and these are played with the lights in gold and the Joan of Arc setting shown. Strange how things run in cycles—for the overtures at the three houses this week are all built around tragic themes or melodies. But what the audiences want is the real melody and certainly that is present in full measure in all three of the numbers.

Strand Topical opens with International pictures of the class fight between the freshmen and sophomores at Northwestern university and we have some tall action here to the music of "College Yell." Then Pathe shows us American ships going out of Boston to sweep up some 100,000 mines which are scattered about the Atlantic coast. We have the methods of the work shown and see them being blown up. From the same source come pictures of the U-117, one of the finest of the German submarines, which has been brought here to aid in boosting the Victory Loan. "Before the Mast" is played for both of these pictures. Then come Pathe pictures of tanks attempting to climb Pike's Peak for the Victory Loan and here the slogan "Pike's Peak or bust" comes true, for the tank "busts." "Baton Rumpus" is played.

There is a touch of nature sandwiched in here with Pathe color pictures of "Garden Spots of France," "Aubade Printaniere" being the music. Topics of the Day with their unusual number of laughs follow. One of the first of them says: "If bread ever gets back to a nickel a loaf a picnic party can enjoy something more substantial than a picture of a ham sandwich." Another one says: "The conference would be more peaceful if Japan would stop kicking China under the table." "Bring Back the Days" and "It Gets Them All" are the two selections used during the screening of these clever newspaper paragraphs.

We get back to the news again with Pathe pictures of "Welcome to the Seventy-seventh Division." First we have a distant shot of the immense liner and then close-ups of the deck. After that the camera is set right at the gang plank and the men march down immediately in front of it, so close that one may recognize their friends. "When the Boys Come Home" is the appropriate accompaniment. Pathe also gives us pictures of the parade at Camp Devens and General Edwards decorating thirty-five heroes with the Croix de Guerre. "Chicago Post March" is used.

Now comes the final punch along the lines we have described at the Rivoli, except that these pictures are from International. First we have the map showing the location of Fiume and then we have a number of scenes in the city itself. Next there are flashed on the screen pictures of Orlando and Sonnino. When we were present there was a handclap or two that were quickly drowned by hisses and a moment later when President Wilson's picture came on the screen there were wild yells in all parts of the audience. "World in Arms" was played up to the time the President is shown and then the orchestra swings into "Hail to the Chief."

Malcom McEachern then sings "Shipmates O' Mine" and "Young Tom O' Devon" and the feature follows. But just before the title starts the curtains part showing a Spanish hacienda. There is just a glimpse of that and as the screen curtain comes down the picture is started. "Moriama" is played at the screening and until the title. "From rapier and lance" when we have "Toreador et Andalouse" followed by No. 1 of the "La feria" suite and then No. 3 of the same. When Senora Cordova is introduced there is a change to "La Farandole" and at the scene where the girl is talking to her mother "Carnaval" is played. Then with the arrival of the cousin telling of the son's murder, "Du Barry" is used until the scene in Paris when we get "Royaune des Papillons." At that point the organ takes over the accompanient for eighteen minutes.

With the title "Why did you leave us so suddenly?" we have "Lamento" and then as we are shown the wronged girl and her mother in the roof of the tenement "Le Jongleur" is used. With the scene of the kidnapping we have "La Nave Rossa" and then as the command for the "Comrades of the Knife" to drink there is a change to an extract from "Othello," played with the brasses muted. The title, "The bait," brings a change to "Borghilde's Dream," and then as Dlores takes the knife "Donne Curiose" which continues until the police arrive when we have a furioso and then with the shot a dramatic pause and finally at the title "Again the Easter Carnival," "Fete de Seville" to the end.

Miss Cora Tracey then sings "A Spirit Flower" and "Oh, Promise Me" and then comes the second chapter of the Outing-Chester picture, "Cameraring Through Africa." The clever titles really turn this into comedy and there are roars of laughter all over the house. First we have some of the marriage customs of the Africans shown, then the king of the tribe and some of their strange music. Then we go into the jungles again and see strange animals including dog-faced babboons by the scores, scores of crocodiles, hippos in bathing, and then some shots of a rhino, and finally the great kundi which we are told is the rarest animal in Africa—of the deer family, but with immense horns that stand straight up. The organ carries the music for these pictures.

"The Little Widow," the latest of the Mack Sennett comedies, is the one that sends 'em away laughing. Here the wonderful dog Teddy is responsible for a lot of the comedy all the way through and really some of the feats that he does astound one. Teddy's antics caused a veritable buzz of exclamations all over the house from time to time.

"Circus Parade" is used at screening, for the first scenes show a home arranged circus going on with Teddy the chief performer, juggling a waste basket and then jumping through paper rings with the kiddie on his back. When this is over the orchestra swings into "High Stepper" and then the organ takes the music over until the title "Winning the Widow" when we have "Sensation" played with "Mourning Blues" and "At the Jazz Ball" following through. At the title "The beginning of a perfect day" we get "Matrimonial Ball" and then at the end with the appearance of the husband in the soldier's uniform, "You're the One."

Dubois' "Grand Procession March" is the final organ solo.

Poli's Bijou theatre, New Haven, Conn., was able to get a splendid Japanese atmosphere in the lobby for the showing of Sessue Hayakawa in "The Courageous Coward"

Rialto Theatre

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD has never arranged more pleasing music for a feature than the score which is being played at the Rialto this week with "For Better, For Worse." It is a picture that is susceptible to splendid music and the selections that were used helped to bring now and then a tear to the eyes of everyone.

As a matter of fact one would not want a greater variety of music than one finds through the bill starting with "Phaedre."

Rialto Magazine opens with Gaumont pictures of the review of 50,000 men at Camp Devens, including a fine shot of the assembled colors and for this "Yankee Tars" is played. Then come the International pictures of the Northwestern class contest to the tune of "College Life" at the start and then with the title "Let's Go" turning into "He's Just Like You." First touch of comedy is put into the bills with a new series of "Topplitsk Says." There are plenty of hearty laughs, especially at this one: "Appendicitis is just an old time stomach ache until a new style doctor finds you got money." "Rip Van Winkle Slept With One Eye Open" is played during these.

Then come the Pathe pictures of mine sweeping to the music of "Anchor and Star March" and then International shows us the Eleventh Engineers, the first Americans to fight, returning to New York from France. There are some intimate shots of the men and these are shown to "When the Boys Come Home." Then there is the International Fiume picture already described with "Universal Freedom" played.

Again the element of fun comes in as strong as it possibly could with Happy Hooligan in "Knocking the H out of Heine." He starts out telling the kids that "This reminds me of Hill No. 605½" and then we see him in an observation tower with the shells whizzing all about and here of course the orchestra gets busy with its imitations. "Keep Your Head Down Fritizi Boy" is the music at the start and this changes to a hurry until the title "Not" when we get "Crow Hollow" until the donkey starts to run and then "The Vixen" is played changing to "American Fantasy" as the medal is pinned on Holligan. Here the Magazine ends, an unusual arrangement, but one that is appreciated as a change.

We have a few bars of "Comin' Through the Rye" and then the Rialto Male Quartette sings "Sally King," an original composition, half conversational, without accompaniment. This is rendered with the lights in gold, but they go down for the second of the double number, "Sand Man." With this second selection the curtains slowly part revealing a window with blue light shining through and red on the singers—the night effect.

Now we have the feature, Cecil B. De-Mille's production "For Better, For Worse," a story that plays strong on the emotions, but leaves one happy at the end. "Miniature Suite No. 11" is used at the screening and then with the title "The dainty hand of Sylvia" Grunfeld's "Romance," the theme is played. Then comes Burton on the scene and "Sunbeams" is used and at the title "The best laid plans of mice and men" we have a shift to "Camelia." When the young doctor is told of the cry of the children "In the Twilight" is used and then with the scene where the soldiers are marching the snare drum is imitated. With the title "Then comes the hardest thing" "Mignonette" is played and as he tells Sylvia that he is not going to war "Chant Elegique" is played.

Then with the title "Once to every woman" we have "Over There" played once through with "For Three" following. With the vision of Harold, the Dane "Parsifal" is used and then for Richard the Lion Hearted "The Spirit" and with the untrained boys of the revolution "Men of War." Then as the girl picks up the gun the orchestra turns into "Battle Hymn of the Republic" with "Premier Amour," played with the snare drum effect for the marching men following hrough. Where Buron goes o Dr. Meade to say that he is to marry Sylvia "Chant Elegique" is again used and then with the marriage scene, at the title "For Better, For Worse" "Remembrance" is played.

"Love's Melody" is used for the parting scene and then with the title "With Dick in France" "Silent Sorrows" is played. Then we have a couple of numbered selections until Sylvia is finding that she cannot find any of the great surgeons when we have "Pierrot" played very softly. "Romance" comes in with the title, "It has just leaked out." Another numbered selection follows and then with the bell of the belfry there is a tympany rumble and organ, the organ carrying the music. Then the orchestra returns with the title "One of Life's Conundrums" and uses the "Chant Eligique" followed with the theme when the girl declares that "Both of you have forgotten" and continuing to the end.

Then with the lights in pinkish gold the orchestra plays Straus' tuneful "Waltz Dream" and we have the final comedy—another cartoon, this time Mutt and Jeff in "The Cave Man's Bride."

Here again the orchestra gets right in with its imitations and there are plenty of them. The selections rendered are: "March Africaine," "Flying Rag," "Chicken Reel," played without the introduction, "On the Beach at Waikakee" and "Kangaroo Hop."

Vitagraph Send Plan Book Month Ahead of Release

Vitagraph has issued a seventy-page plan book on its latest serial, "Perils of Thunder Mountain," and so that exhibitors will be fully qualified to exploit it, this book will be mailed a full month in advance of the release of the initial episode. With the Vitagraph national billboard campaign covering all of the cities and the exhibitors fully prepared to co-operate, there is no reason why every manager should not have his patrons expecting the first chapter.

The book opens with a general talk about serials, and then tells the exhibitor the secret that is not revealed until the final episode, so that he will be able to get the punch out of it. Attention is called to the fact that this is a "Snow Serial," and that as it will be released during the hot weather period that feature should be brought out. Five pages of advance advertising and publicity matter, including stories of the stars, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, are provided together with a variety of halftones and sketch cuts of them for use in the news columns. They are the most attractive cuts that we have seen in a long time.

Special paper and lobby displays are provided on each episode, and the story is given by episodes so that the exhibitor may have it published.

Royal Display Given Easter by Myrick in Columbia

Thousands of dollars and much of the time of E. J. Myrick and a corps of assistants for two months were devoted to the preparing of the Liberty theatre for its Easter opening. It is truly the "theatre beautiful" of Portland.

The velour drapes are in amethyst, trimmed in silver. The house has been recarpeted throughout. The walls are finished in old ivory, with silver lamp fixtures and royal purple shades. The rest room has been entirely refurnished in silver and soft-toned French gray, with imported French linen cretonne. Real Easter lillies and purple iris formed the color scheme for the flower fixtures.

Franklin Trade Marks His Theatre in All His Newspaper Advertisements

there are some companies that jam their press sheets full of uninteresting stories about the stars, synopses, biographies, etc., and entirely overlook the real facts about the big features of the picture. Newspapers today have no room for anything but facts and it behooves exhibitors to get them into their press notices and the manufacturer to get them to the exhibitor. The Complete Plan Book in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is a step in the right direction. Here exhibitors may find the facts which they fail to discover in the press sheets issued by some of the manufacturers.

In conclusion we aim to build an advertisement that the make-up man cannot bury. Most of the time we have succeeded in getting a display that generally "hunts up" the readers which is preferable to having the reader "hunt up" the ad.

Reward Idea Suggested for Slumber Mountain Film

For the first time, we believe, a special press and exploitation book has been issued on a single reel subject. This comes from World Film to give exhibitors suggestions on the exploitation of "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," the picture reproducing prehistoric features which was given its pre-release showing at the Rivoli.

There is a full set of publicity stories telling about the making of the picture and then the advertising is so arranged that they may be included in the exhibitor's advertising of the whole bill. They occupy a space only about two inches deep and most of them are built on the idea of offering a reward to any patron who has ever seen such a picture before. The designer has realized that the dramatic feature will be the chief thing advertised, but the plan suggested will also bring the short subject into prominence.

Live News from the Producers

Randolph Shows "The Unpardonable Sin"

The Randolph theatre in Chicago, is rapidly earning the right to be called "The House of Hits." Following right on the heels of the remarkable success, which attended the showing of Johnsons' "Cannibal" pictures, comes the even greater success in capacity houses all day long, it is said, witnessing "The Unpardonable Sin."

It will be remembered that one of the best sellers which appeared during the period of the great war, was the book of this title that Major Rupert Hughes wrote from his own observations and experiences at the front in France. This book was used by producer Harry Garson as the basis for the picture, and all of the striking incidents which bear the mark of authenticities are pictured on the screen. A splendid cast headed by Blanche Sweet was engaged and the old director of Mary Pickford, Marshall Neilan, had charge of the directing.

The almost unbelievable figures of the large business, it is said, that "The Unpardonable Sin" has been doing elsewhere throughout the country, stands an excellent chance of being far excelled before the engagement of this picture comes to an end at the Randolph theatre.

"Twelve Cylindered Hit," Says Critic

"The Eternal Magdalene," according to box office reports, is steadily climbing on the success scale. The Goldwyn producers are elated over the returns, it is said, that result in all the cities where the play is being shown.

A critic of the Chicago Herald-Examiner says of the picture:

"It minces no scenes in attacking the Pharisees of today, the holier-than-thou citizens who campaign religiously against the fallen women of their communities.

"Regarding the moral and lesson, you are advised by Judges Cook, Fisher and Jarecki of the Municipal Court and Harry B. Miller, city prosecutor, that they are good, instructive, powerful. From me, however, you are asking only one thing, 'How is it as a picture?'

"It is twelve-cylindered and all of them hit."

Lovely Supports Williams

Miss Louise Lovely will be seen as Earle Williams' leading lady in his newest Vitagraph release, "The Usurper."

It was originally produced on the stage by the late Nat Goodwin and has been handled it is said with the skill that is always apparent in the features produced by director James Young.

First National Signs Talmadge

Six Big Attractions to be Made Within Year with National's Option for Additional Six

CLIMAXING four days of action more swift and thrilling to those involved than the biggest suspense situations ever screened, and in which several of the shrewdest minds in the industry were pitted in a bewildering series of plots and counterplots, First National Exhibitors' Circuit last Saturday night placed its corporate seal beneath the signature of Constance Talmadge on a contract for the distribution of six big attractions to be produced by her within a year. The agreement contains an option in favor of First Natonal for an additional six productions.

The series in which Miss Talmadge is to be starred is to be written and directed by John Emerson and Anita Loos. This combination of talent is characterized by First National officials as "an effort to further increase standards of screen entertainment by obtaining, in the writing and direction of special attractions, ability equal to that of the star."

It was known to exhibitor members of First National, when they assembled in New York on Monday, April 21, that negotiations with Miss Talmadge had been pending for quite a long time.

When the executive session of members began on Wednesday morning, J. D. Williams, manager of the Circuit, was asked to report on the situation regarding the contract.

"There has been a hitch in it," he explained. "Another big distributing company has made an offer equal to ours, and its representatives are using every argument they can conceive to succeed."

After unceasing effort on the part of First National officials, Miss Talmadge was finally signed.

"The combination of Miss Talmadge, John Emerson and Anita Loos is one of the forces that make for bigger and more successful productions," declared Mr. Williams. "First National's chief purpose is to encourage better work by stars and producers. Our exhibitor members know thoroughly the value of greater quality, and they are ready to go more than half way to obtain it. It is the salvation of their businesses as theatre operators."

Miss Talmadge's productions under her contract with First National will be made in eastern studios. Work on the first of the six will be started immediately. It is said that this will be an adaptation of a famous stage play. It is expected to be completed and ready for release early in August, according to present plans.

"Stage Women's" Tenth Picture All Stars

THE entire all-star cast for the tenth Stage Women's War Relief picture, "The Littlest Reason," has just been announced with Galli Curci in the leading role. The other members of the cast in the two-reel drama are: Holbrook Blinn, Jeanne Eagels, Helen MacKellar, Ethel Intropodi, Luis Alberni, Victor Sutherland, John Morris, and Jessie Ralph.

The Stage Women's War Relief pictures are being made at the Estee studios and will be released through the Universal Exchanges. With the exception of Galli Curci, the entire cast of "The Littlest Reason" are now playing in current plays in New York. The remaining two pictures of the series of twelve will be produced shortly but no announcement regarding their cast has been made.

Mme. Galli Curci is cast as "the woman" in this two reel drama and the scenes of the pictures are laid in Greenwich Village. A young artist rich in money but lacking in great talent is looking for a modern Madonna and child. Giving a super party such as is given only in the village he announces his engagement to a beautiful girl after which a theatre party follows.

He first meets "the woman" as the party comes out of the theatre. He later learns that she is the woman with the child that will enable him to paint his masterpiece. But complications set in and the young artist is accused of betraying his financée. Later the womans husband is apprehended as a thief. The young artist explains his predicament and the masterpiece which he has painted, wins a first prize.

Hampton Praises Latest Kerrigan Feature

J. D. Hampton declared that if J. Warren Kerrigan's latest production, "The Best Man," had been built to order for him it could not have proved a better fit for the star of Jesse D. Hampton's productions.

The novel is by Grace L. H. Lutz and it was scenariorized by Arthur F. Statter.

Miss Lois Wilson as the heroine has a role of intense dramatic action. Alfred Whitman, Clyde Benson, R. D. McLean, Bert Appling, Ed Tilton, Frances Raymond, Mary Land, and Fred Montague complete the supporting cast. "The Best Man" is being released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Advertising Aids Urged By Fox

Current Number of William Fox Exhibitors' Bulletin Contains Forty Pages on Exploitation

WHAT is declared to be one of the outstanding developments in the film industry in its later phases is the great increase in service which the producer is giving the exhibitor. In the early days of the business many producers thought their duty ended with the making of indifferent pictures and the sale of these to exhibitors

As men of greater vision entered the business, it is pointed out, they developed the idea that the producer's duty consisted not alone in making good pictures, but in helping the exhibitor to market them to the public

A striking example of this policy is given in the current issue of the William Fox Exhibitors' Bulletin This number of the Bulletin contains a symposium of the views of four editors of trade papers on the general subject "How to Advertise the Picture" The articles were written especially for the Exhibitors' Bulletin, as a part of its aid to exhibitors

The articles were written from the standpoint of service to the exhibitor and contain an abundance of sound advice on principles and methods of exhibitor exploitation of motion pictures. While varied in their treatment of the subject the editors unite in advocacy of live advertising and publicity on the part of exhibitors

Pointing out that up-to-date exhibitors appreciate the importance of good advertising, William A. Johnston says:

"These exhibitors don't need preaching. They want—and appreciate—help and encouragement. And let me say that the trend of thought in the inner councils is to give them more and more aid. The Fox Exhibitors' Bulletin is one such evidence."

William Fox Presents William Farnum in "Wolves of the Night," Directed by J. Gordon Edwards

One of the features of especial interest is an important announcement regarding the activities of William Fox in Europe. This announcement gives details regarding the plans of Mr. Fox to produce pictures on the battlefields of France, as well as information concerning new stars of world wide fame with whom Mr. Fox is negotiating.

The Bulletin, which has forty pages, has a cover printed on buff paper, showing Mr. Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan and Abraham Carlos about to sail from New York on the Aquitania

Pronounces "Crimson Gardenia" Big Success

AN advance showing of Rex Beach's latest picture, "The Crimson Gardenia" at the Goldwyn projection room has convinced Goldwyn executives that this picture will be one of the screen sensations of the spring showing. The picture is scheduled for release May 18.

Unheralded, except as a good picture with strong plot interest, the first showing of the picture at the Goldwyn offices amazed its audience, it is said, by the power of its narrative, the artfulness with which suspense has been sustained to the very last moment, and the beauty and novelty of the settings. Superlatives seem to be customary in picture announcements yet there is no superlative too strong to describe the strength of "The Crimson Gardenia" as a fascinating narrative. In the midst of so many screen releases that depend upon merely exotic atmosphere for their interest, the new Rex Beach picture has almost every great quality that theorists of the screen demand, and in abundance, it is stated. Hugo Ballin's amazing realism in his projection of New Orleans, old Creole houses and all, done of Culver City, is one of the unique successes of art direction.

The production possesses every requirement for great picturization, skillful and subtle interweaving of themes, the finished acting of Owen Moore and Hedda Nova, a steady accumulation of interest to an explosive point, and an ending that in the quality of delicate humor surpasses anything in recent screen history, it is said.

Advance prophesies are always taken with a grain of salt, yet there is no doubt in the judgment of Goldwyn chiefs that the next three months will set "The Crimson Gardenia" in a high place as one of the distinguished pictures of 1919.

Selden Joins Sales Staff of United Pictures

In accordance with J. A. Berst's policy of engaging as far as possible returned service men for suitable vacancies, United Picture Theatres, announces the appointment of Edwin D. Selden as Special Sales Representative.

Mr. Selden was, for two years, personal representative to Louis J. Selznick of the World Film Corporation. He has just returned from abroad, where he served in the Engineering Corps.

Pathe Announces Release of "Great Gamble"

Announcement was made this week by Pathe Exchange, that "The Great Gamble," produced by Western Photoplays, is to be released on August 3, as the serial to follow the current Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," in which Ruth Roland is starred.

The co-stars of "The Great Gamble" are Anne Luther, who heretofore has appeared almost exclusively in feature productions, and Charles Hutchison, the "stunt" man of pictures, whose work in a previous Pathe serial, "Wolves of Kultur," won for him a high place in screendom. The author and director of the production is Joseph A. Golden, director general of Western Photoplays.

Miss Luther is said to be one of the youngest stars in motion pictures.

As an all-round athlete and dare-devil, Mr. Hutchison, it is said, has no equal on the screen.

Prominent in the cast are Richard Neil, who plays the "heavy," William Cavanaugh the well-known character man, Warren Cook, and Billy Moran.

Reports Many Bookings on "The Third Degree"

Vitagraph announces that its big production, "The Third Degree," in which Alice Joyce is starred, has been booked by Rowland and Clark Enterprises to open the new Cameraphone theatre on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh.

Tom Terriss directed "The Third Degree," and Miss Joyce's supporting company includes Gladden James, Anders Randolf (Mrs. De Wolf), Hedda Hopper, L. Rogers Lyton, Herbert Evans, George Backus, J. P. Wade and L. O. McGuire.

A national billboard campaign is being launched by Vitagraph in behalf of "The Third Degree," and the beautiful 24-sheet is expected to be conspicuous on the boards of the best stands clear across the continent.

Brunette Is Injured

Mitchell Lewis' weight, combined with his almost superhuman strength, and a pair of weak hinges on the door of a studio backwoods cabin, were the cause of an accident last week which resulted in a temporary postponement of work on Mr. Lewis' forthcoming Select Picture, "The Gulf Between."

The accident, which involved pretty Fritzi Brunette, Mr. Lewis' leading woman, occurred during the filming of a studio scene.

The business in the scene calls for Mr. Lewis to rush up to a cabin door and fling his entire weight against it. In doing this the hinges snapped and the door fell in pinning Miss Brunette to the floor.

Engages Conway Tearle

Conway Tearle has been engaged as leading man for Florence Reed's third United Picture Theatres, Inc., screen feature to be directed by Frank H. Crane.

Robertson-Cole Announces New Brand

Beginning with First Week in June will Distribute "Superior Pictures"—"Man Who Turned White" to be First of Series—All to be Specials

ROBERTSON-COLE this week announced that beginning with the first of June the organization will inaugurate a new brand which will cover all its biggest productions. This series of attractions will be called "Superior Pictures." As is the case of other Robertson-Cole pictures, the Superior brand will be released through Exhibitors Mutual.

"The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner and made by Jesse D. Hampton, has been announced as the first Superior Picture released. The announcement from the publicity offices describe this production as "a big pulsating photodrama of the ever interesting, mysterious sands which lie down behind the Mediterranean."

Other pictures, which have not yet been announced, are to follow in due time.

Praise It Highly

The Robertson-Cole announcement said: "Superior Pictures will be 'specials' in every sense of this much abused term, and must possess an extraordinary box office value before going under this classification.

"Robertson-Cole is taking its keen judgment on inaugurating the series with 'The Man Who Turned White.' This Warner picture is hailed as one of the most finished products ever sent out of the West, a broad statement but one upon which Robertson-Cole confidently rely.

"After a most exhaustive study of the motion picture situation Robertson-Cole have come to a decision regarding the real merit of 'Special' productions, and with the inauguration of Superior Pictures these views will be put into practice. Any photoplay which is released as a Superior Picture will have to be a 'special' in every respect. And no production will come under the classification of Superior until it has passed the test of rigid perfection Robertson-Cole has arranged for these offerings.

"Superior Pictures will be built around vital topics, prominent players, the best supporting casts and produced by high-class directors. When necessary, vast amounts of money will be spent in obtaining the most elaborate plays, but always the finest production will be given.

"In their study of the field, the Robertson-Cole officials have found that spectacles do not always attain the 'special' class in the eyes of the public. It is the public which must be eventually satisfied, and it is the box office as well as the artistic merit which will be considered by Robertson-Cole in the selection of Superior Pictures.

Tested First

"'The Man Who Turned White' was tentatively selected several weeks ago as the first Superior Picture, but announcement of that fact was withheld until the film had been found up to the Superior standard. Knowing just what Hampton was doing with Warner, the Robertson-Cole officials were supremely confident that 'The Man Who Turned White' would come up to their highest expectations. The same policy in the selection of the first Warner picture will be pursued in the naming of the succeeding Superior Pictures. Robertson-Cole have the final say in the choosing of these productions, and they must meet their standard.

Elinor Field Is One of the Main Points of Interest in "Don't Worry," Released Through Exhibitors Mutual

"No Superior Picture will be announced until it has been definitely selected as such. Robertson-Cole will take no chance on a single failure.
